The Republicans are not going to put a ticket in the field, and I will tell you why. Because by combining with a lot of odds and ends and isms of other political parties in Texas, and throwing aside, for the time being, their own political identity, they hope to accomplish results which as Republicans they know they would be powerless to accomplish. That is all there is about it. Why, this man Hackworth has a brother living at Brenham, a Republican, and has always been a Republican, who is elected regularly to the office of justice of the peace, and he holds the office and discharges the duties of it well, and reputably, and satisfactorily as I am informed.

I say right here, without the fear of successful contradiction, that there is not an honest Republican in Texas who is not as free, as fearless, and as independent as he would be in Masaschusetts or in Kansas or anywhere else. There is not a Republican in Texas who can not live among his Democratic neighbors as pleasantly, if he is an honest man, as he could in Massachusetts with the neighbors and friends of the Senator from Massachusetts.

What the people of the United States need, Mr. President, is to know each other better. I was never so impressed with that conviction as I was when I heard the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, because I respect that Senator; both for his ability and integrity. I do not believe that for his right hand he would have made the statement with reference to Texas that he did make had he known the facts as I and those of us who live in Texas do know them.

Why, Mr. President, we rarely have trouble in Texas at elections or at any time between the races. Remember that we have one hundred and eighty organized counties in Texas. Remember that our territory stretches from east of the Sabine to the Rio Grande, between seven and eight hundred miles, and then from the Panhandle to the Gulf, seven or eight hundred miles more—one hundred and eighty organized counties, and some counties as large as the good State of Delaware or as Rhode Island.

Yet out of all these, with a population from every country under the sun gathered there, all the foreign nations being abundantly represented, and all the States North and South, East and West, abundantly represented, with a population there not homogeneous, a population that has not had time yet to be fused into a homogeneous mass, but which will become homogeneous; the only charges that are brought against the people of Texas for political disorders and disturbances are confined to Fort Bend and Washington, just two counties out of the one hundred and eighty.

Is not Kansas a good State, Mr. President? I say it is. The population of Kansas can not be surpassed for intelligence, for sobriety, for energy, for American push; and yet here but the other day we read of a war there in which a sheriff and five of his deputies were killed by a camp-fire as they slept at night.

Why did you not send an investigating committee there? Ah, Mr. President, they did not send one there, because it would not have paid politically to do it. Murders are committed all over the United States every day, and yet it is reserved for Texas to be persecuted under the forms of law by a Senate which has no jurisdiction over the matter to be inquired into, while all other violations of local law are to be let alone!

Speaking of the race question, Mr. President, where is the Indian? He has gone and is now a mere reminiscence. The red man, the "noble red man," has gone before the advance of the white man. Where is the Chinaman?

Mr. SPOONER. Going. [Laughter.]

Mr. COKE. He has not quite gone, but he is getting away very fast. [Laughter.] He is the brown man. It is reserved for the people of the South to have to stand face to face with the black man and solve the problem of joint government and joint residence, and we are solving it. If you will let us alone we will solve it. It is hard enough to do without outside interference. When let alone it taxes all our powers and demands our highest wisdom. Just let us alone, and we will solve it. We have no trouble except once every four years. All the trouble we have ever had comes from outsiders, who hope to reap political advantage from it. If intermeddlers from the outside who instigate colored men to evil deeds will desist and let us alone, there will be an end of the trouble. Go down to Texas, go into the counties where the whites are in the majority, and you will see the colored people, some Democrats, some Republicans, and some Knights of Labor, all voting their own tickets. There you will see colored men quietly accumulating property, many of them becoming rich and well to do. Everything in the world that is needed for this condition of affairs to exist in every county in Texas, and, I will say, in the entire South, is for the Republicans outside to let them alone, to cease exciting their bad passions and inflaming them against their white neighbors.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator——

Mr. COKE. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator touch upon the solution with reference to the negro? He told us what they had done with the Indian and the Chinaman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to be interrupted.

Mr. COKE. Only wait until I get through, and do not be in too great a hurry.

Mr. BLAIR. I think a speaker always allows a fellow-citizen to put a question to him.

Mr. COKE. I did not intend to be curt or discourteous.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not think the Senator was.

Mr. COKE. I say let us alone and we will solve this problem. Whenever the negroes divide, their votes are sought by both parties, and it is the interest of both parties to see that they have perfect freedom of choice. Keep outside pressure away from them and they will disperse among our population, and you will hear no more of any race troubles. But I tell you, and I say it frankly, the white people of the South and those of their race who come to settle among them, they and their seed will govern that country just as long as time lasts.

Mr. HOAR. Whether they are in the majority or not?

Mr. COKE. They will do it. I will be frank. They will not do it by violence. They are the superior race. They will maintain and protect and defend their civilization, their women, and their children, their race, and their citizenship as long as water runs or grass grows. They will not raise the hand of violence against the black man, because they know they are superior in every element of manhood, of humanity, and of civilization to him and that he can not dominate them.

The idea that it was the protective tariff and not the race issue which produced the disorders in Texas advanced by the Senator from Massachusetts ought to be patented. It belongs to him; it is original. I say if that Senator would once travel among our people he would never advance it again.

Mr. HOAR. Which is it, the race issue or the protective tariff? I understood the Senator himself to say just now that it was not——

Mr. COKE. I say it is not the protective tariff.

Mr. HOAR. Is it the race issue?

Mr. COKE. Yes; that is exactly what I do say.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator to say several times that it was simply an ebulition of violence or murder, such as has occurred in every county and every State in the Union. The race issue is not quite so universal.

Mr. COKE. Certainly, I said that there were cases of violence and of murder in the South, and that there were cases of violence and murder in all the States, and that when the South is being judged for the violence and murder committed within her borders it should be placed to her credit that they are the only people in the world who are compelled to live with an alien race of another color, while a lot of conscienceless politicians are constantly prodding the negroes to warfare with and alienation from the whites. I said the South ought to be credited with that fact in determining whether she is better or worse than the neighboring States of the North and West.

Mr. President, just let us manage our local affairs. If you do that, we will present you magnificent results in a very few years. We will show you a contented black population, educated, because the negroes are receiving just as much school money in proportion to population as the whites, I know, in Texas, and I believe in all the other States of the South. They are becoming more intelligent. You can not find a little negro that high in Texas [indicating about four feet] who can not read and write. That is true; and we are opposed to the Blair educational bill, besides.

Mr. BLAIR. That is meant principally for the white children.

Mr. COKE. I say, if you will let us alone, let our free schools do their perfect work, let human nature have its play, withdraw the outside pressure which binds the blacks together in a solid body against the whites, and let them disperse and mingle among the balance of the population, we will show you grand results in a very few years.

Mr. President, I am at a loss to know why it is that the Senator from New York puts on an extra coat of war paint whenever the name of Texas is called. [Laughter.] Let him go to his great merchants in the city of New York, let him go to the railroad nabobs, to all the chief moneyed and commercial men of New York and ask them what about Texas. They will tell him that Texas has to-day not less than two and a half million of population, that she has territory for five magnificent States. They will tell him that Texas swells the balance of trade in favor of the United States with a million and a quarter bales of cotton. They will tell him that Texas runs neck and neck and a nose ahead of Ohio and California in her product of wool. They will tell him that your hungry millions up East are fed from the plentiful larder of Texas, which holds within her borders one-seventh of the cattle of all the United States. They will tell him that of all the States the trade and commerce of Texas is the greatest and most valuable now, with infinite possibilities for the future.

And yet the Senator from New York, unmindful of the interests of his people, would tomahawk Texas on all occasions. Mr. President, Texas, with her imperial domain, her 8,000 miles of railroad, being increased at the rate of 1,000 miles annually, and her income of $175,000,000 annually from exported products, and increasing every year, and her school fund of 30,000,000 acres of land and $8,000,000 of interest-bearing securities, can afford to smile at the efforts at her disparagement.

Mr. President, I have shown that this pretense of lawlessness in Texas is a fraud and a sham, gotten up for political purposes. I have shown you that the bloodshed in Washington County was first caused by Republican negroes.

The Senator from Wisconsin stated that Bolton ought to have been shot. The testimony is that Bolton was there without arms, alone, without disguise, simply, his father being a candidate for one of the county offices, to inquire how the vote stood, and when the door was opened was shot and fell dead on the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. At night.

Mr. COKE. At 11 o'clock at night. No man was with him, according to the testimony, for no man saw anybody with him. From that cause sprang the hanging of the three negroes by the masked mob. They were taken out of the jail at Brenham, when they had been brought back by the authorities under the impression that the danger was past.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. COKE. No, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Very well, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas does not yield.

Mr. TELLER. It is a right he has. If I had made that statement I should not yield either, if I were in the Senator's place.

Mr. COKE. I refer to the testimony, whenever your close corporation committee will let it out and let it be printed. I assert here that I state the truth, and I assert that any other statement of the bulk and weight of that testimony is a misstatement and a perversion of it.

Mr. TELLER. That is the Senator's judgment?

Mr. COKE. Yes; I say that is my judgment.

Mr. EVARTS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COKE. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. EVARTS. I have no war paint on, but——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has to protect the rights of the Senator on the floor. The Senator from Texas declines to be interrupted.

Mr. COKE. I repeat, Mr. President, because I wish to emphasize these facts, that Bolton was murdered in cold blood, and that the authorities arrested the negroes who committed the murder and took them to Brenham. They feared the negroes would be taken out of jail and dealt with violently. They took all of them to Houston, about 80 miles off, except one, and that one, the man who really killed Bolton, they took up to Cameron, in Milam County, about 60 miles distant, and he is in jail in Cameron now, unless he has been tried since. Of those who were brought back from Houston under the impression that the feeling had subsided, three were taken out of jail and hung, not in order to suppress their testimony, because there were five of them, and the testimony of the other two would have been just as good as that of the three who were hung, but they were hanged because of the violent feeling engendered by the murder of Bolton.

Mr. BUTLER. Who was a white man and a Democrat.

Mr. COKE. Bolton was a white man and a Democrat. As to the Fort Bend case, I did not know that this debate was coming up to-day or I would have had some papers here to submit to the Senate. There they called to the door and killed Colonel Shamblin; and tacked a card to his gate-post stating that they had killed him because he was a Democrat and had the audacity to try to prevail on some colored people to vote the Democratic ticket. Nothing was done because nobody could find the assassin.

Some two or three weeks after that another leading Democrat was shot in the dark. He was not killed, but he is crippled for life and badly wounded, and may die yet. Then it was that the people bethought themselves, How long must this thing last? What shall we do? Who will be the next? They met together. They did not hang anybody, but they said to certain gentlemen whom they had good reasons strongly to suspect, "Now, it will be good for you to absent yourselves from here," and they did absent themselves.

Mr. TELLER. Of course.

Mr. COKE. Yes, they did, in a hurry.

Holt, who was assassinated at Brenham, was an active, aggressive, thoroughgoing Democrat. I was amused at the effort of the Senator from New York to identify him with the Mugwumps. Holt had nothing of the Mugwump in him.

Mr. EVARTS. I did not use the word "Mugwump," or say anything about it.

Mr. COKE. No, the Senator did not.

Mr. EVARTS. Not a word.

Mr. COKE. But the Senator did use language that was equal to that.

Mr. EVARTS. What was it?

Mr. COKE. The Senator said that Mr. Hoffman was a Republican and running on the Democratic ticket, and that Mr. Holt was co-operating with him and was just such a man as Hoffman was in that regard.

Mr. EVARTS. That I said.

Mr. COKE. Well, the Senator was wrong. The Senator from New York inadvertently and without intending it at all told that which was not true when he said it. Holt was a Democrat, but not a candidate for any office, as I understand. Hoffman was running on the Democratic ticket for county treasurer. Yet when the assassin fires and kills both of them it is paraded here as a Democratic outrage. That is all there is about that.

No, Mr. President, you may take these Texas cases and sift them and inquire into them; I shall interpose no objection. Get all the testimony here you can, and nothing derogatory to the people of Texas, to the people of Washington County, to the people of Fort Bend County, will be developed by the investigation. There was one ballot-box captured by three masked men.

Mr. MORGAN. Who were they?

Mr. COKE. I do not know who they were. Nobody else knows who they were. The Senators on the other side say that the governor ought to have offered a reward. Judge McFarland, the Republican judge and his Republican district attorney ought to have called on the governor to offer a reward, which they never did. They ought to have ferreted out this transaction and instructed the governor as to the facts of it, which they never did that I have ever heard of.

The killing of Bolton and the hanging of these negroes transpired last November a year ago.

Mr. TELLER. In 1886.

Mr. COKE. Two years ago this coming November.

Mr. TELLER. The statute has not run out.

Mr. COKE. The witnesses were examined many months ago. No report has been made. They have been keeping it for two years as a rich development to be sprung upon the country at this time for campaign purposes.

Mr. BLAIR. Why have they not hung his murderer, who is now, as you say, in jail?

Mr. COKE. They may have done so, for aught I know. I have not heard from him lately.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator said several times that he was in jail.

Mr. COKE. He was in the jail of Milam County, Texas, six months after the other three were taken out of the jail and hung at Brenham.

These are the facts, Mr. President, as I understand them. This case has for two years been saved for this occasion. They have had it on ice. They bring it out now for the first time for active service and use, and coupled with it the Senator from Massachusetts undertakes to instruct the Senate that these disorders proceed, not from race prejudice or antagonism, but that the tariff issue is at the bottom of them.

Mr. HOAR. With Democratic ascendancy.

Mr. COKE. I will just say to the Senator that if there is any one thing in this world the average Texan would go any number of miles out of his way to kick and kill and destroy it is a protective tariff.

Mr. HOAR. Is that murder?

Mr. COKE. It may be. That is the kind of murder they will commit if you give them a chance.

I repeat, Mr. President, that the ballot-box nowhere in the world gives a freer or truer expression than in Texas, and all testimony to the contrary is false and utterly unworthy of belief, and when the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is presented to the Senate, and the Senate is permitted to see the testimony which has been taken, the truth of this averment will abundantly appear. I am more than willing to invoke the honest judgment of the country upon it, satisfied that the vindication of the people of Texas must result from a fair consideration of it. I have nothing further to say.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11101) to include Sapelo Sound, Sapelo River, and Sapelo Island, in the Brunswick collection district in the State of Georgia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6514) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STONE of Kentucky, Mr. PENINGTON, and Mr. CROUSE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1959) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 11101) to include Sapelo Sound, Sapelo River, and Sapelo Island in the Brunswick collection district in the State of Georgia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 13, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, September 12, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MARGARET HEINTZELMAN.

The SPEAKER. I will lay before the House the bill (S. 2726) granting a pension to Margaret Heintzelman, with House amendment, disagreed to by the Senate. If there be no objection, the House will insist on the amendment and agree to the conference requested.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONFEREES APPOINTED.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House on Senate bill 2726, granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman, Mr. CHIPMAN, Mr. THOMPSON of California, and Mr. THOMPSON of Ohio.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY TREASURY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6514) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, passed by the Senate with amendments.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference requested.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VANDEVER. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 2) for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California, and discharge the Committee of the Whole House from its further consideration, and that it be considered at this time.

The bill was read at length for information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DUNN. I ask the gentleman from California what Indians this bill is intended to apply to? Those in California?

Mr. VANDEVER. It is intended to apply to the Mission Indians in Southern California.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to put on record here a short statement in reference to that matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DUNN. I have had occasion to look into the question of the tenure by which the Village Indians and Mission Indians in California hold their titles. I am perfectly satisfied that the law is that the Pueblo or Village Indians are entitled to have a deed in fee-simple to the original grants made to them by either the Spanish or the Mexican Governments. The Mission Indians in many cases were located or made superincumbent upon the Village grants; they were extended merely for mission purposes. The mission lands were somewhat analagous to our own Indian reservations, and could be what the Mexican Government calls "secularized," that is, when they ceased to be used for mission purposes they could be restored to the public domain. But the title of the Pueblo or Village Indians to the grant is as perfect a title in law and in fact as any other grants of the Mexican or Spanish Government; and any attempt in this bill or any other bill to take from them their original grants and give them back a part of it completes a robbery which the California commission failed to complete under the law of 1854; and I object to this bill.

Mr. VANDEVER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection, because it does not affect the Village Indians at all in the remotest degree.

Mr. DUNN. If I understood the reading of the bill, it proposes to take possession of all grants of Village and Mission Indians, and to give them enough ground to answer their purposes.

Mr. VANDEVER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. It does not attempt to take the Pueblo lands at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNN. It is a complicated question that will have to be determined in the future, and it is one of great and grave importance, as it affects the rights of a class of people who are absolutely helpless; and I object.

Mr. VANDEVER. There is no possible chance for litigation under this act.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BACON, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. CANNON. I demand the regular order.

CHARGES IN CONNECTION WITH LIBRARY BUILDING.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RICE], chairman of the select committee appointed to make an investigation under a recent order of the House, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee of investigation, appointed by the Speaker in pursuance of the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on September 4, have leave to sit during the sessions of the House, be authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer and a messenger, and that the expenses of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

MILITARY STORES FOR MONTANA MILITIA.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] yields to me to ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1959) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the militia.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana such additional arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster's stores, and camp equipage as may be required to fully arm and equip the present regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia of said Territory, consisting of seven general staff officers and the officers and men of one regiment of eight companies of infantry, two companies of cavalry, and one battery of artillery: Provided, That nothing herein shall affect the appointment hereafter, to said Territory, of arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster's stores, and camp equipage, under existing laws and regulations: And provided further, That the military stores to be issued hereunder shall remain the property of the United States, and said governor shall be chargeable therewith as now provided by law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORNEY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports, unless some privileged matter be called up.

Mr. FORNEY. I move to dispense with the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary to make that motion if the gentleman desires to call up a privileged report.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. Then I do call up the privileged report which was under consideration when the House adjourned, the report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, and upon that the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FORNEY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I believe the demand for the yeas and nays was made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], whom I do not see in his seat at this moment. I ask now that by unanimous consent, the order for the yeas and nays be vacated. I make this request because it is manifest that there is not a quorum present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question then is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], offered as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. RYAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RYAN. A vote was taken in the usual way, and I suppose the RECORD shows what that vote was. Later a yea-and-nay vote was ordered, and I desire to know whether another division is now in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, because the subsequent order of the House directing the yeas and nays to be taken was a vacating of the vote which had been taken before.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, my amendment appears in the RECORD this morning in a form so unsatisfactory that I ask unanimous consent to have it read again.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the money appropriated for topographical surveys for the present fiscal year, or any part thereof, may be employed by the Director of the Geological Survey, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and for the purpose of ascertaining the feasibility of establishing reservoirs of water in the arid regions of country west of the one hundredth meridian, with a view to a system of irrigation of the arid region; and the Director of the Geological Survey is directed to report to Congress at as early a period as is practicable the results of such inquiries and all the information he may possess touching the irrigation of said lands: Provided further, That during the pendency of measures now before Congress affecting the public lands, the entry of lands known and designated as desert lands shall be suspended; but this provision shall not prevent the entry of such lands under the homestead law, except that section 2301 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to such entries. And the sum of $250,000 proposed by the amendment is hereby stricken out.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. If I caught the reading of the gentleman's amendment as it was offered yesterday, that part which provides for striking out the $250,000 was not included in it; and, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana himself, his amendment was first intended to be a substitute for the Senate amendment as it was proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman yield for an explanation?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. SYMES. By unanimous consent it was agreed that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] might strike that out, upon the understanding that no point should be made as to a quorum, and that the yeas and nays should not be demanded.

Mr. TAULBEE. Was it understood that the gentleman from Indiana should be permitted to include in his amendment the provision to strike out——

Mr. SYMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not know that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the modification was made by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAULBEE. I was not aware of that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to correct a misapprehension of the gentleman from Colorado. The consent to the modification was not given in consideration of the agreement not to call the yeas and nays, because the gentleman from Georgia expressly declined to accept that proposition.

Mr. RYAN. That is immaterial.

Mr. SYMES. The gentleman from Georgia did demand the yeas and nays; but other gentlemen (the gentleman from Indiana included) agreed that if this modification were permitted the call for the yeas and nays should be rescinded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think that matter immaterial.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the sum of $250,000 has already been stricken from the Senate amendment by a vote of the House, and $100,000 inserted, on motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The consent was that the gentleman from Indiana might modify his amendment so as to propose to strike out all appropriation.

Mr. RYAN. That is to say, consent was given that the gentleman from Indiana might modify his amendment so as to propose to strike out all appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; and $250,000 having been the sum named originally in the Senate amendment, the language in my substitute refers to that, although the Senate amendment has since been amended.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understood the Chair to state that the amount named in the Senate amendment was stricken out by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It was stricken out by a vote of the House, on motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. SYMES. And $100,000 inserted.

The SPEAKER. And $100,000 inserted in lieu of $250,000.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then the privilege granted by unanimous consent to the gentleman from Indiana was that he might modify his amendment so as to strike out the $100,000.

Mr. SYMES. No; let me explain; the gentleman from Kentucky does not understand. After the House had adopted practically the Senate amendment, except that the amount had been fixed at $100,000, the gentleman from Indiana was then allowed by unanimous consent to patch up his substitute and have a vote upon it, in order that business might not be interrupted by the lack of a quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Colorado did not succeed in "patching up" his amendment.

Mr. SYMES. Our amendment did not need any "patching up;" the House adopted it by a three-fourths majority.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute of Mr. HOLMAN, there were—ayes 39, noes 61.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to have tellers on this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for tellers. As no quorum has voted, tellers will be considered as ordered; and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. SYMES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I was informed just as I entered the Hall that it had been agreed a quroum would not be demanded this morning on this vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has not demanded a quorum, but has asked for tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 65.

So Mr. HOLMAN'S substitute was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same with the amendment proposed by him.

The question was determined in the affirmative—ayes 59, noes 38.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 121: After the words "one hundred," in line 12, page 66, insert the words "and two;" so as to make the paragraph read as follows: "For the purchase of necessary books for the Library, and the payment for the transmission of public documents through the Smithsonian exchange, $5,000; in all, $402,000."

Mr. FORNEY. It is desirable in this case to ascertain the proper amount to be appropriated, a matter which can be arranged hereafter. I move that the House insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment of the Senate.

Amendment 127: Before the word "education," in line 22, page 68, insert "industrial;" so as to read:

"For the industrial education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska," etc.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment of the Senate, as follows:

Amendment 128: Strike out "25" and insert "50;" so that under the heading of "Education in Alaska" it will read "$50,000."

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to that amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. There are seventeen of these amendments of the Senate, and it would facilitate business if those upon which a separate vote may be desired should be indicated, and the vote taken in gross upon the others.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to all the remaining amendments, excepting the one in reference to the zoological garden, upon which a separate vote is asked.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I now move that the House concur in the two hundred and fifty-sixth amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. For the establishment of a zoological park in the District of Columbia, $200,000, to be expended under and in accordance with the provisions following, that is to say:

That, in order to establish a zoological park in the District of Columbia, for the advancement of science and the instruction and recreation of the people, a commission shall be constituted, composed of three persons, namely: The Secretary of the Interior, the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, which shall be known and designated as the commission for the establishment of a zoological park.

That the said commission is hereby authorized and directed to make an inspection of the country along Rock Creek, beginning at the point on that creek where the Woodley road crosses said creek, and extending upward along its course to where said creek is crossed by the Klingle road, and to select from that district of country such a tract of land, of not less than 100 acres, which shall include a section of the creek, as said commission shall deem to be suitable and appropriate for a zoological park.

That the said commission shall cause to be made a careful map of said zoological park, showing the location, quantity, and character of each parcel of private property to be taken for such purpose, with the names of the respective owners inscribed thereon, and the said map shall be filed and recorded in the public records of the District of Columbia; and from and after that date the several tracts and parcels of land embraced in such zoological park shall be held as condemned for public uses, subject to the payment of just compensation, to be determined by the said commission and approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That such compensation be accepted by the owner or owners of the several parcels of land.

That if the said commission shall be unable to purchase any portion of the land so selected and condemned within thirty days after such condemnation, by agreement with the respective owners, at the price approved by the President of the United States, it shall, at the expiration of such period of thirty days, make application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, by petition, at a general or special term, for an assessment of the value of such land, and said petition shall contain a particular description of the property selected and condemned, with the name of the owner or owners thereof, and his, her, or their residences, as far as the same can be ascertained, together with a copy of the recorded map of the park; and the said court is hereby authorized and required, upon such application, without delay, to notify the owners and occupants of the land and to ascertain and assess the value of the land so selected and condemned by appointing three commissioners to appraise the value or values thereof, and to return the appraisement to the court; and when the values of such land are thus ascertained, said values shall be paid to the owner or owners, and the United States shall be deemed to have a valid title to said lands.

That when the said commission shall have obtained the land for a zoological park, as herein provided, it shall have power to lay out the same as a park and to erect such building or buildings thereon as may be necessary for the scientific purposes to which the park is dedicated and proper for the custody, care, and exhibition of a collection of animals.

That when the said commission shall have established a zoological park in the District of Columbia under the provisions of this section, by acquiring the necessary lands and by laying out the same as a park and by the erection of the necessary buildings thereupon, it shall be the duty of said commission to turn over the said zoological park, with all its buildings and appurtenances, to the custody and care of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; and when such transfer of the custody and care of the zoological park shall be made, the duties of said commission shall cease and its existence terminate.

That when the said commission shall tender to the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution the care and custody of the zoological park provided for in this section, the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution are hereby authorized to assume the care and custody of the same; and the said Regents of the Smithsonian Institution are hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations for the management of the park, and of the property, appurtenances, and collections of the park as they may deem necessary and wise to secure the use of the same for the advancement of science and the instruction and recreation of the people.

That the said commission is hereby authorized to call upon the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey or the Director of the Geological Survey to make such surveys as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this section; and the said officers are hereby authorized and required to make such surveys under the direction of said commission.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to that amendment. Before the gentleman from Minnesota commences I should like to know how much time is proposed to be taken up in debate? I am willing to consent to an hour's debate [cries of "No!"], and that each side shall have thirty minutes.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FORAN] how long a time he wants?

Mr. FORAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. NELSON. Very well, then; I am willing to agree to the debate being limited to one hour, to be equally divided—thirty minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask, by unanimous consent, to print in the RECORD a paper prepared on this subject.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not object to the proposition to limit the debate, but I ask leave to have read the accompanying paper, prepared at my request. My friend, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], whose enforced absence from this city by reason of sickness, took great interest in this project, and this, as well as other reasons, induced me to look into it; and that the House may have the benefit of this paper, I put it into the RECORD.

The paper indicated is as follows:

OBJECTS.

The object of the zoological park for which this Senate amendment provides is declared to be "the advancement of science, and the instruction and recreation of the people." Probably no one will deny that the advancement of science and the instruction of the people are objects for the support of which every enlightened government is in duty bound to provide. Every zoological garden or park is in the strictest sense an educational institution of a high order, the same as is every museum of science, art, or industry, every marine laboratory and aquarium, and every botanic garden; and one may also add without fear of contradiction every public library.

Although the United States is to-day perhaps the wealthiest nation on the earth, and the most prosperous, in comparison with all the nations of Europe, almost without exception, we are actually poor in such institutions as those mentioned above. True, we have in some ways made a good beginning, as for instance in the National Museum, the National Library, and a few other similar institutions.

But although we have made a good beginning in the higher educational institutions—those which must be established and maintained by national aid everywhere—the public is clamorous for more, and, what is more, the public is willing and even anxious to pay for what it asks.

Just as breech-loading fire-arms of precision have been invented by the score and manufactured by the hundred thousand, so have the living creatures of our fields and forests disappeared, until now he who would seek to study or even to see representatives of what were once our commonest quadrupeds and birds must seek them either in museums or zoological gardens. With a fauna that is almost unsurpassed in richness and variety of forms, and boundless resources of every kind, the United States to-day is without a zoological garden, or even the semblance of one. With our quadrupeds and birds both great and small being rapidly swept out of existence, we have as yet taken no steps whatever to preserve a good collection of living specimens for the advancement of science and the instruction of the people.

NEED.

It surely is unnecessary to urge the great desirability and even the necessity that exists for the immediate establishment of such an institution as that contemplated in this Senate amendment; but it is possible that many members of this House, who have been engrossed in other questions of public importance, have not until recently had their attention called to this matter, and it may be as well to briefly direct attention to the reasons for urgency in the consideration of this measure. In the first place, many specimens of our most important and conspicuous North American quadrupeds are very rapidly approaching extermination. So far as his existence in the wild state is concerned, the great American bison, the grandest and once the most valuable ruminant on the earth, is already considered by naturalists as an extinct animal.

In the whole of the British possessions not a single wild buffalo remains. In the whole of the United States, where it is estimated between eight and ten millions existed as late as the building of the Union Pacific Railroad in 1868, only twenty short years ago, there exist to-day not over one hundred and twenty-five buffaloes in a wild state. Of these, fifty head, or less, are in Northern Texas, and will all be slaughtered by hunters next fall and winter. The remaining seventy-five head are in the Yellowstone Park, but every year a number of head wander out on the north and west, and are promptly killed by the hunters who eagerly watch for them. Six months ago the Government had not a live buffalo anywhere in its possession, nor had any means been taken to provide against the total extermination of the species. It is true that various private parties own captive buffaloes, but the species is in danger of being lost through cross-breeding with domestic cattle.

The naturalists of this country, and even of England, declare that it is the duty of the National Government to secure a herd of American bison, and preserve it under the best conditions, not only for the public of to-day, but for future generations. But for the wise forethought of the Czar of Russia, exercised many years ago in a similar direction toward the last representatives of the European bison, or aurochs, that species would have been utterly exterminated long ago. Science and the public demand that the United States Government should do as well by the last representatives of our most characteristic quadruped. Three months ago a New York patron of science, Mr. E. G. Blackford, purchased a pair of buffaloes in Nebraska and presented them to the National Museum, where they may be seen to-day—the only living representatives of the species in the possession of the Government. But instead of two only we should have a herd of at least twenty head.

It has been predicted by those who are in possession of all the facts that within five years the rare and really wonderful Rocky Mountain goat will also be totally extinct in the United States. At the Cincinnati exposition, in the Smithsonian exhibit, there are now displayed seventy skins of the mountain goat, which were brought into Denver and sold for the paltry sum of 50 cents apiece. And yet this animal exists in so few localities and is really so scarce in numbers that only the largest scientific museums in this country and Europe have even stuffed skins.

American naturalists and sportsmen assure us that the elk, moose, antelope, caribou, black-tailed deer, grizzly bear, wolf, beaver, otter, wolverine, and many other large quadrupeds that could be named if time permitted are rapidly approaching extermination. Railroads are being built everywhere, and sportsmen now go everywhere in pursuit of every living thing that is large enough to shoot with a gun or catch with a hook. If we are ever going to bring together a national collection of living creatnres to illustrate the animal life of our forests, fields, and waters, it must be done now. We are permitting all these great animals to be exterminated, just as we permitted the extermination of the buffalo, and if we take no steps to preserve living examples of them—at least in a zoological garden—in the eyes of science, of the public, and the world we will be inexcusable.

THE PLAN.

In order to hasten the establishment of a national zoological garden, and to make it immediately possible, three eminent persons, a distinguished Senator from the State which I have the honor in part to represent, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and the Director of the United States Geological Survey, assisted by the judgment of a practical naturalist whose whole life has been spent among animals—these gentlemen, I say, have selected a spot and formulated a plan for the establishment of a zoological park or garden in the District of Columbia. That plan, in the form of this amendment, comes to us from the Senate with the unanimous approval of the Senate itself, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and also the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It contemplates the appropriation of $200,000 for the purchase of a site of not less than 100 acres, lying in a certain region, the nature of which most of the members of the House are already acquainted with, and the balance of $50,000 or $75,000 that will remain after the purchase of the 120 acres desired is to be devoted to improvements. The amendment provides that the purchase of the site and the making of the improvements shall be under the direction of a commission composed of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and the president of the Board of District Commissioners. When the park establishment is complete, it is to be turned over by the commissioners to the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, who are empowered to receive it and assume control of it.

THE LOCATION AND COST.

It is declared by those whose judgment in such matters is worthy of acceptance, that the site selected on Rock Creek, between the crossing of Woodley road and the Klingle road, is incomparably the best that could be found within a radius of 5 miles of the city of Washington, and by its natural features is magnificently adapted to the purpose in view. It has features of beauty and utility possessed by no similar institution in the world. The abundance of water in the stream, and the course of the stream itself, are worth more than $100,000 to any such an institution. The picturesque features of valley, hill, slope, and cliff are unrivaled. A large portion of the tract is covered with a fine growth of virgin forest, which affords an abundance of shade, and the drainage is perfect.

The maximum estimate of the cost of the site of 121 acres is $142,000, but there is good ground for the belief that this estimate is too high, and that no board of appraisement could reasonably consider the whole tract worth more than an average of $1,000 per acre, or $121,000. By many even that is regarded too high an estimate. The ground is owned by seven different parties, but the largest portion of the site desired, 55 acres of the Evans estate, has never been in the market. The ground lies sufficiently near the city to render the garden easy of access, which is a very important point. The London Zoo lies in the heart of London, and no one will deny that an accessible location is a matter of prime importance. This site was not chosen until all the Government reservations around Washington had been carefully examined, from the Arlington Cemetery around to the Eastern Branch of the Potomac.

The Potomac flats were fully considered, but it was believed that while it would be almost impossible to make so low a piece of land a suitable habitation for mountain-loving animals, it would also cost four times as much to make it habitable at all as it would cost to purchase the site on Rock Creek. A zoological garden must have dry knolls and well-drained slopes to make it even habitable for wild beasts in rainy weather. It was decided that it would be a serious and costly mistake to locate the gardens on the flats, even though the ground cost nothing in purchase-money. The site on Rock Creek is to-day, without the expenditure of a single dollar, a beautiful and picturesque park, with features of loveliness for which the city of New York would gladly pay $1,000,000 were it possible to place them in Central Park by the expenditure of money.

It is not too much to assert that the character of the three men who have proposed the plan makes the plan itself stand, like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion. Not one of the promoters of the plan owns a dollar's worth of property anywhere in that region, nor do any of them expect to own any there. It is the sincere conviction of the distinguished Senator who introduced this measure, and of the other Senators who have by every means in their power facilitated its passage thus far, that it would be a boon to the public, not only of this city but of the whole United States as well, to secure that beautiful spot to the people forever, and establish there a great national zoological garden to instruct not only the millions of the present but also the millions which will come after us.

COLLECTIONS.

It has been proven conclusively by the records of the Department of Living Animals, lately established by the National Museum, that an institution of this kind could and would acquire fully three-quarters of all its collections of American animals by donation. This has actually been the experience of that Department during the eight months of its existence. It has made thirty purchases and received one hundred and fourteen gifts, and the cash value of the gifts is declared to be six times as great as the value of all the specimens purchased. As has been proven by the receipt of rare and valuable gifts of live animals from Texas, Kentucky, New York, Alabama, Nebraska, Montana, and Utah, to say nothing of the city of Washington, Virginia, and Maryland, the people of the United States will take unbounded pride in such an institution as it is proposed to establish. Gifts will come pouring in from every direction the moment it is known that a place has been provided for them, that they will be thankfully received, carefully and comfortably cared for, and exhibited under the name of the donor.

It is in just this way that all such national collections are kept up. To-day the figures show that the Philadelphia Zoological Garden receives nearly three-fourths of its accessions as gifts. Already the United States Consul at Maracaibo, Venezuela, has written to the Secretary of State and offered to send jaguars, pumas, monkeys, and other objects innumerable to the national zoological garden which he hears is to be established here. Can it be doubted that nearly all our consuls would take pride in doing the same? Can it be doubted that any member's constituents would rejoice at the establishment here of such a source of national pride, which he feels is free to him and his children forever, because it is partly his own? No one need fear that any one will find fault with Congress if it appropriates this money. The newspapers of the country, from Boston to New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, and even far away San Francisco say in so many words, "Give us a National Zoo! Give it to us before all our great game animals are exterminated."

The entire public is certainly behind the measure. There is no opposition to it in any quarter. The Smithsonian has been urged to further the end sought by this amendment. The plan challenges the closest scrutiny and invites criticism, for to know the details of the plan and the public need for this institution is to become an advocate of it. Every great nation on the earth, excepting this, has its national zoological garden, for the advancement of science and the instruction of the people. Like the collections of the National Museum, the people, no matter how ignorant of natural history, will feel it is for them, and they will support it accordingly. Under the management provided for in this amendment, no man who votes for this amendment will ever regret it. We have lost too much time already in the prosecution of this enterprise; let us delay no longer, but begin at once to build up the grandest collection of American quadrupeds, birds, and reptiles on the face of the earth.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to enter upon any extended discussion of this matter. I think on its face it will commend itself to the favorable consideration of every member of the legislative department of so great a country as that of the United States. This city, sir, ought to be something more than a mere political center, something more than a mere gathering-place for statesmen and politicians. The people coming from every part of the country expect at the national capital to see something else than to come into these galleries and look down upon members of Congress to see us perform our duties in a listless and perfunctory manner, as we often do. This city ought to be not only the political center, but it ought to be the great art and educational center toward which the attention of our people should be directed.

The people of this country, Mr. Speaker, are not endowed with the little and mean spirit some persons suppose. Amongst the great institutions we have established in this city, which are now in successful operation, are the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum.

I venture to say there is not a man or woman who comes to this capital throughout the year who does not visit those institutions to examine carefully the specimens and study the object lessons there presented, and who does not go away satisfied and content that the Government has established those institutions, and who does not cheerfully acquiesce in the taxation necessary to supply the money to carry them on. All great governments have recognized the fact that such scientific establishments as the National Museum and the Smithsonian Institution and a zoological garden are well calculated to train and educate the people and to cement the nation into one harmonious, intellectual whole.

All great countries on the face of the globe have these zoological gardens or institutions of a similar character established in some form or other. There is scarcely one—indeed, I doubt if there is one—that has not already made a beginning in this direction except the United States of America. And now, Mr. Speaker, when we have an abundance of money in our national Treasury, when the country is so rich, powerful, and prosperous, can there be any valid reason assigned why we should not inaugurate this establishment, this great scientific instructor that all nations have the benefit of to a greater or a less extent? Shall we, claiming a higher grade of civilization than many of the other nations of the world, be the only one which is to deprive its people of the lessons to be taught and the education to be obtained from such an establishment as a zoological garden?

In addition to this there is another consideration which is pressing upon us at this moment, and which ought to make us anxious to make a beginning in this direction, and it is the fact that many of the unique and peculiar zoological specimens which were once common to this country are fast passing away and very few of them now remain. The time will not be far distant when many species of animals which once existed in vast herds on this continent will be entirely extinct. Let us begin and preserve a few specimens before all are gone. But a dozen years ago I could purchase buffalo robes cheaper at my village home in Minnesota than I could purchase calfskins, while now the buffalo is almost a thing of the past in America; and what is the case with that animal is also the case with a great many other specimens which once roamed this country.

Now is the time to gather up the remains of our animals and concentrate them here, where they can be properly cared for, and become a scientific link between our past and present. It is now or never.

Mr. Speaker, I have looked into this matter further, and I find that the proposition is to establish this park on that beautiful little creek in the northwest section of the city known as "Rock Creek," and to take about 120 acres of land for the purpose of this garden. I am satisfied from what I have been able to learn on a personal examination of the matter, for I have taken particular pains to look into it, that there is no real-estate job or speculation connected with it. On the contrary, those people now owning real estate in that immediate neighborhood are averse, as I am informed, to the establishment of a zoological garden in their midst.

It is proposed to appropriate about $140,000 to secure the site, and about $50,000 for the preliminary plant and a year's operating expenses.

Mr. PAYSON. I would like to ask the gentleman where he finds that in the bill, or where he finds any limit to the amount of land which is to be acquired? There is no limit whatever on it.

Mr. NELSON. The limitation is on the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes; but not as to the quantity of land that may be acquired. The bill does not limit them and does not specify the lands.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly not. The bill does not go on and describe the lands, because this tract is composed of a multitude of little tracts varying from 6 to 20 acres in extent. They have to secure these several tracts in order to get the site.

Mr. PAYSON. But my point is this: That this bill provides for an unlimited acquisition of lands in that region, and the minimum amount is fixed in the amendment, which is to be not less than 100 acres, but as much more as these gentlemen choose to incorporate into the tract. Now, if it is to be adopted at all, there ought to be some limit.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that that is a pure matter of detail, and if he thinks that there is anything in this which is susceptible of a misconstruction it can be covered by a suitable and proper amendment, which I am perfectly willing to accede to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The amount fixed in the Senate amendment is 100 acres.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; and so far as I know the gentlemen with whom I have conversed, and I may say, indeed, about the only gentleman I have talked with is a man who is interested in this from a purely scientific standpoint—I refer to Mr. Hornaday, of the Smithsonian Institution—informs me that all that is contemplated and all that is desired is 121 acres. It has nothing of the element of speculation about it. It is to establish a zoological garden for the benefit of the great body of our people who visit this city, and for no other purpose.

Now, by establishing the institution, sir, in this manner, we will make a beginning; and knowing what our experience has been in reference to the Smithsonian Institution, we are safe in saying that a large number of valuable specimens which we are likely to acquire in the future will be given us as a free gift whenever we have the place to put them and take care of them. I urge every gentleman in this Chamber, no matter what his politics may be, as he looks upon the greatness of this country and regards its abilities and resources, vast and unparalleled as they are, under all these circumstances, to join with me to aid in establishing this institution here, and thereby place us on a par with other great countries of the world, and in this manner do what intelligence, civilization, and public spirit has done for all other countries. There are no people in the country, no class of our people, who would begrudge the sum—the few thousands of dollars—necessarily involved in this establishment.

This city is the great center which attracts all of our people. They do not feel that anything is too grand for this city or Government. They go away from here often feeling perhaps that with the exception of the Capitol our public buildings, particularly the White House, are most insignificant and incompatible with the high character and dignity of the country. They feel that here, in the capital of a great nation, everything should be on the grandest scale, in consonance with the dignity of our nation, and that all that appertains to culture, art, and science ought to have a home and abiding-place here on a grand and ample scale, commensurate with our resources, greatness, and dignity as a nation.

Mr. FORNEY. It is proposed by this amendment of the Senate to establish a zoological park in the District of Columbia by the appropriation of $200,000 at this time. Now, when this $200,000 is expended, what have you got? You simply have 121 acres out here on Rock Creek, for which it is proposed to pay $142,000. In the first place, that is an immense price for that kind of land. Then, after we have spent $142,000 for the 121 acres of land, there are $58,000 left with which to commence building houses. Next year we will be called upon to appropriate $200,000 to buy buffaloes, tigers, lions, monkeys, and other animals to put in there. [Laughter.] The next year after that we will have to appropriate another $200,000, because we will have to buy reptiles, snakes, and things of that kind. [Laughter.] So really, Mr. Speaker, it simply means $200,000 this year and $200,000 a year for the next five years, and then we have a zoological garden. There is a zoological garden in New York and another in Cincinnati. Of course we must rival them, and it will cost $100,000 every year for all time to come. Now, are we ready to commence this business? I say not; and why? Because the Government has no business to enter into this matter until we are out of debt, and if the gentleman will postpone this measure until 1907, when we have paid our debt, I will join in the business. [Laughter.] I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I doubt the wisdom of providing for this expenditure at the present time. I have no hesitation about the right and expediency, at the proper time and in a proper way, of improving the parks about our cities and establishing, at proper places and under proper safeguards, zoological gardens. In nearly all of our great cities you find them. Since this measure has been pending, I got on my horse and went up Rock Creek road along the northern and the southern boundary of the proposed zoological garden. I went along the creek, and, as nearly as I could, found the boundary of that proposed park. Nature has done a great deal for that location; and I am very frank to say that I hope to live a good many years after the zoological garden shall have been established there or at some other good point; and I doubt whether any better location can be found anywhere.

Yet I am frank to say I do not favor this measure at this time, because we are not ready. I believe the time is near at hand when there ought to be a park established, commencing at Massachusetts avenue and running a considerable distance north of the proposed northern boundary of this garden; and in that park ought to be placed, I believe, the zoological garden.

It may be, and I think it quite likely, that a portion of the expense of this park proper ought to be borne by the District of Columbia; but whether that shall be done or not, we are not ready at this time to establish the park; I mean as disconnected with the zoological garden. If you establish the garden there now, and the Government begins to spend money upon it, my opinion is that the cost for the land north and south of it for a park proper would be very greatly increased. I think it wise, therefore, to let this matter go over until the next session of Congress; and in the mean time let the Committee on Appropriations, if you choose, or the Committee on the District of Columbia, or both committees, as well as members generally, look into this subject.

Mr. TAULBEE. Would it disturb the gentleman if I should ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. TAULBEE. If I understand the gentleman, his position is that the District of Columbia ought to pay half the expense of this park, while the Government acquires the title to the property. Now, if the District of Columbia is to pay half of the expense, is it not right, under the present system of taking care of the parks of this city and of dividing the general expenses of the city, that the title should be vested in the District of Columbia? If the Government owns the property, why require the District of Columbia to pay half the expense?

Mr. CANNON. The Government does not own the property.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understood that was the purpose.

Mr. CANNON. That is a matter for adjustment in the future. The government of the United States may pay all the expense, or the District of Columbia pay one-half; that would depend upon the provisions of the law which may be passed at the time we acquire the park. It may be that the District of Columbia ought not to pay anything, so far as the zoological garden is concerned.

But my particular objection to this provision at the present time is that, after having gone over that portion of the District and examined it pretty closely, the impression rests strongly on my mind that we ought to have not only the ground proposed, but north of it a considerable distance—a mile or two—and south of it to Massachusetts avenue, for a general park, in which this garden ought to be located.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is the same plan, I believe, which was considered some weeks ago in the time belonging to the District of Columbia, when we had a bill before us proposing to establish a park.

Mr. CANNON. I do not say that I approve of that plan at all. I say generally that I approve of acquiring this land for that purpose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to differ on this question with some of my colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. FORNEY] is usually right, although somewhat possessed of a parsimonious spirit in respect to public expenditures, as is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT]. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY], when he says that the adoption of this amendment will involve an annual expenditure of $100,000, draws largely, I think, on his imagination.

Mr. FORNEY. I will ask the gentleman whether he understands what is the cost of maintaining the parks in New York and other large cities? I understand that in New York the expense is $50,000; and of course we shall have to go ahead of New York.

Mr. FORAN. Fifty thousand dollars! I do not care whether the zoological garden in New York costs $50,000 or $500,000 or $5,000,000.

Mr. FORNEY. That is the right way to meet the question.

Mr. FORAN. That park, the Central Park in the city of New York, is the institution which above all others attracts the attention and admiration of visitors. It is the one bright spot, the great oasis in the desert of misery and selfishness known as New York. And so, too, when a person visits Philadelphia the first place he is likely to go to is the Zoological Garden. The same is true in respect to Cincinnati.

Mr. Speaker, I think I know something as well as other gentlemen about public opinion in respect to expenditures of the public money, and I wish to say right here that when we go upon the political platform this fall to discuss political questions before the people we shall not be asked about the expenditures of the public money as much as we shall be interrogated in regard to other questions. I have made many a canvass, and I know that the people of the United States are not so much concerned about the amount of public expenditures, if they are properly expended, as they are about other great and leading issues. Of course when public moneys are improperly expended, when there is peculation and fraud, the people have a right to complain, but the expenditure of the public money for scientific and other useful purposes has never been complained of by the people. Especially is this true when money is appropriated and expended for the benefit, the education, and the edification of the people. Money expended for public parks and botanical and zoological gardens, where the poor, who can not afford these luxuries as the wealthy can, may breathe fresh air, enhance their health and improve their minds, is never condemned, but is always commended and appreciated by those who pay taxes, for these parks are the recreation grounds of the poor.

Why, sir, the people of the Old World have for years and centuries encouraged art and science. Hence you find there a Humboldt, an Agassiz, a Muncaczy, and a Meissonier. But you do not find such men in this country, and you will not until our public men rise to the height they should and encourage art and science in this country. The hard, sharp struggle for existence keeps many of the brightest minds in the Republic chained to the bench or the desk. With proper encouragement our artists, scientists, and naturalists would become shining stars in the great galaxy of human science and genius.

I am strongly in favor, Mr. Speaker, of a zoological garden in this city or some other place under the control of the United States. The sciences of biology and biogenesis are attracting wide attention at this time, and that part of biology which embraces zoology, the structure, habits, distribution, classification, and derivation of animals receives the most earnest consideration of scientific men everywhere. There is in Paris the Jardin des Plantes, which has been the nursery and educator of naturalists for hundreds of years. They have in Regent's Park, London, a great zoological garden, which has over 5,000 animals in it to-day, and although it is an admission garden more people visit it than visit any other quarter of London or England. It is the haunt of the poor, the woman and child as well as the man, the haunt of the naturalist, the scientist, the traveler—the pride and the glory of the British metropolis. And why should we not have such a garden? We proudly boast of our greatness, our prosperity, our intelligence as a people. Let us show by our acts, our encouragement to art and science that we are worthy of the distinction we claim.

Look at this city to-day. Has the United States encouraged art, even in so meager a way as to provide for a national art gallery? No, sir. If it were not for the munificence and generosity of one man—I refer to the late lamented Mr. Corcoran—the capital of the United States would not have a single work of art free to the student, the people—all who love and admire the beautiful and the artistic. Thank God, there was one man who recognized that property was not an individual fact, but the creation of social agencies; and, recognizing his duty to society, this great and good man gave to the people the Corcoran Art Gallery. He recognized a principle that wealthy men do not recognize generally. Were it not for the generosity of that one man the visitor to this city to-day could find no place where might be seen specimens of the art of this and other countries, this and past ages.

It has been well said by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that a great many of the animals which were found in this country are fast becoming extinct—such as the buffalo, the caribou, the Rocky Mountain goat, the moose, and other species. Are these animals, this part of our natural history, to be blotted out and lost forever? Must future generations know of them only by seeing their remains or by reading what naturalists say of them?

The science of zoology is closely related to the cognate sciences of biology and anthropology and ethnology, and all questions relating to human life and life itself. They are all of vast and unbounded interest to science and to everybody. I know myself from practical experience how interested the people generally are in all that relates to animal life—to the fauna of this as well as other countries. A small park in the city of Cleveland has recently had donated to it a little alligator, a very small specimen, from the region of my friend from Alabama. This saurian has held levees, matinees, and noon-day receptions all summer, and has had more visitors than any other attractions in the city of Cleveland. His audiences number hundreds of thousands. Man has a peculiar interest in all living things. The animals of a circus have ever had more interest for the youth than the contortions of the clown. The study of life always has, and always will have, a fascinating interest for the human mind, and where can lower forms of life be better studied than in zoological gardens?

It is something we need in this city, and the expenditure of $200,000 in a matter of this kind is a mere bagatelle compared with its necessity and its usefulness for the advancement of science. I do not care if it does cost $50,000 or a $100,000 next year, although there is no warrant for that assumption. You have to-day a National Museum with a large ethnological collection in this city and with a large collection of the fauna and flora of the country. As you have gone that far, why not in addition have a zoological garden?

I understand that in the Smithsonian Institution or the National Museum there are fifty or a hundred animals already, donated by men interested in the zoological geography of the country. Instead of having to pay for the animals for this park they will be donated by persons from all parts of the United States, because there are large hearted and generous men in the United States everywhere who are anxious to enrich and perpetuate this science. Until recently our knowledge of extinct animals was so very limited that the science hardly deserved the name; but within a few years the discovery of extinct fossil remains has enabled the scientist, by an examination of these records of past ages, to solve many mysteries, not only of relation, but of structure as well. In this research dwarfed organs have been found in full development and widely separated forms linked together. The zoology of the future will include the past as well as the present. It is already a most wonderful as well as a most useful science; and it is to stimulate and advance it that this measure is proposed. All scientists now agree that the germ of life, the bioplasm, the clay from which the Great Potter molds living beings, is identically the same in all animals, man included. It is for this reason that the study of life, its origin, its purpose, its existence has so great an interest to the human mind. Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, that the expenditure of this money will be productive of great and lasting benefit to science.

Let me say, in conclusion, that the people do not scan too closely the expenditures of money out of the Treasury provided it is expended for their benefit. Persons coming to this city and seeing this magnificent structure, the Capitol of the United States, are not filled with envy because it is located in Washington. It is the nation's building and each citizen has a part in it. As the visitors go through the beautiful grounds of the Botanic Garden, or through the National Museum, and the Smithsonian Institution, they are conscious these institutions belong to them as well as to the people of Washington. You have a National Observatory here, too; it is national in its character and belongs to the whole country. This zoological garden will belong not to this city alone, but to the whole United States. It will be a place where the weary resident, every sojourner and visitor will delight to go, for there will be found types of all living animals in our zoological geography, as well as specimens of the remains of all extinct fauna found in the same zone. Animals and specimens of fauna from other countries will also be found there. It will be a great national educator, and I am heartily in favor of it.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield now to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think my friend from Alabama has not made a very good comparison when he compared this appropriation with the one which has just been made in another bill. The object of that was to subserve the interests of the great mass of the people. It was an anti-monopoly measure, to prevent certain things from going into the hands of monopoly, in aid of which there was an expenditure of the money of the people. But here is an aristocratic measure, just the reverse of that, intended to beautify and adorn private property and enhance the value of real estate in the city of Washington at the public expense. While it is doing so it fails to provide that these private individuals shall contribute one cent to the expense of it.

Now, if the States throughout the country have established the parks for their own adornment, use, and benefit, let the city of Washington do the same, and if the people here want to go into the show business let them do so at their own expense. So far as the people of this country are concerned, they are quite willing, if left to themselves, in a proper mannner to provide parks and adornments for their own cities and the capitals of the States; but it is not right and proper to tax, for the purpose of "bulling" the real estate market of the city of Washington, the people of this country; and that is all this does.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen want to study this science, and the habits of monkeys, bears, and elephants, I suppose it would be better to go into the country where they are grown and reared and study their habits in their native homes. But to bring them here for "scientific" purposes is not a proper use of the word. It is not in the interest of science in any manner, but simply in the interest of curiosity; and hundreds of the people of my State would prefer, if this circus is to be inaugurated, that it shall be carried around; and that if it is for their benefit, and for the benefit of their science, that it shall be put on wheels. Let us organize it in that way. I believe the gentleman from Texas has an amendment to that effect. Let us organize the menagerie, appoint the clown, get all the actors, and visit all the States and capitals of the country, and give the people the benefit, as they have to foot the bill for the performance, and not restrict it alone to the city of Washington.

I am opposed to the amendment and to all appropriations of the public money that go simply to the benefit of the rich and aristocratic classes; and I repeat if they desire the menagerie here, and the establishment of a zoological garden for the benefit of the people of the city of Washington, let them foot the bill. The people of this country ought not to be expected to do it.

Mr. NELSON. Has the time in opposition been exhausted?

The SPEAKER. There are seven minutes remaining to the gentleman from Alabama, and twelve minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I propose to close the debate, and I hope the gentleman from Alabama will exhaust the time on that side.

Mr. KERR. I would like a minute or two.

Mr. FORNEY. On which side?

Mr. KERR. On your side.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that we ought to appropriate the public money for any such purpose. There are certain purposes connected with the administration of the Government in the District of Columbia in which it is necessary for us to appropriate money and incidentally thereby to improve the city. This necessarily results in large benefit to the city; but I do not see why the city of Washington ought not to be left to provide its own zoological garden if it desires one. There is not one boy or man in five hundred throughout this country that ever comes here, or will come and get any benefit from the establishment of the garden here, and for that reason I do not think the public money ought to be appropriated for any such purpose.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print, as an appendix to my remarks, the report which I hold in my hand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that was objected to.

Mr. HERBERT. I renew the request.

The SPEAKER. What is the document?

Mr. HERBERT. It is the report of the commission in regard to restricting the work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. COX. Does this apply to the bill of to-day, or to the irrigation matter?

Mr. HERBERT. The bill of to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent at the same time to be permitted to insert certain statistics and statements to accompany my remarks.

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to go into the general discussion of the pending matter, but to call attention to one single fact, one paragraph of this amendment, and that is:

That the said commission is hereby authorized and directed to make an inspection of the country along Rock Creek, beginning at the point on that creek where the Woodley road crosses said creek, and extending upward along its course to where said creek is crossed by the Klingle road, and to select from that district of country such a tract of land, of not less than one hundred acres, which shall include a section of the creek, as said commission shall deem to be suitable and appropriate for a zoological park.

There never happens a time, sir, when the Government of the United States needs land for any purpose that the land it owns or is in possession of is suitable for it. While we have vast areas in reserve, whenever a public building is to be located for governmental purposes the sites owned by the Government are never found to be suitable. We are now expending vast sums of money which will run up into millions of dollars along the river front here in what is known as the Potomac flats improvement. More than 700 acres of land, we have been told, are to be reclaimed, and yet under the provisions of this very bill, true to the instincts that seem to prompt all efforts on the part of certain persons to bring about expenditures of the public money here, they go away from that vast area of reclaimed and reclaimable land and provide for the purchase of a particular body of land for this garden. If there was nothing else in this bill but that, it is enough to cause this House to stop and say we will not load down appropriation bills with all manner of schemes merely under the semblance of promoting science, when a little examination is well calculated to excite the suspicion, at least, that it is nothing more than a grand raid upon the public Treasury.

Out on the grounds of Rock Creek we are to buy 100 acres of land at a cost of you do not know what, and at the very same instant you are expending millions of dollars in the reclamation of the Potomac flats, in extent about 700 acres. I say, sir, that we have always found when we have sought to sell lands of the Government they were always valuable until the Government come into possession of them; but having got into possession then the lands were utterly useless for another purpose. We have now some hundreds of acres, perhaps—certainly we will have before we shall have concluded the reclamation of the Potomac flats. Will any gentleman undertake to say that when they shall have been reclaimed that land may not be utilized; and could not a part of it that has been reclaimed be utilized for that purpose? May we not delay this matter until such time as it could be done? I trust, sir, that there is no occasion for any alarm about not having this zoological garden now.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does my friend think it will be advisable to establish a bear-garden there after we have the land?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not care to go into a bear-garden at all.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It does not seem to be advisable.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not think I have any zeal about purchasing the buffaloes and reptiles that my friend from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] spoke of having to put in there. It may become necessary——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NELSON. Has the time allotted to those opposed to this amendment expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. My first impressions were decidedly against this measure, for the reason that I entertained some fear that it was a real-estate speculation, and I have taken some interest while I have been in Congress in endeavoring to keep out legislation in the interest of real-estate speculators. When we had the officers of the Smithsonian Institution before us in regard to this matter I took pains to probe this question carefully, and satisfied myself that instead of real-estate men being in favor of this zoological garden they are against it. Men owning real estate in that vicinity do not care to have their property condemned and the title taken from them and given to the Government.

Condemnation juries do not always give verdicts to suit real-estate owners, especially when they have a strong public sentiment back of the movement, and favoring reasonable compensation. Let this park be established, and real estate will tumble in the vicinity. The speculators desire residences built and not parks for animals.

The truth is I found out that the owners of real estate are against this movement. They want fancy and fictitious prices for their property and not prices fixed by a jury of the people. On that point my mind is at rest.

Now, then, as to the cost of this matter. Mr. Hornaday, of the Smithsonian Institution, who has given this matter a very great deal of attention, has urged this matter upon our attention. He is a man of established reputation and high character and ability, who is interested in the question from high-minded, patriotic motives. He has studied the habits of animals of this country after having first taken an initiation of between two and three years in the African jungles. He is also a close student of the character and habits of our own American animals. They of the Smithsonian prepared careful estimates of what it would cost to buy this 121 acres, and they estimated that it would not exceed $142,000.

They took the advice of real-estate agents, among them Mr. Fisher, whom most gentlemen here know by reputation, and he says it could not cost more than $140,000. One hundred and forty-two thousand dollars is the outside estimate. I think when the jury get hold of this estimate they will cut them out of some of that even. The annual cost is estimated by the officers of the Smithsonian Institution at $50,000 a year at present. This is to include maintenance, salaries of employés, improvements in buildings, for the construction of yards, cages, and all that sort of thing. That is a cost that will obtain for a few years until this place shall have been established. After that the annual cost, it is estimated, will not exceed thirty-five to forty thousand dollars. So far as the estimate of the cost is concerned, let me remark in passing—what most gentlemen are familiar with—that the Smithsonian Institute has never involved the Government in a deficit. The officers there are careful, prudent men, and know at all times what they are talking about. Now, as to the views of my colleague [Mr. CANNON] that it ought to go over to another Congress, it must be borne in mind if we are to have a zoological garden, where every animal of this country is to be gathered, it is time we were moving. Already a large number of animals that were indigenous to this country have passed away. The buffalo is almost a creature of the past; and if it is desirable to have such places and if we are to preserve all these curiosities in this country I think it is time we were moving in it. Besides, a year or two of delay will see the land contemplated for it cut up and largely occupied as residences, and we will then be too late.

The objection is made that we are going into the "show business." That kind of remark, sometimes coupled with a sneer—I do not say that it has been so in this debate—can be urged against the Medical Museum, the National Museum, and public parks and gardens everywhere; but it will not do to make that an argument in a case like this. Mr. Speaker, this is a democratic movement. It is a movement in the interest of the masses of the people. He who favors parks, where the people can take recreation and come in contact with nature, he who favors public libraries, where the masses of the people can acquire knowledge, is taking an advanced stand in the interest of the masses. But some gentlemen say that this garden should not be established at Washington, that it should be in the National Park. Gentlemen, you will find that a very large number of your constituents will from year to year visit the national capital, while very few of them comparatively will ever go to the National Park. Besides, I am opposed to sending this garden to the National Park. That institution is practically owned now by a great hotel monopoly. That great National Park is owned and controlled practically by one corporation, and I understand that there is now a bill in this House to put the rivets into it and fasten it as an attachment to that corporation.

Mr. Speaker, let this garden be established at this great national center, where, with our increasing railroad facilities, more and more of our citizens will visit it every year, for there is no nation in the world whose people move about their country as ours do. More of our people will get the benefit of this garden in Washington than at any other point where it could be located. In connection with this discussion let it not be forgotten that this is a proposition which has been introduced into Congress by Senator BECK, a patriotic citizen, a man conservative in thought and in legislation, a man whom no member of this Congress will charge with being extravagant or favoring real-estate speculations. Let it be borne in mind also that the scientific men of this country stand back of this bill urging it upon the consideration of Congress. Not only that, but the great agricultural journals and the leading journals of this nation have urged upon us to pass this bill establishing a zoological garden.

The sentiment of the country is back of this proposition. It is not designed for the benefit of the citizens of Washington, though I am perfectly willing that they, as a respected part of our people, and entitled to every advantage of other citizens, shall have all the advantage which they can derive from it. This garden is demanded as an educator, as a preserver of elements of education and interest that are passing away like the morning mist and will soon pass away entirely unless preserved by intelligent legislative action.

Mr. Speaker, I have said all that I desire to urge upon the House in connection with this subject, and I now yield back my remaining time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. I yield that time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the argument in favor of this proposition is very tersely stated by a Democratic newspaper, the Boston Globe of Saturday last, and I propose to read as part of my remarks its article on the subject. It is as follows:

TIME FOR A NATIONAL "ZOO."

Senator BECK's bill to establish a national zoological garden at Washington is still pending. It ought to pass at the present session of Congress.

This is the only great nation in the world that does not possess such an institution. And of all the nations this is the one that needs it most. In no other country are the native wild animals becoming so rapidly extinct. Only a few years ago the great Western plains were black with bison; now that huge animal is a curiosity even to the dwellers on the plains. A thousand other varieties and species are being exterminated with equal rapidity. If the children of the coming generations are to know anything of the kind of animals that once roamed over the United States, except from books, something like what Senator BECK's bill contemplates must be done at once.

The price of land in Washington, already enormous, is rapidly rising, and for that reason, if no other, delay will be costly. At present land can be had for the purpose at a reasonable price, but every month adds to its value.

At a cost that would be trifling compared with the benefits to be derived, Congress might give the country the largest and most interesting collection of live animals in the world. The primary object of the proposed "zoo" should be to preserve perfect specimens of American animals; but there is no reason why the wild denizens of Asiatic jungles and South American forests should not have a department to themselves.

The "national zoo" is a good object on which Democrats and Republicans can unite for the credit of their common country. Congress ought to give it to us, and any person in private life can help secure the "zoo" by writing to request his Congressman to vote for Senator BECK's bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the few wise Democratic propositions that have been brought before this Congress. [Laughter.] My worthy friend from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] suggests, and I think very properly, that he is opposed to taxing the many for the benefit of the few. I agree with him, and for once we stand together on a common platform. But, Mr. Speaker, it is as an educator of the people that this institution is desired. Like the Smithsonian Institution, like the National Museum, like the many statues that decorate the parks and streets of Washington, this garden will educate the people, will teach them to love their country, to take an interest in the products of their country, and for that reason I think it is a very proper thing to be created and maintained by the General Government. I am thoroughly in favor of the proposition. Whether the garden shall be located at the point proposed or not, I do not care particularly; but at some proper place within the District of Columbia such an institution ought to be established and maintained. The argument of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], if it is good against this, is equally forcible against all the institutions that are maintained now at the public expense, such as those which have been enumerated by my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]. We have here, moreover, the talent, the knowledge, and the energy of Mr. Hornaday which are to be given to this garden if it is established. I have known him for many years, and I know that he possesses intelligence, experience, and capacity that would be very valuable in connection with an institution of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment and agree to the same.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 36, noes 56.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. I now move that the House agree to the further conference requested by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House, Mr. FORNEY, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. RYAN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] to the fact that one of the amendments of the Senate to the sundry civil appropriation bill—amendment 105—appears not to have been disposed of by the House.

Mr. FORNEY. That was one of the amendments intended to be included with those as to which the House insisted on its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this amendment will be regarded as included with the amendments on which the House insisted upon its disagreement.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MAIL TRANSPORTATION BY RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the order which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLOUNT asks that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be allowed to report at any time a bill to regulate the compensation of railroads for carrying the mails, and also to report similar legislation in the Post-Office appropriation bill at the next session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the adoption of this order?

Mr. SPRINGER. Does this relate entirely to the next session of Congress?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; it relates to the present session as well.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT (after a pause). I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] withdraws his objection.

Mr. WEAVER. With the distinct understanding that this bill when reported is not to interfere with the consideration of the Oklahoma bill, I will make no objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I presume it will not.

Mr. RYAN. If I understand this proposition, it is that a bill for the object stated may be reported at any time during the present session, or a provision to that effect may be incorporated in the Post-Office appropriation bill at the next session.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is it exactly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, however, in order to avoid misunderstanding, that the word "or" is not in the order. It provides that the committee may report at any time a bill of the character mentioned, "and also report similar legislation in the Post-Office appropriation bill at the next session."

Mr. BLOUNT. I will modify the proposition by inserting the word "or" instead of the word "and."

The SPEAKER. The proposition will be modified by omitting the words "and also" and inserting the word "or."

Mr. WEAVER. Is it understood that this is not to interfere with the consideration of the Oklahoma bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will say to the gentleman that I am likely to have charge of this measure when reported, and will endeavor to carry out the gentleman's wishes.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia what is the difficulty which this proposition seeks to avoid?

Mr. BLOUNT. I take pleasure in answering the gentleman. This is a very large question. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, not having had during this or the last Congress the right to report at any time (which carries with it the right of consideration), have not felt there would be any use in reporting a measure of this sort which would simply go to the Calendar. The committee desire the House to encourage them at least with the assurance that if they shall report legislation reducing the compensation of the railroads for carrying the mails they shall have a hearing. The question involves millions of dollars; and the committee have thought it important enough to make this request of the House, in order that the question may be considered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection. The measure is a very important one.

Mr. WEAVER. This is an important question—a very large question indeed—and if brought up will no doubt consume a great deal of time. But I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that he will not allow its consideration to interfere with the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will not interfere with the Oklahoma bill.

Several MEMBERS. That is all right.

There being no objection, the order requested by Mr. BLOUNT was made.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7708) to increase the pension of Annie Gibson Yates;

A bill (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10856) for pension for Eliza N. Aiken; and

A bill (H. R. 10998) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, Mr. PENINGTON, and Mr. CROUSE as the conferees on the part of the House upon the bill (H. R. 6514) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees for reports be dispensed with to-day, and that members desiring to present reports may file them with the Clerk.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk.

DAMAGE TO PLANTED OYSTERS, RARITAN BAY, NEW JERSEY.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 9767) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint commissioners to investigate certain claims for damages done to planted oysters in Raritan Bay in 1881; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COURT OF PATENT APPEALS, ETC.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9084) to establish a court of patent appeals of the United States, and so on; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES CLARK.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11252) for the relief of James Clark; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIAS B. MARTIN.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8959) for the relief of Elias B. Martin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

P. F. JONTE.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10073) granting a pension to P. F. Jonte; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREDERICKA LIESEGANG.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11317) granting a pension to Fredericka Liesegang; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY B. M'VEAN.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 3421) granting a pension to Mary B. McVean; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS GUINEAN.

Mr. HERMANN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5267) for the relief of Thomas Guinean; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration hour for to-day be dispensed with.

Mr. CRISP. As the Committee on Commerce will be called during this hour, I am compelled to object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The consideration hour begins at five minutes past 2 o'clock; and the call rests with the Committee on Commerce.

BRUNSWICK COLLECTION DISTRICT, GEORGIA.

Mr. CRISP. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11101) to include Sapelo Island in the Brunswick collection district, in the State of Georgia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the island of Sapelo shall henceforth be included in, and be a part of, the second district for the collection of customs, in the State of Georgia, known as the Brunswick district.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "that," in line 3, the words "Sapelo Sound, Sapelo River, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title of the bill was amended, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce, so as to read: "A bill to include Sapelo Sound, Sapelo River, and Sapelo Island in the Brunswick collection district, in the State of Georgia."

APPOINTMENTS IN MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. CRISP. I call up for consideration at this time Senate bill 1786, to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and no person shall be so appointed until after passing a satisfactory examination in the several branches of medicine, surgery, and hygiene before a board of medical officers of the said service. Said examination shall be conducted according to rules prepared by the Supervising Surgeon-General and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the President.

SEC. 2. That original appointments in the service shall only be made to the rank of assistant surgeon; and no officer shall be promoted to the rank of passed assistant surgeon until after four years' service and a second examination as aforesaid; and no passed assistant surgeon shall be promoted to be surgeon until after due examination: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect the rank or promotion of any officer originally appointed before the adoption of the regulations of 1879; and the President is authorized to nominate for confirmation the officers in the service on the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this bill only change the mode of appointment?

Mr. CRISP. Secretaries of the Treasury have recommended it from time to time. It does not increase the pay or number of officers, but merely provides they shall hereafter be appointed by the President instead of by the Secretary. It also allows them to have commissions. The head of the bureau is the only officer in this service now appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. CARUTH. Does not this bill make the positions to be obtained simply by confirmation?

Mr. CRISP. The bill provides in the second section that appointments shall be made by the President instead of, as now, by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The letter of Secretary Manning says:

It appears that there is at the present time no law specifically regulating the appointment of medical officers in the Marine-Hospital Service, and the appointments are made in accordance with the general authority conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury to direct the affairs of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Hence the propriety of the passage of an act regulating these appointments.

An examination of the text of the bill shows it to be substantially a transcript of the regulations of the Department which have been in force since 1879, and which were lately repromulgated and approved by the President under date of April 24, 1885. It must be sufficiently obvious to any one that medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service should be thoroughly versed in the different branches of medicine, as set forth in the bill, and the incorporation of these requirements in the statutes would seem to be necessary.

It is, in substance, as stated by the Secretary, the rule in the Department to-day; but this bill puts it in the form of law, and these officers hereafter will be appointed by the President instead of, as now, by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CARUTH. Does not this bill perpetuate the present officers?

Mr. CRISP. As I understand it, the only officer now in the Marine-Hospital Service who has been appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate is the Supervising Surgeon-General. This does not affect him at all.

Mr. CARUTH. Will the gentleman have any objection to putting an amendment in to say that is the effect of it? I have read the bill, and it is ambiguous. It does not say it does not affect him, but it does.

Mr. CRISP. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CARUTH. It looks that way to me.

Mr. MAISH. I have not read the bill, but I have been advised that the effect is to give the Supervising Surgeon-General a life tenure of office, which he has not now.

Mr. CARUTH. That is exactly it.

Mr. MAISH. If that is the effect of the bill, I am entirely opposed to it.

Mr. CRISP. How gentlemen arrive at that conclusion I confess I do not know.

Mr. MAISH. I have not arrived at such conclusion myself, but have been so told.

Mr. CRISP. I think the gentleman will find on examination that he has been misinformed. It passed the Senate unanimously. The report shows it has the approval of Secretary Sherman and Secretary Manning. It meets with the approval, I am informed, of the present Secretary, although there is no letter from him to that effect. I did not make the report myself. My understanding is that the head of the service is the only one the bill does not affect, he being an officer appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and as I understand it, the sole object is to allow subordinates instead of being appointed as now, by the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. DUNN. Let the bill be reported again.

Mr. CRISP. As there seems to be some doubt about it let the bill be again reported.

The bill was again read.

Mr. CARUTH. How long will they have to hold office?

Mr. CRISP. As I understand it, this is putting into the form of a law what is simply at the present time a regulation of the Department. If I am correctly informed as to the regulations, these officers may be discharged summarily at any time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does this operate to muster out the subordinates in that service?

Mr. CRISP. No; I do not so understand it. It authorizes the President to nominate those now in the service.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But does it vacate the offices at all unless he does nominate them?

Mr. CRISP. The President is authorized to nominate those now in the service. I do not know, of course, that it would compel him to do so.

Mr. CARUTH. Of course not.

Mr. MAISH. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CRISP. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAISH. I understand, sir, the present Supervising Surgeon-General tendered his resignation a good while ago. Could the President under this proposed act of Congress appoint an officer of that bureau who had served less than four years?

Mr. CARUTH. No; of course not.

Mr. MAISH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that this is very objectionable for that reason, if such is the effect of it. It would seem to convey the idea that an officer must have served four years in that bureau before he would be eligible to appointment; and as the Supervising Surgeon-General, as I understand it, has tendered his resignation, and the President may accept it on any day, then if it is accepted there is not an officer left who has served the four years in the bureau who is eligible to appointment.

Mr. CRISP. I shall ask to have a letter of the Surgeon-General appended to the report read, which I think will be satisfactory, as I do not want to take up any more time than is necessary with the bill, because if there is objection to it I would prefer to withdraw it. As I stated before, I understand the only officer who is not affected by the bill is the head of the bureau, who has already been appointed, and does not come under the terms of the bill.

Mr. CARUTH. I wish to say to the gentleman, in view of what he has said, that so far as this bill is concerned in its present shape I shall feel it my duty to make an effort to defeat it.

Mr. CRISP. That is the gentleman's privilege.

Mr. CARUTH. And I say this because I understood the gentleman desired to know whether or not there was any opposition to it.

Mr. CRISP. But I do not propose to withdraw it on that account, or to have it kicked out without consideration. I will first ask a vote upon it. I ask the Clerk to read this letter, embodied in the report, of the Surgeon-General.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISING SURGEON-GENERAL,
UNITED STATES MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE,
Washington, January 13, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the draught of a bill to "increase the efficiency of the Marine-Hospital Service," and to request that, if the draught is in accordance with your views, it be transmitted to Congress. The general object of the bill I assume to be in accordance with the recommendations you have repeatedly made, that statutory provisions be made for the appointment of officers and employés of this service.

Section 1760, Revised Statutes, prohibits the appointment by the Secretary of any person to any office not authorized by law, or subsequently sanctioned by law. The law has, by implication, subsequently sanctioned the employment or appointment of such officers in the text of several health laws passed in 1878 and 1879. No authority exists, in terms, for the employment or appointment of any person in the Marine-Hospital Service, with the exception of the Supervising Surgeon-General. The various circulars and regulations that have been issued from time to time since 1802, by the Treasury Department, governing these appointments, have been based upon the general law of 1798, which created the fund, and left all the details of its management to the Secretary of the Treasury.

It has been found expedient, as time demonstrated its necessity, that the system of these appointments should be made uniform, and the proposed bill only aims at regulating by law what has for several years been the practice of the Department.

The results thus clearly foretold in this report, made thirty years ago, have been accomplished; the reports of the service are sought after by the medical profession; the standard of professional requirements necessary to gain admission into the service is high, 78 per cent. of all applications for admission into the corps having been rejected during the past year; the sailors are satisfied as a body; and the popularity of the officers is evidenced by the steadily-increasing number of patients from year to year. But in order to maintain the service at its present high standard of excellence, and to attract to it young men of the highest ability, the methods of appointment and the rates of compensation must be regulated by law.

Experience has shown the present system—the one recommended in the bill and already in practice by the Department—to be that best adapted to carry out the purpose of the founders of the law and that most creditable to the Government.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN B. HAMILTON,
Surgeon-General, United States Marine-Hospital Service.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CRISP. Now, I would like to have a vote on the bill; and if no gentleman desires to be heard further, I shall ask the previous question upon it.

Mr. CARUTH. I desire to tender an amendment before the previous question is demanded. It is to remedy the principal objection I have to the bill.

Mr. CRISP. Let the amendment be read, subject to the right of objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the words:

"Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall apply to the office of Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, whose appointment shall be as now regulated by law."

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. As I understand the amendment, it would go further than that and extend to the subordinates of the office.

Mr. CRISP. It merely excepts the head of the bureau from this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. But the amendment goes to the subordinates of the office.

Mr. CARUTH. Oh, no; the Supervising Surgeon-General alone is referred to.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the bill itself excepts him.

Mr. CARUTH. I want to provide by this amendment that there shall be no question on the subject.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask one question. Why make a different rule in regard to the head of the service to that you make in regard to the subordinates?

Mr. CARUTH. Because there is now on the statute-books a law applying to the appointment of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, but none as to the others. Their appointment is a matter of regulation in the Department.

Mr. CANNON. You propose to make permanent the tenure of the subordinates, not of the chief?

Mr. CARUTH. The proposition, as I understand it, is to embody into the shape of law what is now a regulation of the service.

Mr. CANNON. Does this make them permanent?

Mr. CARUTH. I think it does.

Mr. CANNON. Why not make the chief permanent as well as the subordinates?

Mr. CARUTH. I do not believe that any of them ought to be made permanent.

Mr. CANNON. Then why make fish of one and fowl of the other?

Mr. CARUTH. I am perfectly willing to make fish of all. They are in the marine business. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. I am willing to accept the amendment, and now demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendment was adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill (H. R. 6693) on the same subject will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee upon the House bill, which is a more full report than the other, be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6693) to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service, submit the following report:

The Marine-Hospital Service was organized by virtue of an act of Congress approved July 16, 1798, authorizing the President of the United States to appoint, in such parts of the United States as he might think proper, certain persons, to be called medical directors of the Marine Hospital of the United States. This act defined the duties of the persons so appointed; and, further, provided that they should hold their office during the pleasure of the President, who was authorized to fill vacancies, etc. (Stats. at Large, volume 1, page 606.)

In 1870 Congress passed an act reorganizing this service, and provided, among other things, for the appointment of a supervising surgeon of the Marine-Hospital Service, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

This act made no provision for the appointment of officers in the service further than for the appointment of the Supervising Surgeon. (Rev. Stats., chap. 59, page 940.)

In 1875 Congress repealed this law so far as it related to the appointment of the supervising surgeon, and provided that this officer should be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. (Supp. to Rev. Stats., chap. 130, page 158.)

By the provisions of law now in force all other medical officers in the Marine-Hospital Service are now appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the recommendation of the Supervising Surgeon-General. (Regulations of the United States Hospital Service, approved April 24, 1885.)

The pending bill provides that these officers, other than the Supervising Surgeon-General, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. It also makes provision for their examination before appointment, etc.

The object of this act is to secure efficiency and regularity on the part of the officers in this service in the discharge of their duties, and also to provide that their appointment may be made in like manner as the medical officers in the revenue-cutter service.

Your committee find that the legislation asked is at the instance of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that for several years past the same legislation has been requested of Congress by different Secretaries of the Treasury, and at each session of Congress it has received the favorable action of the different committees to which it has been referred, but thus far the bills have failed to become a law.

In 1880 the Secretary of the Treasury called the attention of Congress to this subject in a letter of which the following is a copy:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 14, 1880.

"SIR: I have the honor to invite the favorable attention of Congress to the draught of a bill, herewith transmitted, to increase the efficiency of the Marine-Hospital Service, and to the accompanying letter in explanation thereof from Dr. J. B. Hamilton, Surgeon-General of that service.

"It is believed that the enactment of the bill substantially in its present form into a law would place the service upon a better footing without materially increasing its expense.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

"Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
"Speaker of the House of Representatives."

Accompanying this letter was also a letter from the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, as follows:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE SUPERVISING SURGEON-GENERAL,
"UNITED STATES MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE,
"Washington, January 13, 1880.

"JOHN B. HAMILTON,
"Surgeon-General, United States Marine-Hospital Service.

"Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
"Secretary of the Treasury."

In 1886 Hon. Daniel Manning, the then Secretary of the Treasury, requested of Congress the passage of a bill similar to the present bill. His letter upon this subject, of which the following is a copy, was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate:

"FEBRUARY 6, 1885.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from the clerk of your committee, under date of February 4, 1885, transmitting, in accordance with the directions of the committee, Senate bill No. 780, 'to regulate appointments in the Marine Hospital Service of the United States,' in which I am requested to furnish the committee with suggestions as I may deem proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage, and in answer to respectfully inform you that the bill is in accordance with the various recommendations of this Department that have been made from time to time based upon reports of the Supervising Surgeon-General.

"It appears that there is at the present time no law specifically regulating the appointment of medical officers in the Marine-Hospital Service, and the appointments are made in accordance with the general authority conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury, to direct the affairs of the Marine-Hospital Service.

"Hence the propriety of the passage of an act regulating these appointments.

"An examination of the text of the bill shows it to be substantially a transcript of the regulations of the Department which have been in force since 1879, and which were lately repromulgated and approved by the President under date of April 24, 1885. It must be sufficiently obvious to any one that medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service should be thoroughly versed in the different branches of medicine as set forth in the bill, and the incorporation of these requirements in the statutes would seem to be necessary.

"Attention is invited to page lii of my annual report for 1885, pages 11 and 12 of the Report of the Supervising Surgeon-General; also to the letter of Mr. Secretary Sherman, dated January 4, 1880, transmitting to the House of Representatives a draught of a bill having for its object the same purpose as that of the bill now under consideration.

"The present bill, if passed, will place the officers of the Marine-Hospital Service on the same footing as those of the Revenue Marine, and will not materially increase the expense of the service.

"In order to perfect the bill, I suggest that line six (6) be amended by striking out the word 'successful' and substituting the word 'satisfactory' therefor; and after line eight (8) to add the words 'said examination shall be conducted according to rules prepared by the Supervising Surgeon-General, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the President.'

"It is believed that the purposes of the proposed law will be more effectually secured if the plan of examination shall be fixed as suggested.

"Very respectfully,

"D. MANNING, Secretary.

"Hon. S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
"Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate."

The committee report that they are informed that the present Secretary of the Treasury has indorsed and approved the views expressed in the foregoing letter, and in fact that the bill now pending before Congress was prepared under his supervision and direction.

The committee further report that the officers in the Marine-Hospital Service affected by this bill have, as they are informed, petitioned Congress asking that the bill should become a law. The reasons assigned by them for urging the passage of the bill is, among others, that they should receive their commissions in like manner as medical officers in the revenue-cutter service receive their appointments, and placing them in a position where they would be entitled to equal rank and consideration with officers of the revenue-cutter service, which is in the same Department and is a kindred branch of the public service.

The men composing the branch of the service affected by this bill are men of education, skilled and practiced in the medical profession, and competent and efficient to discharge the duties required of them. They are compelled to pass an examination as strict and thorough as the medical officers in the revenue-cutter service or of the Army and Navy. They are frequently called upon to perform services as important as those assigned to the line of the Army or Navy, for, on the appearance of cholera, yellow fever, small-pox, or other dangerous diseases, they are called to the front and compelled to use every effort to prevent the introduction and advance of contagious diseases into the country, and your committee believe that it is but right and just that they should receive consideration as to rank and position equal at least to that of other officers in the same branch of the service. It does not ask for increased pay or remuneration. It simply asks, so far as the officers of the service are concerned, that the dignity of their station shall be upheld by the commission of the President of the United States.

For the reason that the passage of this bill is asked by the Secretary of the Treasury having this branch of the public service in charge, and also by the officers directly affected by the passage of the bill, your committee are of opinion that the good of the public service requires that the bill should become a law, and they therefore report recommending its passage.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CRISP. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to call up Senate bill 2851, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate Commerce."

The bill was read, as follows:

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall print and keep open to public inspection schedules showing the rates and fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property which any such common carrier has established and which are in force at the time upon its route. The schedules printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places upon its railroad between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force, and shall also state separately the terminal charges and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates and fares and charges. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type, and copies for the use of the public shall be posted in two public and conspicuous places in every depot, station, or office of such carrier where passengers or freight, respectively, are received for transportation, in such form that they shall be accessible to the public and can be conveniently inspected.

"Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act receiving freight in the United States to be carried through a foreign country to any place in the United States shall also in like manner print and keep open to public inspection, at every depot or office where such freight is received for shipment, schedules showing the through rates established and charged by such common carrier to all points in the United States beyond the foreign country to which it accepts freight for shipment; and any freight shipped from the United States through a foreign country into the United States, the through rate on which shall not have been made public as required by this act, shall, before it is admitted into the United States from said foreign country, be subject to customs duties as if said freight were of foreign production; and any law in conflict with this section is hereby repealed.

"No advance shall be made in the rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published as aforesaid by any common carrier in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after ten days' public notice, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect; and the proposed changes shall be shown by printing new schedules, or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept open to public inspection. Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges shall only be made after three days' previous public notice, to be given in the same man ner that notice of an advance in rates must be given.

"And when any such common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, and charges in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers or property, or for any services in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule of rates, fares, and charges as may at the time be in force.

"Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall file with the commission hereinafter provided for copies of its schedules of rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published in compliance with the requirements of this section, and shall promptly notify said commission of all changes made in the same. Every such common carrier shall also file with said commission copies of all contracts, agreements, or arrangements with other common carriers in relation to any traffic affected by the provisions of this act to which it may be a party. And in cases where passengers and freight pass over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several common carriers operating such lines or routes establish joint tariffs of rates or fares or charges for such continuous lines or routes, copies of such joint tariffs shall also, in like manner, be filed with said commission. Such joint rates, fares, and charges on such continuous lines so filed as aforesaid shall be made public by such common carriers when directed by said commission, in so far as may, in the judgment of the commission, be deemed practicable; and said commission shall from time to time prescribe the measure of publicity which shall be given to such rates, fares, and charges, or to such part of them as it may deem it practicable for such common carriers to publish, and the places in which they shall be published.

"No advance shall be made in joint rates, fares, and charges, shown upon joint tariffs, except after ten days' notice to the commission, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect. No reduction shall be made in joint rates, fares, and charges, except after three days' notice, to be given to the commission as is above provided in the case of an advance of joint rates. The commission may make public such proposed advances or such reductions in such manner as may, in its judgment, be deemed practicable, and may prescribe from time to time the measure of publicity which common carriers shall give to advances or reductions in joint tariffs.

"It shall be unlawful for any common carrier, party to any joint tariff, to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of such persons or property, or for any services in connection therewith, between any points as to which a joint rate, fare or charge is named thereon than is specified in the schedule filed with the commission in force at the time.

"The commission may determine and prescribe the form in which the schedules required by this section to be kept open to public inspection shall be prepared and arranged, and may change the form from time to time as shall be found expedient.

"If any such common carrier shall neglect or refuse to file or publish its schedules or tariffs of rates, fares, and charges as provided in this section, or any part of the same, such common carrier shall, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed, be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any circuit court of the United States in the judicial district wherein the principal office of said common carrier is situated, or wherein such offense may be committed, and if such common carrier be a foreign corporation in the judicial circuit wherein such common carrier accepts traffic and has an agent to perform such service, to compel compliance with the aforesaid provisions of this section; and such writ shall issue in the name of the people of the United States, at the relation of the commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act; and the failure to comply with its requirements shall be punishable as and for a contempt; and the said commissioners, as complainants, may also apply, in any such circuit court of the United States, for a writ of injunction against such common carrier, to restrain such common carrier from receiving or transporting property among the several States and Territories of the United States, or between the United States and adjacent foreign countries, or between ports of transshipment and of entry and the several States and Territories of the United States, as mentioned in the first section of this act, until such common carrier shall have complied with the aforesaid provisions of this section of this act."

SEC. 2. That section 10 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person, acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 for each offense: Provided, That if the offense for which any person shall be convicted as aforesaid shall be an unlawful discrimination in rates, fares, or charges for the transportation of passengers or property, such person shall, in addition to the fine hereinbefore provided for, be liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any officer or agent thereof, or any person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, shall knowingly and willfully assist, or shall willingly suffer or permit, any person or persons to obtain transportation for property at less than the regular rates then established and in force on the line of transportation of such common carrier, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each offense.

"Any person and any officer or agent of any corporation or company who shall deliver property for transportation to any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, or for whom as consignor or consignee any such carrier shall transport property, who shall knowingly and willfully, by false billing, false classification, false weighing, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of the carrier, its agent or agents, obtain transportation for such property at less than the regular rates then established and in force on the line of transportation, shall be deemed guilty of fraud, which is hereby declared a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject for each offense to a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"If any such person, or any officer or agent of any such corporation or company, shall, by payment of money or other thing of value, solicitation, or otherwise, induce any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or any of its officers or agents, to discriminate unjustly in his, its, or their favor as against any other consignor or consignee in the transportation of property, or shall aid or abet any common carrier in any such unjust discrimination, such person, or such officer or agent of such corporation or company, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each offense; and such person, corporation, or company shall also, together with said common carrier, be liable, jointly or severally, in an action on the case to be brought by any consignor or consignee discriminated against in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction for all damages caused by or resulting therefrom."

SEC. 3. That section 12 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That the commission hereby created shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and shall have the right to obtain from such common carriers full and complete information necessary to enable the commission to perform the duties and carry out the objects for which it was created; and for the purposes of this act the commission shall have power to require, by subpœna, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna, the commission, or any party to a proceeding before the commission, may invoke the the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

"And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such common carrier or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books and papers if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding."

SEC. 4. That section 14 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever an investigation shall be made by said commission, it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which shall include the findings of fact upon which the conclusions of the commission are based, together with its recommendation as to what reparation, if any, should be made by the common carrier to any party or parties who may be found to have been injured; and such findings so made shall thereafter, in all judicial proceedings, be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found.

"All reports of investigations made by the commission shall be entered of record, and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the party who may have complained, and to any common carrier that may have been complained of.

"The commission may provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use, and such authorized publications shall be competent evidence of the reports and decisions of the commission therein contained, in all courts of the United States, and of the several States, without any further proof or authentication thereof. The commission may also cause to be printed for early distribution its annual reports."

SEC. 5. That section 16 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 16. That whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate, or refuse or neglect to obey or perform any lawful order or requirement of the commission created by this act, not founded upon a controversy requiring a trial by jury, as provided by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, it shall be lawful for the commission or of for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply in a summary way, by petition, to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the common carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be; and the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter, on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable: and such notice may be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents, or servants, in such manner as the court shall direct; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity, and without the formal pleadings and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition; and on such hearing the findings of fact in the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated; and if it be made to appear to such court on such hearing or on report of any such person or persons that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment or any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, against such common carrier, and if a corporation against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to pay such sum of money, not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of $500 for every day, after a day to be named in the order, that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and such moneys shall be payable as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining or into court, to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the Treasury; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution, in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal; but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon; and such court may, in every such matter, order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute the same; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

If the matters involved in any such order or requirement of said commission are founded upon a controversy requiring a trial by jury, as provided by the seventh amendment to the constitution of the United States, and any such common carrier shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey or perform the same, after notice given by said commission as provided in the fifteenth section of this act, it shall be lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement to apply in a summary way by petition to the circuit court of the United States sitting as a court of law in the judicial district in which the carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience as the case may be; and said court shall by its order then fix a time and place for the trial of said cause, which shall not be less than twenty nor more than forty days from the time said order is made, and it shall be the duty of the marshal of the district in which said proceeding is pending to forthwith serve a copy of said petition, and of said order, upon each of the defendants, and it shall be the duty of the defendants to file their answers to said petition within ten days after the service of the same upon them as aforesaid. At the trial the findings of fact of said commission as set forth in its report shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated, and if either party shall demand a jury or shall omit to waive a jury the court shall, by its order, direct the marshal forthwith to summon a jury to try the cause; but if all the parties shall waive a jury in writing, then the court shall try the issues in said cause and render its judgment thereon. If the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under the same regulations now provided by law in respect to security for such appeal; but such appeal must be taken within twenty days from the day of the rendition of the judgment of said circuit court. If the judgment of the circuit court shall be in favor of the party complaining, he or they shall be entitled to recover a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, which shall be collected as part of the costs in the case. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session."

SEC. 6. That section 17 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the commission may conduct its proceedings in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest. Said commission may, from time to time, make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of proceedings before it, including forms of notices and the service thereof, which shall conform, as nearly as may be, to those in use in the courts of the United States. Any party may appear before said commission and be heard, in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the commission shall be entered of record, and its proceedings shall be public upon the request of either party interested. Said commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. Either of the members of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations and sign subpœnas."

SEC. 7. That section 18 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. That each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, payable in the same manner as the judges of the courts of the United States. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $3,500, payable in like manner. The commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such other employés as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties. Until otherwise provided by law, the commission may hire suitable offices for its use, and shall have authority to procure all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid to witnesses in the courts of the United States."

"All of the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners, or by their employés under their orders, in making any investigation, or upon official business in any other places than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission."

SEC. 8. That section 21 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 21. That the commission shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress, and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary; and the names and compensation of the persons employed by said commission."

SEC. 9. That section 22 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 22. That nothing in this act shall prevent the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the free carriage of destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion, or to municipal governments for the transportation of indigent persons, or to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers under arrangements with the boards of managers of said homes; nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employés, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employés; and nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies: Provided, That no pending litigation shall in any way be affected by this act."

SEC. 10. That the circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction upon the relation of any person or persons, firm, or corporation, alleging such violation by a common carrier, of any of the provisions of the act, to which this is a supplement and all acts amendatory thereof, as prevents the relator from having interstate traffic moved by said common carrier at the same rates as are charged, or upon terms or conditions as favorable as those given by said common carrier for like traffic under similar conditions to any other shipper, to issue a writ or writs of mandamus against said common carrier, commanding such common carrier to move and transport the traffic, or to furnish cars or other facilities for transportation for the party applying for the writ: Provided, That if any question of fact as to the proper compensation to the common carrier for the service to be enforced by the writ is raised by the pleadings, the writ of peremptory mandamus may issue, notwithstanding such question of fact is undetermined, upon such terms as to security, payment of money into the court, or otherwise, as the court may think proper, pending the determination of the question of fact: Provided, That the remedy hereby given by writ of mandamus shall be cumulative, and shall not be held to exclude or interfere with other remedies provided by this act or the act to which it is a supplement.

Mr. CRISP. I do not desire, Mr. Speaker, to occupy the attention of the House by any extended explanation of this bill. I will state, however, that in the main the propositions in this bill are in conformity with the recommendations of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The bill now before the House is a Senate bill. The House Committee on Commerce have recommended the alteration of it in only one particular, and that was in order to give greater publicity to the rates of tariffs or joint tariffs. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may be expected to make some explanation of the changes in the law. I will be perfectly willing to do so if it is thought necessary. The trouble is the hour for consideration to-day is very nearly up, only ten minutes of it remaining. We have only one hour left us to-morrow, and several gentlemen have amendments which they desire to offer. It is exceedingly important, in the opinion of all gentlemen who have considered the question of regulating interstate commerce, that these Senate amendments should become law, and I do not, therefore, care to occupy much time. Perhaps I ought, however, to point out briefly what the changes are.

Mr. CANNON. May I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill and that it continue on until completed?

Mr. CRISP. I would be very glad to have it either to-day or to-morrow, so as to get the bill through, for I am very anxious to finish the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Why not take time enough to consider your bill to-day or to-morrow?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] I ask unanimous consent to finish the consideration of this bill to-day.

Mr. WEAVER. I am very anxious that this bill should be passed as soon as the Oklahoma bill is out of the way, but I will not consent to unanimous consent being given until then.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will yield. I am a friend of the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I am friendly to this bill, too.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], who is in favor of the Oklahoma bill, is away, but will be back in a day or two.

Mr. WEAVER. But the gentleman knows that the friends of the Oklahoma bill have given way to everything. It affects the fortunes of hundreds of thousands of people; it has the right of way and it should not give way to any other proposition.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Why can not the gentleman ask leave that the Committee on Commerce get its two hours now, then you can go on with your Oklahoma bill and still have time before the termination of to-day's session?

Mr. WEAVER. I am not in charge of the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to the proposition that the morning hour for to-morrow be taken now on this bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That will probably finish the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. That would have to be altered now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman who has charge of the bill that he can take the hour to-morrow, and have the amendments printed in the RECORD, so that the House can act understandingly when it comes to the consideration of the bill without the trouble of constantly re-reporting the amendments.

Mr. CRISP. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio a good one, and before asking that, as there are five or six minutes left of the hour, I will merely call the attention of those members of the House who give me their attention to the points wherein this bill changes the bill of last session. In the first place, the bill changes the rule for the publication of rates. The original bill provided that the schedule of rates should be kept in the railroad office. Complaint has been made that such schedules have not been kept in such place and manner that a shipper could go into the office of a railroad and without aid from the agent look at the schedule. The complaint is that the shipper is forced to ask the agent to furnish him the schedule, and sometimes, the agent being busy, this causes delay and inconvenience. The bill seeks to remedy this and make the schedules easily accessible to all.

The next change is as to the reduction of rates. The original bill, the House will remember, required ten days' notice of an advance in the rate; but a reduction of the rate might be made without any notice. The commission recommends some change in that, and suggests that there shall be notice of the reduction of the rates as there is of the advance. Otherwise a favored shipper might be notified in advance by the carrier that such a reduction was to take place, and in that way be benefited. The provision in this bill requires three days' notice of a reduction in the schedule rates, and also prescribes the method in which the publication shall be made.

The third applies to the publication of joint tariffs. The House will remember that the original bill only provided for the publication of the individual tariffs, so to speak, the tariff on each road. This amendment provides for the publication of joint tariffs wherever the roads enter into them, and it requires that notice of them shall be given to the commission, and that they shall not be altered except with the ten days' notice or the three days' notice required, as the case may be. It also provides that the commission shall prescribe the mode and method of publication of these tariffs.

The next is as to underbilling. It provides a penalty for the railway company and also for the shipper for underbilling. It seeks to punish the carrier and also the shipper or any other person who attempts to influence the carrier to give discriminating rates in violation of law.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Was not that provided for, as to the railroads, in the old law?

Mr. CRISP. There was no provision as to the shipper, and I think there was no express provision in reference to underbilling.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I know there was nothing as to the shipper, but I thought there was a provision as to the railroads.

Mr. CRISP. There have been a great many petitions sent to the committee in favor of this provision in the bill, and no opposition to it has appeared either from the railroads or from any quarter.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It can not be made too clear.

Mr. CRISP. The next changes the penalty upon the railroad company for willful violations of the law by discriminations in rates. It makes the penalty, in addition to the fine now provided, imprisonment in the penitentiary for two years—fine or imprisonment, either or both, in the discretion of the court. Of course this applies only to violations which by their very character must be knowingly and willfully committed.

The next proposition is as to the question of damages in cases of such character as under our constitution must be passed upon by a jury. Of course the House understands that there are certain kinds of cases which at common law and under the Constitution must be passed upon by a jury. It is not in our power to clothe the commission or anybody else with authority to hear and determine those cases, because they must be heard by a jury. There is a provision in this bill that cases of that character shall be remanded to the court and that the court shall give them a speedy hearing.

The only other change that I now recall is one making this an independent bureau—that is, repealing the law which requires that all the proceedings of the commission shall go through the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRISP. I now ask unanimous consent that the amendments which gentlemen desire to offer may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And that they be considered in the order in which they amend the act of 1887.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the order in which they apply to the sections of the bill.

Mr. CRISP. I think we had better leave that for the Chair to determine.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

The following amendments were offered:

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa:

To amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, by striking out wherever they occur in said section the words "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions."

To amend section 3 of same act by striking out wherever they occur in said section the words "undue and unreasonable."

To amend section 4 of same act by striking out of said section all after the word "distance" where it occurs before the word "Provided."

To amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, by adding the following section:

"That in all civil actions and proceedings of whatever nature arising under an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and under all acts amendatory thereof, concurrent jurisdiction with United States courts is hereby conferred upon State courts of competent jurisdiction."

To be added after the word "created," in line 10, of section 3 of this act:

"And said commission is hereby authorized and required to prescribe for the use and guidance of said common carriers in making their schedules of rates and charges for transportation of persons and property one uniform classification, and shall transmit copies thereof to said common carriers on or before the first Monday in January, 1889, and thereafter the failure or refusal of any such common carrier to observe said classification in making schedules of rates shall be an unlawful act, and all rates and charges not in conformity with said classification shall be deemed and be unreasonable rates and charges."

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas:

That the following section be added to the said act of 1887:

"That the commission is hereby authorized, empowered, and required to execute and enforce the provisions of this act; and upon the request of said commission the Attorney-General of the United States shall institute and prosecute all necessary proceedings in the proper court for the enforcement of this act and for the punishment of all violations thereof."

Amend by inserting at end of second line:

"That section 5 of said act of 1887 be amended by adding the following: 'That all pools, agreements, understandings, or arrangements of any kind existing or entered into, or to be entered into, by any corporation or carrier subject to this act, and all rebates, drawbacks, underbilling, or devices of any and every kind whatsoever, to regulate or affect interstate commerce, either by maintenance of rates or charges, or by divisions of traffic, territory, or earnings, are hereby made unlawful.'"

By Mr. CABUTH:

In section 2, line 50, after the word "weighing," insert the words "false representation of the contents of the package."

By Mr. LIND:

Amend by inserting after line 6 the following:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance; that it shall also be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation per ton per mile for the contemporaneous transportation of the same class of freight for a longer than for a shorter distance over the same line, in the same general direction, or from the same original point of departure, or to the same point of arrival; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge as high a rate per ton per mile for a longer as for a shorter distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act."

By Mr. NELSON:

At the end of the bill insert:

"Provided further, That any railroad company or other common carrier heretofore or hereafter created or incorporated under the laws of the United States shall, as to the transportation of passengers or property from one place or station to another place or station in the same State, over a route wholly in that State, be subject and amenable to the laws of such State relating to the transportation of passengers and property, the same as though it were a railroad company or common carrier created or incorporated under the laws of that State."

Amendment to come in at end of line 139, page 7:

"That from and after ninety days after this act shall take effect it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to engage in the transportation of passengers or property between the several States and Territories of the United States or between any place in the United States and a foreign country over any route which includes as a part thereof a railway or water route outside of the United States without first having procured a license authorizing such carrier to engage in such transportation, and the conditions of such license shall be the acceptance of this act by such common carrier and of such regulations as said commission may lawfully make in pursuance thereof, and agreement by the common carrier or carriers controlling the portions of such route situated within the United States to become responsible for and guaranty the observance by those controlling the portion of the route outside thereof of the terms and conditions of such license.

"All licenses issued shall be renewable each year, and may be suspended by said commission for cause after full hearing, and, upon the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, may be revoked by said commission for a violation of its terms or of the provisions of this act."

By Mr. GROSVENOR:

First, by adding at the end of section 1:

"Provided, however, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to carry refined oils and other petroleum products, cotton-seed oil, and turpentine for any shipper, in tank or cylinder cars, who shall own, lease, or control the same in any manner, except upon the condition that said carrier shall charge the same rate for the transportation of said products in wooden packages or barrels, in car-load lots, as in said tank or cylinder cars, the said tank and cylinder and said wooden packages and barrels being carried free in each case.

Add at the end of section 2:

"That in all prosecutions under this section on complaint of a citizen of the United States such citizen shall be entitled to have and receive for his own benefit all fines that may be imposed and collected for any violations of said act in any and all prosecutions in which he may be such complainant, if such complainant shall prove that he has been injured by the said violations of this act."

First, by adding at the end of section 1:

"Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, to carry or transport any commodity, for any shipper, in a car or vehicle owned, leased, or in any way controlled by such shipper: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any shipper to make any contract with any carrier to convey the property of such shipper in cars or vehicles owned or controlled by such shipper.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2252) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri.

POSTAL CRIMES.

Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reported back with amendments a bill (S. 3447) amendatory of an act relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned, approved June 18, 1888, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 1, section 2, the word "two" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three;" and in the same section, line 5, strike out the figure "2" and substitute the figure "3."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, my object being to proceed with the consideration of the bill to organize the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, will it be in order to raise the question of consideration against that bill and in favor of the bill for the admission of Dakota?

The SPEAKER. The only way to raise that question is to vote against the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] that I shall be glad to take up the Dakota bill as soon as we have disposed of this one, which I hope will be this afternoon.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER; and there were—ayes 43, noes 13.

Mr. BARNES. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 28 (more than one-fifth of the last vote) voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 26, not voting 194; as follows:

During the vote the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. MCCULLOGH. Mr. Speaker, I would like permission to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN). Was the gentleman in the Hall during the roll-call, and did he fail to hear his name called?

Mr. MCCULLOGH. I was in the Hall long before the roll-call was closed. I can not say that my name was called and I did not hear it, because that would be negative testimony.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The practice is to allow a member's vote to be recorded after the conclusion of the roll-call if he states that he was within the Hall during the call and failed to hear his name called. If the gentleman makes that statement he can vote.

Mr. MCCULLOGH. I can not make that statement; and I do not see how any member could give negative testimony of that kind.

Mr. HATCH. I am paired with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. STEWART], but have voted to make a quorum. As a quorum has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], but have voted to make a quorum. I suppose it is not material whether my vote be withdrawn or not.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. ROGERS] is absent on account of sickness, and is paired.

The following-named members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. MATSON with Mr. HOVEY.
Mr. RANDALL with Mr. DINGLEY.
Mr. WILKINS with Mr. LONG.
Mr. SCOTT with Mr. MCCOMAS.
Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. COOPER.
Mr. HATCH with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. BLISS with Mr. PARKER.
Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. HIESTAND.
Mr. ROGERS with Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan.
Mr. BUCKALEW with Mr. BAYNE.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. FRENCH with Mr. GEST.
Mr. BURNETT with Mr. BROWER.
Mr. SHIVELY with Mr. ATKINSON.
Mr. ELLIOTT with Mr. HARMER.
Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio.
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. SHAW with Mr. WHITE, of Indiana.
Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. HIRES.
Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. ADAMS.

Mr. FELTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The result of this vote has not yet been announced.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. CAMPBELL]. I voted, but desire to withdraw my vote, as I do not know how he would stand on this question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON]. I voted for the reason that I am satisfied he would record his vote in the same way.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Although I am paired with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], I voted to make a quorum.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. COX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has just submitted a motion.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 35.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 26, nays 101, not voting 197; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

On motion of Mr. PAYSON, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, with Mr. ATKINSON for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the pending motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore decided that the nays seemed to prevail.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before calling for a division I desire to state that if gentlemen will allow a call of the House to be ordered, simply to determine who are present and who are not, and I can get in a resolution in regard to absentees, I will myself move to adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

I demand a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 35, noes 43.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is now so near the hour of adjournment that we will scarcely complete the call of the roll before that time, and I hope the call for the yeas and nays will be reconsidered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to waiving the call of the House if gentlemen will allow the gentleman from Iowa to offer a resolution which can be read now subject to objection. If this resolution can be adopted, I do not desire a call of the House.

Mr. BRUMM. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of the roll on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois for a call of the House.

Mr. WEAVER. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw the demand.

Mr. BRUMM. I will withdraw it to permit the resolution to be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, the right to object being reserved?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all leaves of absence, except those granted on account of sickness of members or of their families, are hereby revoked, to take effect on Monday next, September 17; and that the Sergeant-at-Arms notify all members so absent of this order by telegraph.

Resolved further, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to telegraph all members who are absent without leave to return at once.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to revoke the order by which the yeas and nays were demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is, Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. BARNES, Mr. ROWELL, and others objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this could only be presented by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the lateness of the hour, and that the call can not be got through with before 5 o'clock, I move to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 50, noes 33.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not require a quorum.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on ordering the yeas and nays.

The gentleman from New York rises to a parliamentary inquiry and will state it.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The yeas and nays having been ordered by one-fifth of the last preceding vote, can that order be rescinded by a bare majority of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that something of an anomaly is presented by a majority being required to undo what one-fifth only was required to do. But it is only reconsidering the order for the yeas and nays, and the House has still the same power to order them by one-fifth of those present as it had to order them before.

The question now recurs on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put and there were—ayes 56, noes 41.

During the count,

Mr. BLOUNT (to Mr. WEAVER). You can not do anything now, and we may as well adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. I know we can not do anything now, but I give you notice that you shall not do anything else.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Then I move that, as it is a pleasant pastime.

The question was put, and the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN and others. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 40.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was put.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thirty-eight gentlemen have arisen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 41, nays 89, not voting 194; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

On motion of Mr. WEAVER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] for a call of the House, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the House be considered as ordered.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Regular order, then.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is so late I think we ought to reconsider that vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. That has been a failure, and it has been ordered again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that that can not be done a second time. After the vote has been reconsidered, and the yeas and nays have been ordered a second time, it is not in order to reconsider a second time.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 73, nays 32, not voting 219; as follows:

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 11423) for the relief of William F. Evans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11424) to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to settle a claim referred to the Board of Treasury—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GIFFORD: A bill (H. R. 11425) granting to John G. Kleiner, Henry M. McDonald, and Robt. H. Proudfoot the right to construct a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. A. C. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 11426) for the relief of Thornton Lucas—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOOTHMAN: Petition of David Weaver and 13 others, citizens of Middlepoint, Van Wert County, Ohio, against food adulterations—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. RICE: Petition of Stephen Harrison and 37 others, citizens of Isanti and Anoka Counties, Minnesota, for pure food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of 30 citizens of Anoka County, Minnesota, for pure lard and butter—to the Committee on Agriculture.

The following petitions, indorsing the per diem rated service-pension bill, based on the principle of paying all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war a monthly pension of 1 cent a day for each day they were in the service, were severally referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Of W. T. Stevens and 43 others, of Ohio.

By Mr. TARSNEY: Of ex-soldiers and sailors of Ashley, Mich.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, September 13, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional judgment of the Court of Claims, rendered during the present term of that court in favor of Sarah M. Burge, administratrix of Young Burge, deceased, for the sum of $576.99; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Department of Justice, inclosing lists of accounts unpaid in favor of district attorneys for unofficial services for the fiscal years 1886, 1887, and 1888, under section 3, page 109, volume 18 Statutes, and of special assistants to district attorneys under section 833 of the Revised Statutes, disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, construed by them to apply to the appropriations for expenses of United States courts so far as to relieve them from the duty imposed upon them by the act of June 14, 1878, section 4, Supplement to the Revised Statutes, page 350, chapter 191, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have a special order made in these cases for their speedy printing, so that the committee can act upon them soon. The subcommittee now has the bill covering these matters in charge and is making it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I regret to say that owing to the illness of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] he desires to be excused from service upon the committee of conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill. I ask that he be excused and that another Senator be substituted for him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] may be excused as one of the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate on the bill he has named. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection, and the Chair will appoint in place of the Senator from Kentucky the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10687) granting a pension to Charles Junot;

A bill (H. R. 9862) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Bair;

A bill (H. R. 11005) granting a pension to Ester Gaven;

A bill (H. R. 9106) granting a pension to Peter Liner; and

A bill (H. R. 11222) granting a pension to Elizabeth Heckler.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5888) for the relief of W. H. Boyd, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10401) for the relief of J. H. Bugg and others, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3908) increasing the pension of Jesse L. Garrett;

A bill (H. R. 10173) granting a pension to Catharine Mulligan;

A bill (H. R. 10159) granting a pension to Jenny Buell; and

A bill (H. R. 9370) granting a pension to Susan Bates, widow of Thomas Bates, late private Company A, Twenty-sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8553) granting a pension to Arabella Davis;

A bill (H. R. 10708) granting a pension to Jane E. Knoble;

A bill (H. R. 10068) granting a pension to Lieut. Starkey R. Powell, of Black Hawk war;

A bill (H. R. 6409) for the relief of Perry R. Nye;
A bill (H. R. 10171) granting a pension to Rachel Rogers;
A bill (H. R. 11243) granting a pension to Mary E. McQueen; and
A bill (H. R. 200) granting a pension to Walter O. Watson.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2788) granting a pension to Lieut. George T. Russell;
A bill (H. R. 5174) granting a pension to Statira Young;
A bill (H. R. 2471) granting a pension to Anna M. Noyes;
A bill (H. R. 10661) granting a pension to Mrs. Sophia Vogelsang;
A bill (H. R. 10287) for the relief of Catharine Teegardin; and
A bill (H. R. 2472) granting a pension to Lydia A. Eaton.

PACIFIC RAILROAD COMMISSION REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a report from the Committee on Printing on a resolution to print extra copies of the reports of the Pacific Railroad Commission presented yesterday by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who is absent this morning. The concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the House 10,000 copies of the President's message and accompanying reports of the majority and minority of the Pacific Railroad Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Printing will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of the resolution after the word "concurring" and to insert:

That there be printed 15,000 copies of the President's message and accompanying majority and minority reports of the Pacific Railway Commission, 5,000 for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was concurred in.

AMENDMENT TO TRUSTS BILL.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3445) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 9271) for the relief of James A. Stewart; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 221) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a "Joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a 'Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.'"

THE COPPER TRUST.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to introduce a resolution, and I should like to say a few words before presenting it formally to the Senate.

I am very much gratified that the bill reported by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] from the Finance Committee on the subject of trusts and also the amendments proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] show that an interest, and a just interest, is being taken in the danger of these trusts and in devising some way to reach them, and to relieve the people from their operation. But in looking over the bill reported, and also the amendments suggested by the Senator from Mississippi, it seems to me that there is one class of trusts which is not reached by either the bill or the amendments. I do not know that it is possible to reach them, and yet there are some reasons why those particular trusts are more injurious to the people of the United States than those which the bill and the amendments are calculated to reach.

I refer to trusts or syndicates organized entirely outside of the United States for the purpose of controlling the markets within the United States, and it is therefore that I propose to introduce a resolution asking the Finance Committee to inquire with regard to one such trust and see what the facts are in relation to it, and if there may not be some way in which this more dangerous, as it seems to me, or at least equally dangerous, trust or syndicate may be reached and its operations prevented. I refer to what is called the copper syndicate, which, as I understand, is organized entirely by foreign capital and has its headquarters in Paris.

I am not aware that any persons in this country are connected with it. If they are I want that fact brought out. I do not care whom the resolution hits. If it hits any persons in this country I desire to have them hit.

This foreign syndicate, as I understand, controls now the production of all the copper in the world. It has, I understand, made contracts with the owners of mines in the United States to buy the production of the copper mines for a limited period, I think three years, and is now negotiating for the purchase of the production of all the output of copper mines in the United States for twelve years longer.

I do not understand that the price for which they contract for this copper is much above the market price, so that the real profit, the great profit made by the syndicate, goes entirely into the hands of these foreign capitalists and is taken out of the consumers in the United States of all articles into the composition of which copper enters. If it be so that we can reach a trust of that sort, I think it is very desirable to do so, as indeed I will say I am anxious that all unlawful trusts or combinations in this country should be reached and punished.

I do not think the tariff has anything to do with this trust or syndicate; indeed, I do not think it has anything to do with any of them; but I do not speak upon that subject, for when a syndicate controls the production of an article throughout the world it is manifest that it is of no consequence so far as the operations of that syndicate are concerned and the profits, the abnormal and outrageous profits, which they may make out of the consumers of the article, whether there is a tariff upon it or not. The article might be entirely free of duty and yet the same results would follow.

I do not know whether this is the only syndicate which attempts to control the production of any particular article throughout the entire world or not; but if we can not reach this syndicate it is manifest that others will be formed to control the price of every article throughout the entire world which is susceptible of being controlled by a company with great capital and with great enterprise.

In the matter of coffee, perhaps no trust has been already organized which controls so thoroughly the price and production of coffee as does this copper syndicate control the price of copper, but it will be seen how easy it would be for a Paris company organized as this is to control the production and price of coffee, tea, and many of the necessaries of life.

As I said, I am earnestly and anxiously desirous that all such combinations shall be reached, prevented, and punished, and this equally with any of them.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLATT. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire whether a foreign syndicate, combination, or trust controls the production of copper in the United States and has thereby largely increased the price of all articles made therefrom to the consumers; and if so, whether any legislation can be devised to relieve the people of the United States from such injurious effects of the operation of such foreign combination, trust, or syndicate, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. BLAIR. I was going to ask the Senator from Connecticut if any method has occurred to his own mind by which the legislation of this country can control the operations of a foreign syndicate unless we by our tariff laws exclude the commodities of that foreign syndicate?

Mr. PLATT. That would not do it, because it is the production of the United States which they would sell to the people of the United States then.

Mr. BLAIR. If that be so——

Mr. PLATT. No prohibition of importation, let me say, would reach the matter. I will answer the Senator's question. I have not thought of this matter sufficiently to know whether there is any way in which it can be reached, but I have thought of it sufficiently to know that we ought to give serious and earnest consideration to the determination of the question whether we may not relieve against the operations of such a combination as they are carried on in this country. I do not know that there is any means by which it can be reached, but I think the subject worthy of the investigation of the Senate and of Congress.

Mr. BLAIR. It had occurred to me that perhaps the Senator might have in his mind a course of legislation or of action something like what I shall state. The foreign syndicate, controlling the production of the entire world, of course would furnish the only purchaser of the production of the United States; but if in some way the operations of the foreign syndicate could be excluded from the United States, the United States producer would have the market of the United States, and in controlling the market of the United States he might find the natural employment of his capital and his labor in the production, in this instance, of copper. But if the foreign syndicate is beyond the legislative control of the United States, he is left at liberty to contract with the American producer, and the American producer is forced to contract with him in order to find a market, because the foreign syndicate may undersell the American producer, unless he chooses to sell to the foreign syndicate, and thus ruin the American producer unless the American producer of copper finds his protection against that foreign competitor by the protective tariff.

It is in that view that I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut and the Senators who are discussing this matter if it may not turn out that the protective tariff, so far from being the source and origin of trusts, may in the end become our only protection against trusts, especially when they have grown to the magnitude they have already assumed, in some instances controlling the production of the entire world and being located beyond the legislative jurisdiction of this country.

Mr. PLATT. I say very frankly to the Senator from New Hampshire that I do not desire to encumber this investigation with any tariff discussion. If there is relief through taxation or want of taxation in any way, I desire to have the relief granted. I do not care how that relief is reached. I know that we ought to protect our people against such combinations, whether organized here or abroad. Nor do I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire would object to any method by which we could reach and prevent such a trust and its injurious operation upon our citizens.

Mr. BLAIR. By no means; but I am only thinking and anticipating in my own mind a problem of difficulty that everybody must meet with in grappling with this subject. The only means by which we can possibly control the operation of these great trusts, which become dangerous in proportion to their world-wide effect, is by legislative control within our own jurisdiction.

It is perfectly manifest that we can pass no law here which will break up a Parisian corporation or a London corporation, and unless we can control the laws of trade so far as to exclude the property of a foreign syndicate which is produced outside of our own geographical lines, the lines within which our legislation is operative, it seems to me perfectly clear that we can not reach the real difficulty. The only way we can do that is by tariff legislation, not necessarily by a revenue tariff, but protective legislation, that is, legislation which excludes the foreign articlue, whether by a high tax or by an absolute prohibition irrespective of the tax, or by a tax so high as to amount to practical prohibition; for it is manifest that until we have some legislative obstacle of this kind interposed between the American producer and the foreign syndicate controlling all other production in the same direction, as copper in this instance—until we can put that legislative obstacle between our producer and the foreigner we can do nothing which would be effective at all. But if we can exclude the foreigner with his article so that he can not reach the American market, then we have the American production and we have the American market under our own control and can break up any American trust.

I do not wish to take any further time on the matter now.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, yesterday morning I had the honor to present to the Senate some amendments to the bill reported by the Finance Committee on the subject of trusts. In introducing the amendments I made a short explanation of their meaning. I did not go beyond that. I made no reference to or discussion of any party question which might be connected with the general subject. I had supposed, and I now suppose, that the evil of these trusts was so great, the demand for a remedy, if a remedy could be found, was so emergent, that all classes and sections of our country were about equally injured by the operation of these trusts, and that there would be such a unanimous concurrence of opinion on both sides of the Chamber as to the necessity of remedial legislation that about the only discussion which could arise with reference to any proposed remedy would be as to its constitutionality and its efficiency.

However, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], after I took my seat, put to me several interrogatories, and as they were respectfully put and were somewhat, though not very, pertinent to the matter of my amendments, I sought occasion yesterday to respond to the questions which he propounded. But the course which the business of the Senate took was such that another matter of a more exciting nature occupied the attention of the Senate until, I believe, an hour after the usual time of adjournment.

I propose, therefore, as briefly as I can this morning to answer the questions propounded to me by the Senator from Massachusetts, and in doing so I may, and probably will, enlarge a little upon the considerations which induced me to offer the amendments.

I think, if I do not misremember the Senator from Massachusetts, that an inquiry or an objection of this sort was propounded: that in my amendments I had made no description of what trusts were. That is true. What I offered to the Senate were in the nature of amendments to a bill. In the first section of that bill there is a definition of what the trusts prohibited by the bill are. I accepted that definition, and referred, in the various sections of the amendments which I offered, to that section of the original bill—the first section—as containing the accepted definition of trusts. So no complaint can be made against my amendments upon that ground.

I alluded yesterday morning to an apprehension I had that, however well intentioned the bill offered by the Finance Committee might be, it might prove in the end utterly fruitless for want of constitutional power to pass it. I refrained then, as I refrain now, from expressing any positive opinion on that subject. If it were clear, if I were certain that the first section of the bill offered by the Senator from Ohio would be valid constitutional law, I should have less concern for the fate of my amendments than I have now.

I will read in the hearing of the Senate a few extracts from the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which will justify my apprehension, and which I fear (because I am very anxious to have legislation upon this subject) may prove an insuperable obstacle to the efficiency of the measure proposed by the Senator from Ohio. Yesterday I quoted a case, Veazie vs. Moor. I propose to read a short extract from that case.

Mr. BROWN. From what volume does the Senator read?

Mr. GEORGE. Fourteenth Howard, Supreme Court Reports. I read from page 573. The court, referring to the phrase in the Constitution, "commerce with foreign nations" and "among the States," say:

> The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal, between citizens of the same community, or to a polity and laws whose ends and purposes and operations are restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community. Nor can it be properly concluded that because—

This language I desire especially to call the attention of the Senate to, because I fear that in oblivion or forgetfulness of the force of this language the first section of the bill is framed—

> Nor can it be properly concluded that because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures or in the arts may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, that the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected, is legitimately within the import of the phrase "foreign commerce," or fairly implied in any investiture of the power to regulate such commerce. A pretension as far-reaching as this—> would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country, for there is not one of these avocations the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce—

Now, this is the very point in controversy—

And you might say of interstate commerce the same—> and be borne either by turnpikes, canals, or railroads from point to point within the several States towards an ultimate destination like the one above mentioned.

That case was decided in the year 1852. Quite recently it was cited and confirmed by Chief-Justice Waite in the one hundred and second volume of United States Reports as valid constitutional law.

I referred also yesterday to another case as indicating the exact point of time when the power of the States over articles which became the subjects of interstate and foreign commerce ceased and where the power of the United States began. I will read a short sentence from that opinion. In the case of Coe vs. Erroll, one hundred and sixteenth United States Reports, page 525, will be found the following:

> There must be—

Say the court—

> a point of time when they—

That is, subjects of commerce—

> cease to be governed exclusively by the domestic law and begin to be governed and protected by the national law of commercial regulation, and that moment seems to us to be a legitimate one for this purpose, in which they commence their final movement for transportation from the State of their origin to that of their destination.

In view of these and numerous other decisions of the Supreme Court, I have grave apprehensions, I have serious fears, that if we pass the bill unamended which was introduced by the Senator from Ohio and recommended by the Committee on Finance, when we have passed it we shall have done nothing, absolutely nothing, in the way of suppressing trusts. That bill attempts to subject to the power of Congress articles of merchandise before they become objects of interstate or foreign commerce.

For these reasons, my attention having been called to this matter some time ago by my distinguished friend from Texas who sits to my right [Mr. REAGAN], I applied my mind to see if some other mode than direct legislation, which I feared was not warranted by the Constitution of the United States, could not be invented, which would be efficacious to remove from our midst these great pests, these great evils arising in our commercial intercourse. I suggested to that Senator then one of the provisions embraced in my amendments, and that was the provision of outlawry.

That may seem a little harsh, but I may call the attention of Senators who are members of the bar—and nearly all are members of the bar—to the fact that this outlawry of illegal contracts, of illegal combinations, of illegal actions, is one of the oldest and most cherished principles of the common law. I have but to call the attention of Senators to the fact that from the earliest period of the common law it has been settled that where two men or more are engaged in a common illegal business, neither has the right to sue the other with reference to that business. That is expressed in the legal phrase, very familiar to Senators, in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis.

The courts will not interfere. They allow the parties to wrong each other, if it may be called a wrong when two parties being engaged in a common wrong against society, one of them gains an advantage in the wrong of the other. So in this outlawry, which I regard as the most efficacious means that can be provided, I have precedent, I have the common law coming down to us from ages.

I will say no more, then, upon that point, except to indicate to Senators in what a terrible condition these trust-men will be when, if that section is passed, they can bring no suit in a United States court upon any contract made with reference to the trusts. If they sell their goods they can not collect the money.

But that is not all of it, because the amendment refers not only to contracts, but it prevents suits for any wrongs committed to them in reference to these goods. So if there be a trespass committed by an outside party, if there should be such a trespass as the taking of the goods forcibly from the possession of any member of the trust and applying them to the party's own use, there would be no action of trover, no action of detinue, no action of any sort which would enable the party to recover damages. So if there be a contract of transportation made with reference to these goods, the bill of lading would give no right of action for any breach of that contract. If the common carrier burned the goods, converted them to his own use, threw them overboard at sea, or committed any other wrong against them, the owner being a member of a trust would have no remedy.

It strikes me, therefore, that if that section is adopted we should give, as far as the Federal courts are concerned, such a blow to these trusts that they would never be able to recover from it.

I desire also to call attention to a distinction, and a very important distinction, between the remedy given by the Senator from Ohio, where he makes the party injured plaintiff, and the remedy in the amendments which I have had the honor to offer. In the case of a plaintiff, the party has to go out and seek evidence and all that sort of thing, and bring his action. In the case provided for in my amendments he must stand still until the other side move against him, and then he has nothing to do but to prove to the court that the suit is about this illegal trust, and on that he turns the other side out of court, recovers double damages, and has his lawyer's fees paid besides.

Mr. President, after these introductory remarks, I propose now to answer the questions propounded to me by the Senator from Massachusetts. I read from his speech:

Now, I wish the Senator from Texas or the Senator from Mississippi would tell the Senate what information they have. Is there a Standard Oil Trust, for instance, in this country or not? Is the Standard Oil Company one of the trusts which the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Texas want to have suppressed?

In answer to the first branch of that, I am bound to say that, unless my information is wrong, there is a Standard Oil trust in this country. In reference to the second branch of the interrogatory—

Is the Standard Oil Company one of the trusts which the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Texas want to have suppressed?—

I have to say that it is one of the very trusts which I expect to be suppressed by the amendments which I have offered. Certainly coming within the category of the fourth section, to which I have just alluded, that trust will be crippled as any other trust.

But, Mr. President, I have not to rely upon my statement now as to my anxiety to suppress that trust. I have a record in the Senate extending back several years, which shows how I stand on that subject. Before I refer to that record, however, in order to show its pertinency, I will read a question or two propounded by the Senator from Massachusetts to the Senator from Texas, because it shows that in his mind the evil indicated, or the advantage which that trust had as indicated in the question, was one of the great evils to be suppressed:

Mr. HOAR. My question was whether in the transportation of their manufactured products they had not had large advantages by transportation by rail over other manufacturers, referring, as the previous part of his speech shows, by the word "they," to the Standard Oil Company. I think that is about the great advantage which that trust has over all others, and I regard that as one of the great evils which build up trusts and monopolies and crush out little men and little enterprises. So, Mr. President, when the interstate-commerce law was first passed a few years ago, when the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, now absent [Mr. VANCE], offered an amendment expressly and pointedly directed to the suppression of this advantage by requiring all railroad companies to transport goods of small shippers or in small lots at the same price as similar goods were transported for large shippers, I advocated it. It had my earnest support. It did not have the advocacy of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Again, during the present session, being moved thereto by a letter from a competitor of the Standard Oil Company, a small enterprise struggling to maintain its foothold on the commerce of the country against that mammoth and gigantic institution, I offered an amendment to the interstate-commerce bill then pending before us, in the following words:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to carry or transport any commodity for any shipper in a car or vehicle owned, leased, or in any way controlled by such shipper, unless the said common carrier shall charge for the transportation of said goods, wares, and merchandise so carried the same price exactly as would have been charged if the same had been shipped in cars belonging to said carrier: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any shipper to make any contract with any carrier to convey the property of such shipper in cars or vehicles owned or controlled by such shipper.

The point was, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] can well inform the Senate, that this mammoth institution had its own cars, had its own tanks in which oil was transported, and using its cars and using its tanks it had such an advantage over the small shipper as to crush out opposition. I offered that; I supported it with all the ability I possessed; and I withdrew it only, as the Senator from Illinois will remember, because he assured me that the matter should have serious consideration and action at as early a day as practicable.

Thus, Mr. President, it appears, so far as the Standard Oil Company is concerned, I have been advocating measures to destroy its supremacy for years. I have not heard that the Senator from Massachusetts joined with me or with any one else in these efforts. So then so far from wishing to protect or favor the Standard Oil Company, I regard it now as I have regarded it from the time of my commencement in service in this body to be my duty, whenever I could and by whatever lawful means I might use, to destroy the advantages which such corporations had over smaller enterprises.

That the Standard Oil Company may be partly owned by Democrats does not concern me. Why, Mr. President, I have not assumed that these trusts were carried on solely by members of one party to the exclusion of members of the other. If I were called upon to pass any criminal law for murder or mayhem or any other crime it would not be a proper or valid consideration to me to consider whether alone members of one party or of the other were guilty. Sir, it is my duty, and I take pleasure in discharging it, to assist in passing any legislation in this body which will benefit the people of this country, whether that legislation strikes down Democrats or Republicans. No Democrat has a right to my favor if he be engaged in any enterprise against the rights, the interests, the prosperity, or the happiness of the American people.

Further the Senator from Massachusetts asked:

Is it represented in the Cabinet at this moment?

That is another question that was propounded. I have no knowledge that it has any member in the Cabinet. I presume from what I have heard and what occurred yesterday between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] and the Senator from Massachusetts that he must have referred to Mr. Whitney, because he is a relative of some member of the Standard Oil trust. That he entered into it has not been shown; that he has acted in any way improperly with reference to it has not been shown. But this has been shown, or this is known, that not since the foundation of this Government has there been a man in the office of Secretary of the Navy who has been more efficient, more honorable, more devoted to the interests of the country intrusted to his hands than the present Secretary. I might say a little further, in view of the statement which was made on this floor by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] several years ago, that more money had been appropriated by Congress for the Navy since the war and up to a time several years ago than had been appropriated for that purpose from the foundation of the Government up to the close of the war, and yet we were without a navy. There are no scandals in that Department now; no Secor-Robeson contracts there. There is no suspicion resting upon that officer that one single dollar of money appropriated out of the Treasury to be used by him for Navy purpose has not been fully, completely, and honestly applied to that purpose.

Is it represented in the Senate?

What a curious question, a very curious question; but it was propounded. The answer was made yesterday. I will not answer that.

Is it represented in the councils of any important political party in this country?

What does that mean? Does it mean that the Standard Oil Company as a corporation has allied its fortunes with any political party in this country? If it does, I fail to recognize that it belongs to the party to which I belong. Or does it mean that some of the stockholders in it may belong to the Democratic party? If so, it may be so; but it is equally true, as stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] yesterday, that nearly all of them belong to the other party.

Having made that statement, I wish to make another. I do not think the Democratic party is responsible for the fact that some of the members of that trust belong to it, nor do I think the Republican party is responsible for the fact that some of the members of that trust belong to it. Whether they belong to one party or the other, or both, it is the duty of the Senate—and so far as I may be able I will perform that duty—to pass such legislation as may prevent its plundering and injuring the people of this country.

The next question is:

Is there a sugar trust in the country, and have its representatives been consulted in the framing of a great revenue tariff, and had their interests specially looked out for and considered by the representatives of a powerful political party in this country in the framing of the measure which is to tax or affect the article on which every laboring man in this country I think pays more than he does for his flour?

I understand there is a sugar trust, but it is not located in Louisiana. It is not among the farmers and planters of that State who produce sugar. They, as well as we, as well as the rest of the country, are the victims of this trust, which is located in New York, and which is composed of men who do not raise sugar, but who buy sugar and refine it; and unless I have read the history of the times very inaccurately of late, I find that this trust has not only combined to raise the price of the refined article to the consumer, but has combined to reduce the price to the producer. They rob with an equal hand, the producer by combining together and saying to him, "We will not pay but so much for your sugar," and then by an equal combination they say to the consumer, "You shall not have this sugar unless you pay what we demand." As to that trust, if the Senator from Massachusetts has any evidence that it was consulted in relation to the formation of the Mills bill, he is invited, so far as I may extend the invitation, to produce the evidence. I do not believe it exists.

Is there a cotton-oil and cotton-seed trust in this country? Where is that found at work? Does the Senator from Mississippi know something about that? He is a cotton man.

Unfortunately I have some, and those who are dependent upon me have some knowledge by sad experience by being the victims of the rapacity of the cotton-seed-oil trust. I have that evidence that such a trust exists. I do not know who its members are; I can not point to the hand that strikes the blow, but I know the people of Mississippi have felt the blow. Since I have been referred to so pointedly in that matter as if I had some special knowledge on it, I will divulge to the Senate all that I know.

Some years ago cotton-seed mills began to be built in the State of Mississippi. There was one at the capital of the State; there was one over on the Mississippi River, I believe about Greenville; there was one at the residence of my colleague [Mr. WALTHALL]; there was one at Meridian, and one at Vicksburg, in all some six or eight scattered throughout the State; and the first thing I learned about the operations of these cotton-seed-oil mills was that they took the map of the State of Mississippi and drew lines around the various counties and numbered them.

Number 1, embracing six or eight or ten counties, according to the map, belonged to this mill; number 2 belonged to that mill, number 3 to the other, and so on all the way through. So the cotton-seed raised in the district allotted to a particular mill could not be shipped except (for they had an arrangement with the railroads) by extra charges to another. I was raising cotton. I felt the injustice of this, and I entered into a correspondence with a firm in Cincinnati that advertised that they would furnish us what they called plantation cotton-seed-oil mills, mills of small cost, so that each man who had a gin and a steam-engine might press his own cotton-seed. I was about to consummate that arrangement when one day, speaking to a distinguished member of this body, now not here, the then junior Senator from Tennessee, Judge Jackson, as to the enterprise, he informed me, "You had better go slow; there is some sort of an arrangement among the refiners of cotton-seed oil that unless you comply with certain terms"—which I have now forgotten, but they were so onerous that I would not comply with them—"they will not refine your oil, and you will press your cotton-seed, make your crude oil, which in that stage is worthless, and will have nobody to refine it." He gave me some experience on that subject which he had himself. I thereupon desisted.

Then the scene shifted again. The refiners first combined, but yet the mills were independent except in the way I have mentioned. Some two or three years ago they took another step. That came from New York, as I am informed—I do not know it; I believe the statement however—a grand trust was formed and into that trust were put nearly all these independent cotton-seed-oil mills in the South. What happened then? Does the Senator imagine that because I am a cotton man and represent a cotton constituency we feel any interest in preserving and protecting this cotton-seed-oil trust?

I will tell the Senator and the country what happened. Immediately all competition as to the price of cotton-seed was destroyed because there remained but one purchaser and it fixed its own terms, reduced the price paid to the producer 20, 30, and even as much as 40 per cent. That is the interest now that a cotton man, a man from Mississippi representing a cotton constituency, has in drawing a bill intended to put down trusts, to so draw it that the cotton-seed-oil trust shall not be hurt!

While I am on that subject I will allude to another trust not mentioned in my amendments—indeed none of them is specially mentioned but all are included—that is equally as unjust and equally as onerous to the people of Mississippi, and in fact to the whole South, as the cotton-seed-oil trust, and that is what is called the cotton-bagging trust. That is of recent formation, I understand. Some gentlemen, I suppose I ought to say capitalists, some business men have combined and got control of the factories making cotton bagging, the whole of them, and the price of cotton bagging has been advanced very nearly 100 per cent., and the farmers of Mississippi are to-day endeavoring to find some substitute to cover their cotton instead of using this bagging.

I am a cotton man; the people of Mississippi are cotton men; and that is the way that we have been injured by these trusts, and it is one reason why my energies have been somewhat stimulated to provide, if I could, a remedy against them.

I ask the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator who feels any interest in this matter to look over the amendments which I have offered and see if he can find any distinction between one trust and another. Certainly I thought of none when I penned the amendments. Section 4, the first one, outlaws every one of them, as I have explained to the Senate. Section 6, which outlaws them on the railroads, applies to every one of them. Section 5, which provides for a suspension of duties upon similar articles, applies to every one of them. Section 7 is upon a different matter entirely, as I explained yesterday.

So the three sections which I have proposed as amendments to the bill of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] apply in terms fully as much to one trust as another. If the Senator from Massachusetts or if any other Senator can devise anything better, anything more efficient, anything more certain to crush out these infamous combinations against the prosperity and the happiness of the people of this country, he will have my hearty co-operation and my sincere thanks. I would not protect any one of them. I regret that the Constitution of my country does not give me power to deal with them more directly than I think it does.

The Senator from Massachusetts said:

> Why does the Senator steer so carefully in his proposed legislation not to hit these great trusts which stand to the Democratic party at this moment, as a great portion of the people believe, in the relation of Treasury and of Executive control both?

In answer to that question I can not give the reason why, because I have not done the thing. I have endeavored to strike all, and I will venture to say that if the amendments which I have offered (which possibly ought to be perfected in their phraseology or in some way, because they were drawn up in some haste) are adopted, there will not be a trust of any sort in this country in twelve months after the law is passed.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi a question in that connection?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I ask whether his amendment does not in fact—I will not imply in the question that it is done designedly—steer clear of punishing all trusts and combinations to reduce the wages of labor?

Mr. GEORGE. I have not heard of any such trust. If there be any suggested, prepare your amendment and I will accept it. That would be in my opinion the meanest of all the trusts that could be formed.

Mr. HOAR. Amen.

Mr. GEORGE. And if the Senator from Massachusetts knows of the existence of any such trust I hope he will not exhaust his interest in the matter by criticising me for not having provided against it, but will come here and make the provision himself. He shall have my hearty co-operation in the effort.

Another matter. The Senator was very hard to satisfy. He imagined that I had drawn my amendments carefully, not to hurt anybody that was hurting me, and then he objected most seriously to the machinery that I provided for.

> I do not think that it will turn out, on reflection, to be a good plan to put in the hands of a Chief Executive Magistrate of this country (who notoriously owes his election to the aid of the grossest interest of such a trust that exists on the face of the earth, and who has it represented in his Cabinet) the power to strike at these things and to control them and to affect the revenues of the country and the tariff legislation by his unsupported will. It is a good deal like setting the cat to watch the cream, if I may use a homely metaphor.

That is not a very extraordinary power to put in the hands of the President. It is a common power to place in the hands of the President of the United States. I have looked into that matter a little this morning and I find that upon our statute-book there exists an authority given to the President of the United States to reduce taxes on certain contingencies and on certain others to restore them. There are several proclamations of the President of the United States upon that subject very recently. The retaliation bill of 1887 gave the power, not the distinct power given to the President by my amendments, but it gave him even greater power to stop all commercial intercourse with one or our neighbors. I believe the Senator voted for that.

I call his attention to some other instances. In volume 24 of the Statutes at Large, page 1025, will be found a proclamation of the President reducing certain duties and taxes as to the nation of Colombia upon certain conditions. In 1884 President Arthur, in pursuance of law, made a proclamation reducing certain duties imposed by law, under authority given to him that when he was satisfied that certain other things were done by another country he might issue the proclamation. He issued it; the duties were reduced; and President Cleveland discovering that President Arthur had made a mistake as to the existence of the fact upon which he was authorized to issue his proclamation reducing the duties, issued his proclamation restoring them.

Mr. PLATT. To what does the Senator refer?

Mr. GEORGE. Porto Rico and Cuba.

So, sir, it is a very common exercise of power by the President. He does not change the revenue laws. Congress enacts that under a certain state of facts the tax shall be so and so, and under another state of facts the tax shall be thus and so. The President only determines under the power given to him by Congress whether the one state of facts exists or the other.

I believe that I have noticed about everything which the Senator from Massachusetts propounded. I have simply endeavored to answer questions, though of course I have had to make some little explanations, and having done so I will close.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] rose and announced his purpose to answer some six or eight questions which I had proposed to him and to the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] yesterday. The Senator from Mississippi has undertaken to deal at all, I think, with two of those questions only. The remainder of the hour or hour and a half of his speech seems to have been expended in an attempt to commend himself to the admiration of mankind as a wise, industrious, and faithful Senator. I desire for one to express my hearty concurrence with the honorable Senator from Mississippi in that opinion and to admit that he has been faithful, industrious, and, to the extent of his power, considering his political opinions, not an unwise public servant in this regard.

I think, however, neither that Senator nor the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]—whom I saw in his seat a moment ago, but I do not see now—in what he said yesterday will succeed in removing from the minds of the people of this country the belief that the managers of the Standard Oil Company, the two men who notoriously control its concerns and whose vast fortunes are notoriously the result of that monopoly, contribute largely to the treasury of the Democratic party and are largely the directors of its councils. I do not think the people of the country believe that from Democratic power in this Republic there is to come any considerable restraint upon the trusts the Senator from Mississippi has described.

I called attention the other day to a bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and to a speech made by that Senator in its support, in which he denounced the contribution of money to political campaign funds by office-holders in this country. He denounced it as a fruitful source of corruption and of oppression. He provided in his bill that any person holding an executive office in this country who should be guilty of subscribing money for campaign purposes to affect an election should be sent to the penitentiary and should vacate at once the office he held, and should be rendered incapable of holding any office of trust or confidence in this country in the future, and besides be fined not exceeding $10,000.

Now I wish to read an extract from the New York World, the chief Democratic paper in this country, the organ of the Democratic party in this country, of August 27, 1888, setting forth the condition of the subscriptions to the Democratic campaign fund at that time, and the Senate and the country will judge how much the Democratic party in general believe in the denunciations by one Democratic Senator in this body of subscriptions by executive officers to campaign funds and in the denunciation by two more Democratic Senators in this body of the existence of these great trusts. Here is the article:

DEMOCRATIC AMMUNITION—A DOZEN HEAVY CHECKS CONTRIBUTED TO DEFRAY CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.

President Cleveland is not alone in his contribution to the campaign fund. His check for $10,000 on Riggs & Co., the Washington bankers, has been "seen" by Chairman Brice, who "goes" him $10,000 better, and Congressman WILLIAM L. SCOTT does the same thing. That makes a round $40,000 from two of the wealthiest workers in the party. Secretary Whitney chips in $10,000 and Secretary Endicott has followed suit. Don M. Dickinson has made a similar subscription. Pat. Kelly, of Minnesota, Chairman William H. Barnum, Herman Oelrichs, and Oliver Payne each made a like contribution, so that with the President's subscription the grand total foots up $120,000, and many counties are yet to be heard from.

I suppose Oliver Payne is the chief manager of the Standard Oil Company, a gentleman whom the Senator from Ohio, who seemed to know all about it, affirms was one of the Democratic managers of that company. I suppose Mr. William H. Barnum is one of the largest controllers of railroad manufacturing iron monopolies that exist in this country. I suppose Mr. Herman Oelrichs—though that I get from an informant who does not profess himself to be sure, and I may be mistaken about that—is a very extensive brewer. Perhaps I am in error in that particular. Some gentleman on the other side shakes his head, and therefore I will withdraw the suggestion, because, as I stated, it does not stand on such a foundation that I am willing to affirm it. But leaving that out, here is the Democratic campaign fund starting off when $120,000, according to the New York World, subscribed, with the possible exception of one or two of those names, only by executive officers of this country, and the managers of these enormous trusts and monopolies. And how idle is it for the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Texas to say they are opposed to these things as Democrats and that they do not want any partisan suggestions!

The Senator, in his speech which I read from the other day, proceeded to discourse about Mr. Blaine, who was an eminent Republican—quoted a speech of his, and then discoursed about the Democratic party and the Republican party, and how much the Republican party was to blame and the shortcomings of its platform in this matter; and when we disclose these facts in answer to these taunts from the other side of the Chamber, our honorable friends just fold their arms and say Mea virtute ne involvo—do not let us have any partisanship in this thing!

Mr. President, I made two criticisms on the propositions of the Senator from Mississippi. One was suggested by a question just now and one was suggested yesterday. To those criticisms I adhere. There is not any attempt in the Senator's amendment to strike at the worst combination that exists in this country—the combination of men who mean that a large class of its laboring men shall hereafter have the rate of their wages dependent upon the will of their employers. That is a trust which not merely takes possession of and wields business instrumentalities, but by the instrumentalities which we heard described yesterday, and which will be further alluded to to-day by other Senators on this side of the Chamber, is undertaking to make the whole Government of the United States, its elections, its political affairs, the very life and strength and health of the Republic, one vast trust to be managed by the men who very recently were in arms against its life.

The President of the United States, the candidate of the gentlemen on the other side, uttered the words with a meaning and a truth which perhaps he did not intend when he declared that in the eyes of his party public office itself is a public trust. It is a public trust in the eyes of some men, according to the definition which has been given by the Senator from Mississippi.

The other criticism which I made, and to which I adhere, upon his proposition is that it is totally repugnant to all the principles of a free government to put in the hands of the Executive Magistrate, whether George Washington, or Ulysses Grant, or Abraham Lincoln, or any other, the power, and not merely the power, but to make it his absolute duty, when he finds that the price of anything in this country is raised by an illegal combination, to issue his proclamation admitting that article free of duty. There may be ten thousand honest, simple, moderate manufacturers of the article here; there may be one hundred thousand workmen dependent upon an established and protected industry; and yet if a President of the United States of the same way of thinking with the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Texas in regard to the protective policy finds in one corner of a State somewhere, or thinks he finds, a combination to put up the price, the entire protective tariff, with all the industries dependent upon it, it is his duty to strike down and to close it. Under the Senator's proposition the importer who wanted to strike down the tariff might himself collusively create this trust and the President could not escape his duty.

How idle to compare a proposition like that with the proposition which the Senate unanimously voted for last year, that when an American ship was treated with indignity or inhospitality in a foreign port the President should have a discretion to exclude ships from that country from coming into our harbors!

I will not undertake to dwell now on the extraordinary proposition of the Senator's section 7. The workman is as much affected by some of these trusts as the agricultural laborer—as any other class of men.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], whom I do not now see in his seat, uttered on this floor last evening, just before the Senate adjourned, this very remarkable sentence:

I will just say to the Senator—

Before I read it I will say that the Senator from Texas was replying to what he thought was an allusion of mine to Mr. MILLS. I alluded to the Mills bill, and pointed out that the occurrence complained of, suppressing free speech and free elections, had taken place in the very district of the author of the bill, which, as we conceive, is intended to strike a most powerful blow at the manufacturing industries of this country and at the wages of the workingman and the comfort and the dignity of the workingman's home. I made no other allusion to the individual, but this is the reply which the honorable Senator made:

I will just say to the Senator—

I ask the attention of the Senate and of the country to this sentence, which I have obtained from the Reporter—

I will just say to the Senator if there is any one thing in this world that the average Texan would go any number of miles out of his way to kick and kill and destoy, it is a protective tariff.

Some persons are telling us that the difference between the two parties in this country is a difference in schedules and as to tariff reform; that there is not any free-trade crusade; that there is not anybody who wants to break down the protective system; and yet here is this bill coming from Texas, the very essence and result and product of the political opinion which there prevails and which dominates in the councils of the Democratic party, and the Senator from that State, frank and honorable as he always is, announces the shallowness and hypocrisy of that pretense, and says:

If there is any one thing in this world that the average Texan would go any number of miles out of his way to kick and kill and destroy, it is a protective tariff.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Chinese bill.

Mr. PLATT. Let my resolution be acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. REAGAN. Does the Senator ask for a vote on his resolution?

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the resolution passed. I did not introduce it for the purpose of stirring up any discussion, but for the purpose of having the Finance Committee immediately proceed to an investigation which I think it ought to make. There will be plenty of opportunities to speak upon some other question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th of May, 1882.

Mr. REAGAN. Before we pass from the consideration of the resolution I desire to say something on it.

Mr. HOAR. If the Chair please, I rise to a question of order; and that is, that the resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] should be referred. I did not observe the Senator from Wisconsin when I rose; but I see he is now in his seat. I was about to suggest that the resolution offered by the Senator from Wisconsin should go, under the rules, as a matter of course, to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. The discussion on that subject thus far has proceeded by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to say as to that resolution that I am quite willing it shall be referred to the committee, and that such additional debate as is to be had upon it may be had when the resolution is reported back.

I have additional information in regard to the details of the transaction, and I desire to reply to the speech made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], but if the resolution had been called up this morning or had been reached in its order, I should have been obliged, in view of the communications made to me by Senators on the other side giving ample reasons for its being deferred, to allow it to go over until to-morrow anyhow.

Mr. HOAR. Let it go to the committee, and let the debate take place when it comes back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution has not been called up this morning. Does the Senator desire to call it up to be referred?

Mr. HOAR. I call it up.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it in order to call that up and supersede the resolution which is pending before the Senate?

Mr. STEWART. Let it be by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be referred.

Mr. REAGAN. If it is only proposed to refer the resolution, I do not object.

Mr. SPOONER. I am entirely willing that it be taken up now.

Mr. REAGAN. It ought to go to the committee. It ought to go somewhere to be amended and the preamble struck out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is now before the Senate. Unless it be superseded by some other motion, the Chair will hold that that is the matter now pending.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to move——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state the question. The Senator from Nevada has moved that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill in regard to Chinese immigration.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the Senator from Nevada will not insist on that motion for a short time.

Mr. STEWART. I will wait until 2 o'clock, but I shall insist on it then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of the Senator from Connecticut has been considered by unanimous consent, and unless objection is made it will be regarded as under consideration by the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, it occurred to me to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut why a single trust is now to be selected for investigation? I can not understand it. If it was more overwhelming, if it was more mischievous than any other trust, I could understand why it should be singled out——

Mr. STEWART. I did not yield the floor for the purpose of bringing up another subject for general discussion, because there is no time for that. I only yielded for a moment to dispose of the resolution by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Nevada to withdraw his motion until 2 o'clock.

Mr. STEWART. Well, I renew it.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator to withdraw his motion in order to enable me to call up the resolution I offered yesterday, that it may be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada withdrew his motion until 2 o'clock. The resolution of the Senator from Connecticut is pending, and upon that the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I will conclude what I have to say before 2 o'clock.

I desire, Mr. President, to object to the selecting of a particular trust for the purpose of an investigation on that particular trust when there are so many others of more magnitude. If the direction had been made to investigate the mischiefs of trusts generally, I do not think here would be objection to it; but I can not understand the reason for selecting a single trust. Surely it can not be in the mind of the Senator from Connecticut to raise a question about an investigation that shall delay action on the general question of trusts.

Mr. PLATT. May I answer the Senator?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I think I can answer the Senator's inquiry to his satisfaction. I do not know that I can, however, without infringing somewhat upon the parliamentary rules of the Senate.

I understand that there has been in another body a committee which has investigated with regard to several of the more notorious trusts in the country, has taken testimony, and it is in print; and before offering this resolution I took occasion to inquire whether this had been included at all within their investigations, and I found that it had not been. That is one reason why I directed my resolution particularly to this matter.

Another reason is that it seems to stand outside of the usual character of the trusts which we are talking about.

Mr. REAGAN. I know that the resolution speaks of a trust formed in a foreign country over which we have no earthly jurisdiction, and the Senator is so accurate and so good a lawyer that it will not be necessary to argue such a question as that before him. If the powers of Congress enabled us to control a trust in a foreign country, then it would be worth while to make the proposed investigation. If that is the reason, the ground for investigation falls with the statement of the fact that Congress has neither the jurisdiction nor the power under the Constitution to deal with that question.

As to the investigation which is proceeding in the House of Representatives, it is true that the committee have reported a portion of the testimony which they have taken and it has been printed; but the committee have not been discharged and are, as I am informed, continuing their investigation. I trust the Senator will consent to the enlargement of his resolution, if an inquiry is necessary, so as to cover other trusts. Why select the copper trust in reference to any jurisdiction which we have? The Standard Oil trust is one of more magnitude, one that is inflicting greater injury upon the country. The sugar trust is one of great moment. It is inflicting great injury upon the country. The cotton-seed oil trust is one which, as has been explained by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], is inflicting great injury upon a large agricultural portion of the country, which furnishes for foreign export one of the largest items of export from this country—an export of some two or three hundred million dollars a year.

I need not restate what was said by the Senator from Mississippi, but simply confirm by my own knowledge the facts which he stated in regard to the use of that trust for the purpose of controlling absolutely the price of cotton-seed and cotton-seed oil.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 12) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well. I will conclude my remarks in the morning.

Mr. STEWART. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the prevention of the coming of Chinese.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make that motion or ask unanimous consent?

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent, if I can have it.

Mr. HOAR. I desire with the leave of the Senate to correct or qualify a statement I made just now in regard to an individual. It will take but one moment, if the Senate will allow me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. In reading the list just now of the subscribers to the Democratic campaign fund, I stated that Mr. Oelrichs, I had been told, was a brewer by occupation, but I stated at the time that my informant himself was not sure, and that I could not undertake to make the statement positively. A gentleman on the other side of the Chamber shook his head, and I then stated that I presumed the information I had was an error. I am now informed that the gentleman referred to—and this I get from a very high and trustworthy quarter—is the agent of a foreign line of steam-ships, the North German Lloyd, a line of steam-ships which brings over imported labor, so far as it comes from Europe, in large quantities.

So the thing stands that the $120,000 which this great Democratic organ says is subscribed now to their campaign fund is made up from a class of officers whom the Senator from Indiana said ought to be sent to the penitentiary for making such subscriptions, and the representatives and managers of several of the largest trusts in the country, and the agent of a large foreign steam-ship company.

Mr. STEWART. I now ask that we proceed with the Chinese bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the pending order be laid aside informally for the purpose of taking up the bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the bill is before the Senate.

KILLING OF JOSEPH HOFFMAN, WASHINGTON COUNTY, TEXAS.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, the Senator from Nevada yielding to me, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution I offered yesterday may be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the resolution to which he refers be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 221) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a "Joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a 'Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government,'" was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CLAIMS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. CHACE. I move to recommit to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads the resolution directing the Postmaster-General to report to the Senate at its next session amounts due all postmasters, etc., for services between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, etc. There are some verbal errors in the resolution, and I understand the Post-Office Department wish to be heard in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, no objection being made.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WALTHALL, it was Ordered, That Frank Moore have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays on that. I hope we shall have a vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. The motion is to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion was withdrawn by the Senator from Colorado. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to reconsider.

Mr. VEST. I have listened, as I always do, with a great deal of pleasure to my friend from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I have heard him before upon this Chinese question, and I have always been in full accord with him. In 1882 I stood with that Senator in the legislation which was then enacted, and I so stood in opposition to the candidate of the Republican party for the Presidency of the United States.

The contention then upon the part of the opponents of that legislation, as the Senator from Nevada very well knows, was twofold, as I have had occasion to remark here before. First, that it violated the Declaration of Independence, which, to use the language of General Harrison himself in his letter to Rev. Mr. Brent, of St. Louis, was antagonistic to his opinion that this was a free home for all comers. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] delivered an oration which must always rank among the best delivered in the Senate for the last twenty years upon that single ground, that the Declaration of Independence was being trampled under foot, that there should be no distinction as to color in admitting immigrants to this country, and that the old idea of Charles Sumner was the correct one, that the word "white" should be stricken out from the naturalization laws. The second contention was that the legislation of 1882 violated the treaty with China. But the Senator from Nevada and all the Senators from the Pacific coast, Democratic and Republican (for both parties then were represented from the Pacific States), scouted at the idea that the Declaration of Independence had any such meaning, and stood with the overwhelming majority of the Democrats in this Chamber upon the idea that our first duty was to the people of the United States, and that, without any regard to the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence, which had in our opinion no such meaning, we had a right, and it was a sacred duty, to protect ourselves against this deluge of Mongolian immigration.

Mr. President, I want no argument to convince me that the Chinese should not come to this country. I saw them in the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad in gangs of three hundred and five hundred, and I would rather have yellow fever, small-pox, cholera, socially and politically in this country, than to have the Chinese I then saw engaged in the construction of that great road. These laundry people that we see, these domestic servants, do not represent the Chinese immigration to the Pacific coast. A man must have seen, as I saw, the laborers who were brought in by the Six Companies and used in the construction of the Pacific roads in order to appreciate the danger to our civilization, our religion, our morality, by letting such people become citizens or denizens of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. It was cooly traffic.

Mr. VEST. Of course, as my friend says, it was a cooly traffic, and nothing else. I have always stood in opposition with voice and vote against Chinese immigration to this country; but when I listen to my distinguished friend from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and my other friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], when I hear their denunciations of Chinese immigration, when they lift up their hands to the representatives of the people of the United States, and say, "Deliver us from the body of this death," and when I endeavor to deliver them, I can not resist thinking how inconsistent is their position here with the appeal they make to us on the subject of Chinese immigration, when they come to vote on the question of negro domination in the South.

I asked my friend from Nevada in his speech to tell me whether he stood upon the doctrine that the Declaration of Independence made this, in the language of General Harrison, the free home for all comers to this country, and he answered me indirectly by stating that the Chinese constituted a great curse and with an eloquent oration in regard to the evils of Chinese immigration. I want a direct answer. I want to know if the Republican Senators from the Pacific Slope who urge upon us to relieve them from this curse of the Chinese are willing to turn around in a single hour and vote for the most extreme measures to fix upon the white people of the South the curse of negro domination, politically, socially, and otherwise?

I undertake to say that if the right to vote were attempted to be given to the Chinese in the Pacific States, California would fight the Government until the last man fell in defense of what he believed to be his home and his fireside. Even Nevada, with 75,000 people, would take arms against any such thing. But when the negroes of the South, under the leadership of corrupt politicians and reckless demagogues, are given the right to strike down the civilization of those people, what do we hear from the same Senators? "That is right." "That is a different question."

The Senator from Nevada who has just addressed us says that he does not believe that two races so dissimilar as the Chinese and the whites can live in the same country. But when it comes to the negro domination in the South, how is it? The white men of the South must submit to every outrage. If a negro is attacked, if he is hurt in a common mêlée or affray, there must be a committee of inquiry. Upon every hand we hear in this Hall and in the other branch of Congress declarations of the most violent description appealing to the white men of the North to strike down the Democratic party because its home is in the former slaveholding States.

I saw in a speech the other day of Hon. James G. Blaine a defense of the people of the South compared to which nothing I could frame or utter here would amount to anything. Mr. Blaine, in his speech at Bangor, said what I shall read about the people of the South.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the date?

Mr. VEST. Bangor, Me., August 23.

Mr. GEORGE. This year?

Mr. VEST. Of course, this year, 1888. In his recent canvass there against the Democratic party Mr. Blaine said:

> By the census of 1860, seventy-one years after the Federal Government was organized, the Southern States, or, to describe them more accurately, the slaveholding States of the Union, had acquired property amounting in the aggregate to $6,800,000,000. One-third of this total amount, or certainly over $2,000,000,000, was reckoned as the value of the negro slaves. Eleven of these States went into rebellion, at the end of which they had lost the institution of slavery with all of its assured money value. They had used up four annual crops for war purposes. They had lost all their ready money and their stocks. They had lost a quarter of a million of the youth of the land, and had disabled as many more. They had subjected all their fair and blooming section to the blighting and devastating influence of the sword to as great a degree as the Seven Years' War had affected Prussia or the Napoleonic struggles had France. Coming out of the war in 1865 defeated, discouraged, almost destroyed, the Southern people set to work under the influence of the protective system, made good the $2,000,000,000 which they had lost in slaves, repaired the ravages and damages of war, and in the short space of fifteen years they had acquired, by the census of 1880, $2,100,000,000 property more than they had possessed by the census of 1860. If the financial and industrial conditions of the South could be ascertained to-day they would be found to have two and a half to three times as much property as they had on that direful day when they rashly fired on Sumter.

And yet the people who have done this, who have rebuilt their desolated homes, who have made their country, blackened with the fire of war, to bloom and blossom like the rose, who have added a crown of glory to the race to which we belong as imperishable as the language and institutions of the Anglo-Saxon and Caucasian races, we are told by Senators on the other side have spent all their time in drinking mean whisky by day and murdering negroes by night. What honest man in this country believes it?

If the Southern people are the murderers, ruffians, desperadoes, the lawless, vile people who have been described here for the last two days, who believes that they could have done what Mr. Blaine, their most extreme political opponent, in addressing the people of his own State, says?

Sir, I think I can speak of this question without prejudice. I was born a slave-owner in a border State, and I have lived in a border State, where the institution of slavery has never been a great political factor. In the State of Missouri it was with us simply a domestic institution. The owner of the slave worked side by side with his slave in the cotton and the hemp fields upon our prairies. The negroes to-day in Missouri count as nothing in our political struggles. I have come to that age in life when passion has cooled and when judgment asserts its sway, at least to such an extent that I can look back to what has occurred even in this country as upon the other pages of history. I know what the people of the South have suffered; I have seen the knife put to them in the shape of extortion and wrong and robbery; and I say that the man who, understanding what they have gone through and what they have done, does not sympathize with them to-day in working out the most terrible problem ever submitted to any portion of our race, will have no other argument directed by me to him.

When our friends from the Pacific coast speak of the terrible evils of Chinese immigration, let them think of a people proud, prosperous, wealthy, who in the short period of four years saw everything they held dear stricken down, and not a foreign race, not the yellow curse from the Mongolian Empire, but their own slaves made their masters politically, and the power of those slaves pinned upon those States by the bayonets of the National Government. Yet under this curse, with all these disadvantages, with their industrial system destroyed, with their social fabric almost ruined, with their civilization at stake, owning nothing but their own manhood and the soil upon which they lived, they have done what Mr. Blaine has so eloquently depicted in the oration from which I have read.

Sir, I shall continue to vote against Chinese immigration. I shall vote against it in the interest of my own people. In my judgment, when we quit the domain of treaty in 1882 and went into that of legislation, we settled forever in this country the question whether the Chinese should come here, and, much more, the question whether they should ever participate in our political affairs.

I shall vote against the reconsideration of the vote had here in the Senate, and I shall do it upon the ground which I announced a few days ago, that the people of the United States have crystallized and settled forever this question; that it has passed away from treaties; that it is now a question of statutory enactment alone. For my part I shall take no backward step upon this subject. But I want my friends from the Pacific coast to understand that if I could be driven from my own race and people, if I could be induced to vote for a reconsideration and let them wrestle with this Chinese question by themselves, I should be made to do it by the remarkable fact that after they have got rid of the Chinese they want to fasten African supremacy upon the white people of the South.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] alluded to me in the remarks which he made as taking a backward step. I want to say to that Senator and to the Senate that I sympathize deeply and fully with all the evils and all the troubles which he has so elegantly and eloquently described as pertaining to those who live on the Pacific coast.

I know something from sad experience of long years (I am afraid I shall know more from a continuation of that sad experience) about the troubles and the difficulties arising from placing two dissimilar races on the same soil, intermingled locally, but in all else as wide apart as the poles. I can sympathize with him, and I do. From the first moment that my attention was called to this great evil on the Pacific coast I made up my mind that so far as in me lay I would do all in my power to save my brethren in California, Nevada, and Oregon from the terrible fate which the representatives of those States have concurred in inflicting upon my own State.

But, Mr. President, we have other duties to perform. By this bill no Chinaman can enter into the United States who has the solemn contract of this people, made in pursuance of the pledged honor of this Government and of this great people, that having departed from this country he should be allowed to return. I know there are some evils which become so pressing, so emergent, so threatening to the safety and the happiness of a people that before such an evil plighted faith, made under mistake and misapprehension, must give way. The safety of the people is superior, in my judgment, to any treaty obligation.

But we have a treaty pending with China. It is now being considered by China. We asked her again to release us more and more from the shackles which had been put upon our limbs by the Burlingame treaty. She has not had the time usually allotted to her in our negotiations for a consideration of that treaty. We amended that treaty so as to make it suit ourselves. We sent it to her, and I believe that it is our duty to her, and more than that, our duty to our own honor, that she should have a reasonable time in which to consider it.

I do not propose to wait indefinitely. I do not mean that my brothers, men of my race, on the Pacific coast shall suffer indefinitely; but I do believe if we act now with this haste, when the question raised is not more than a week old, without notice to China, without telling her we were tired of her delay—I believe if we thus repudiate our obligations already consummated and the force of a treaty which we have sent to her, we shall do an injustice.

I shall vote for the reconsideration, but if my friends from the Pacific coast, for whose troubles I feel most deeply, desire haste in the negotiation, I shall vote for a resolution requesting the President to notify China within a day named, not far distant, but decent as to time, that if the treaty is not ratified by China we propose to act for ourselves; and if she does not act I shall vote for any measure, however stringent, which may prevent the entrance into our country of another Chinaman. I will go further than that. I know your troubles. I feel for them. In order to save you from the fate which impends over a large portion of this country, I will vote an appropriation from the Treasury to induce those who are here under our plighted faith to leave. There is nothing which appeals more strongly to my mind, to my heart, and to my judgment than a bill to relieve any portion of the American people from an injury arising from a foreign and an alien race.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, when I made this motion to reconsider, I stated at the same time that I did it for the reason that I wished to offer an amendment to the bill. I stated the substance of that amendment which, if there should be a reconsideration, I would still desire to offer, but modified somewhat. I will read to the Senate the amendment, and I shall ask leave to move it, should there be the opportunity. I propose to amend by adding to the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. This act shall not take effect until the 1st day of November next, unless the pending treaty between China and the United States be rejected by China before that time, but shall take effect immediately upon such rejection, and shall be in force upon said 1st day of November, provided said treaty shall not before that time have been ratified by China. If on or before the 1st day of November next said treaty shall have been ratified by China, then this act shall be void. The President shall at once make known the passage of this act, by the most expeditious method, to the Empire of China.

Should there be the opportunity afforded by a reconsideration, I shall offer that amendment and ask the Senate to consider it.

Should there be a reconsideration, for one I should feel strongly bound to oppose any reference of the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration. It came here a week or more since. There was the usual opportunity for reference. Reasons existed which persuaded the Senate that such a reference should not be made, and as an exception to the ordinary rule the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, and has all this time considered the bill upon its merits. I do not suppose any one believes that a reference to the committee would result in throwing any new light upon the subject-matter which is before the Senate. Therefore, as I stated, I shall oppose any further action than such as may be under the control of the Senate directly, in the body at large.

The reason why, having voted for the bill, I made this motion to reconsider I have stated briefly, and I wish to state it again, as it was several days since that I did so.

It will be remembered that the bill was hurried to its final stages beyond the reach of amendment, and by an agreement, such as we hold to be binding in honor upon every Senator, a time was fixed for taking the vote upon the passage of the bill. Before that vote was to be taken I stated that I should vote for the passage of the bill, but should have moved an amendment had there been an opportunity to do so. I stated then the nature of the amendment, which is substantially the same as this amendment, only the time mentioned was sixty days, while this is made the 1st of November.

So I feel that I, having kept faith with the Senate and helped to keep the faith of the Senate so far as the taking of the vote upon the final passage of the bill is concerned, if my convictions lead me that way, I do what I ought to do in making the motion to reconsider.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to suggest——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BLAIR. I yield for a suggestion.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think the faith of the Senate has been kept, and I wish to state why I think so. I have always understood that an agreement to take the vote at a given time cut off discussion, and that votes on amendments, motions to reconsider, etc., came within the agreement. The agreement covered a disposition of the whole question. If the Senate makes an agreement to take a final vote upon a measure at a given hour, and it is then left open on a motion to reconsider, and the whole measure is open to discussion after that time, the agreement becomes a nullity. I think the agreement has been violated by any discussion or proceeding other than voting after we came to a vote at the time fixed in the agreement. A motion to reconsider came within the agreement and was not open to debate. The Chair ruled otherwise. I shall want it understood, if I ever become a party to another such agreement, that it is to be the old-fashioned agreement which disposes of the question at the time fixed. The agreement in this case was good for nothing, because it did not dispose of the question.

Mr. BLAIR. The suggestion of the Senator from Nevada has never been heard in this body before to my knowledge. I do not believe it was ever heard in any deliberative body whatever before. Certainly I never before heard it or heard of it. The right to make a motion to reconsider inheres by virtue of the individual who makes it having voted for the bill. I understand, and the ruling of the Chair is in accordance with my understanding——

Mr. STEWART. The Senator misstates my position. I say that he had a perfect right to move to reconsider and make all the motions he pleased, but the subject-matter was to be disposed of at the time fixed. The agreement was made with a view that the subject-matter should be disposed of at a given time. Senators might make as many motions to reconsider as they pleased, but the effect of the agreement was to cut off debate. Otherwise it would have no effect.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand the Senator to mean to be understood as saying that, in making the motion to reconsider or in discussing the motion under the circumstances of this case, I was committing any breach of faith.

Mr. STEWART. Not at all. The Chair has ruled that it is open to debate, and I say that abrogates the agreement.

Mr. BLAIR. I am very glad to know that is the Senator's understanding.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to say to the Senator from Nevada that the agreement was that at a named hour a vote should be taken upon the passage of the bill? At that hour the vote was taken. The agreement was executed, it was ended, and afterwards any legitimate question that any Senator chose to raise it was perfectly legitimate for him to raise, and he had all the rights as though no such agreement had ever existed.

Mr. STEWART. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS. And that is the correct ruling of the question.

Mr. STEWART. But I give notice now that I regard an agreement of that kind as worthless and as being against the spirit of such agreements. I have always understood that the purpose of such an agreement was to dispose of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BLAIR. I did not like to exclude the Senator from Nevada from a fair opportunity to express his idea, and if he has done so I shall be glad to proceed.

Mr. STEWART. I undertake to say that it is simply a fraud and a deception to carry out the agreement so far as to vote on one question and then keep the whole subject-matter open and not dispose of the question. Nobody ever understood such an agreement that way before. When we make the next agreement we shall know how far it goes.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not incumbent upon me perhaps to say anything about the words "fraud" and "deception," because they do not apply to my conduct any more than that of the entire Senate, and the ruling of the Chair, and the continuous practice of all parliamentary bodies from the time of Adam until to-day. The Senator from Nevada might well be more choice in his language if he is to introduce a parliamentary practice unknown in civilization.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. I do not care to yield further. The Senator will have his own opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire declines to yield.

Mr. BLAIR. I went through Chinatown, in San Francisco, a few years ago, and the Senator from Nevada, who has spoken this afternoon [Mr. JONES], has depicted nothing that reaches the cold, positive fact. My knowledge of the Chinese situation is of course comparatively slight, but from the moment that I saw that seething, roaring, blood-curdling curse, Chinatown, in San Francisco, I felt as though there had been planted in the vitals of American civilization the seeds of death, unless the upas plant could be rooted up and extirpated.

This bill does not reach the difficulty actually existing. It leaves all that which I saw and what has become worse by subsequent development. It reaches, however, or is supposed to reach, to the exclusion of whatsoever like influence there is yet beyond our shores. So far as that is concerned, it accomplishes an untold good, and so soon as the rules of international procedure and the proper observance of international good faith will permit it should be made operative. There should be no substantial delay.

But the evil which already exists should also be removed, and I believe that evil can be removed under existing law. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] has well stated that there is no Chinese laborer in this country to-day who has not been brought here in violation of our existing laws against the importation of contract labor. I believe that most of those Chinamen, at least all who have arrived here since the enactment of our law against their introduction, can be by force of law removed from the land to-day, and this great continental nuisance, which finds its nucleus there in Chinatown, in the city of San Francisco, can be removed under the ordinary law of the land; and it ought to be abated by State and by national law.

In regard to securing the enactment of this bill into a law, I think the Senate might well consider that there are remaining steps to be taken before it is a law. The signature of the President is indispensable before our friends from the Pacific coast and the rest of the country can find this a law upon the statute-book. We have to consider whether we are going to send to the President a bill which he will feel obliged perhaps by his sense of executive duty to veto, and thus all that we have done will pass for nothing.

We know, or at least it is assumed as the basis of this entire debate, that the bill came originally to the House of Representatives perhaps with Executive sanction. I can not say as to that, but at all events it came to the other House and was passed by the House with the understanding that the pending treaty had been rejected. No one believes that the House would have passed it, or the Senate either, until it was entangled in an agreement to vote at a particular hour, or that the Senate would have thought of passing the bill in its existing form unless it had been based upon the belief that the pending treaty had been rejected by China. The President is in the possession of information which he has imparted to us that the treaty is yet being considered in the ordinary course of negotiation by the Emperor of China. Can we believe, if we send this bill deliberately to the President without modification, that he will sign the bill at all?

I appeal to our friends from the Pacific coast, I appeal to them in the interest of their own purposes, not recklessly to throw away the only chance they may have to obtain this legislation by forcing the Senate to forward to the President a bill which he inevitably, as an honorable Executive, will be bound to reject by his veto. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] does not look very much pleased by that suggestion, but I appeal to the Senators who want this bill to become a law, and are willing to use ordinary prudential reasons in working out their purpose, to send it to the President in such form that he can not, without a serious responsibility to the major part of public opinion of this country, fail to give it his approval, so that it may become a law.

If we consider this bill, if we amend it in the way I have suggested, or some similar way which the wisdom of the Senate may devise, so that China shall have a reasonable opportunity either to ratify the existing treaty and give to us just what the Senate and what the American Executive Government but recently said would be satisfactory on the part of China, or, failing to ratify the treaty by the 1st of November, then we reject it, we nullify it, and pass this bill so that it shall become the rule and the law of the land, and the international law between us and the Empire of China. If we do that, we have maintained faith with China, for we give her a reasonable opportunity to act; we preserve our own honor, we save the danger of losing all this legislation and the taking of this great step forward in the direction that all of us wish to go; we do a prudent thing, which the hot blood of our friends on the Pacific coast seems to render them incapable of doing in their own interest. Can we not wait until the 1st day of November? We are not to remove the evil existing by this legislation. The anti-contract-labor bill which we passed in 1886, if enforced, would remove that evil.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator one moment to ask a question for information? I intended to have asked the question of the Senator from Nevada; but I shall be very glad if the Senator from New Hampshire will give me the information.

Mr. BLAIR. If I can, I will do so.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who spoke a short time ago, said the Chinese brought to this country were brought in under contracts for labor. I wish to inquire of some Senator who made those contracts, whether the people of the Pacific coast or elsewhere? The people who are clamoring so much against this immigration seem to be the people who are making the contracts.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to answer that question?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. The testimony taken in 1878 upon that subject—and it was well understood before the testimony was taken—developed the fact that nearly all the Chinese coming to this country, with hardly any exceptions, came by an arrangement with the Six Chinese Companies.

Mr. BUTLER. With whom are those arrangements made—with the people of the Pacific Slope?

Mr. STEWART. The companies carry them.

Mr. BUTLER. For whom?

Mr. STEWART. For themselves, and then they deal them out as laborers. They have a percentage, they have an interest in the work of these laborers. They pay their expenses here and agree to take them back to China.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator another question? The point I want to get at is, who take these laborers when they come here?

Mr. STEWART. They are taken wherever a market can be found for them.

Mr. BUTLER. In what part of the United States?

Mr. STEWART. On the Pacific coast.

Mr. BUTLER. So that the people themselves on the Pacific coast encourage this immigration by making contracts with the Six Companies. Is that the idea?

Mr. STEWART. They hire this labor, of course.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely. That is the point I want to get at.

Mr. STEWART. People do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I shall be through in a moment.

I am not informed about it, but is it not a fact that the president of the Central Pacific Railroad Company made a contract for ten thousand of these Chinese recently?

Mr. STEWART. I did not hear that.

Mr. BUTLER. My inquiry is whether the president of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD], has not within the last few years made a contract for ten thousand of these people to work on his road.

Mr. STEWART. I never heard of it. I do not want to prolong this debate. I want to get a vote if the Senate will allow us to get a vote, for we have been without a quorum for a week whenever we were about to reach a vote. I should like to have the vote taken.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to say a word I think I can relieve the Senator from South Carolina a little.

When these Chinamen come here they do not come under contract to work for anybody specifically, not even for the Six Companies. In the first place the Six Companies advance the money. They have a rule by which they compel this advance money to be repaid. The companies pay the expenses of the Chinamen here and continue to pay their expenses until they find something to do. You can not go out and hire a Chinaman anywhere; you can not pick up a Chinaman on the street and say to him, "Will you go and do a day's work for me?" At least I have never known anybody who could do it. You have to go to the man who controls the Chinaman. He hires him out. If persons want to use Chinamen and have a place for them to work, they get some man to go and negotiate with the party who owns them. They do not let out themselves.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that, but the point I want to get at——

Mr. BLAIR. Perhaps it would be as well for Senators not to discuss this matter in my time.

Mr. BUTLER. I merely wanted to get the information.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say that the anti-contract-labor law now on the statute-book covers the case upon any state of facts suggested here, whether the Six Companies import these men and let them out or whether the contract be a contract between the American employers and the Chinese laborers before they come here. In either event the existing law would reach the evil if it were enforced; and we have now on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Education and Labor, an amended anti-contract-labor bill which the Senate ought soon, I think, to consider. The present law is somewhat inefficient for the want of its execution being placed in the hands of national officials. If that were done the existing law would undoubtedly be efficient.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator, if the existing law excludes them why is this proposed law wrong?

Mr. BLAIR. If the bill which the Senator has now pending is not directed simply against those who are brought here in violation of the anti-contract-labor law, what I say is that those already here and who ought to be sent home have been, many of them at least, brought here in violation of that law, and that the execution of the existing law would break up the existing evil in San Francisco and elsewhere, and this bill does not touch that evil at all. What we have been discussing here only relates to the increased immigration of the Chinese laborers and of the men who may be coming over here, or having been once here, or fraudulently pretending to have been once here, try to come back upon an existing certificate. That is all.

The enactment of this bill into a law will not reach the evil largely under which they are laboring on the Pacific coast. It leaves it there in all the intensity in which it now exists, leaves these communicable diseases spreading everywhere already, and which will continue to spread and devastate their population, and finally, undoubtedly, reach populations further east unless there be positive and aggressive and additional measures taken to extirpate the evil.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to allude to another aspect of this question, the Declaration of Independence, which has been talked so much about. We have been accustomed, all of us at the North, to consider that the Declaration of Independence did not imply that other and alien races could come here and take possession of all these States. Nobody ever held to any such construction of the Declaration of Independence as that, so far as I know. We have held to the equality of all men, men of all races, so far as civil and personal rights are concerned, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and we hold to those principles still; but those principles can not be made effective and available to ourselves if we yield to others, to an alien and an adverse population the possession of the facilities by which alone these rights can be enjoyed by ourselves.

We have heard of the negroes and of the pitiable condition of the South. I do not think the South asks pity of anybody. They are a proud, self-respecting people, and they need pity not from our people nor from any party whatever, either of the North or of foreign nations; for, strong in their own self-respect and high purposes, they have achieved the great result of the war itself, which was an infinite credit to all that constitutes high courage on the part of the South, and although they failed in the matter of success, yet they have demonstrated that they are worthy of the highest encomiums that can be passed upon American citizenship, regardless of all geographical location. But the negro is a portion of the American people. By the consent of the American people, by the active interference and procurement of the American people he is a portion of the Southern population. By the action of the Southern people and by the action of the Northern people in helping to bring him here, and by the universal acquiescence of all he is now as much a native American as the white man, and he is a part of the industrial development of the South, and by this industrial development he has contributed to the North as well as to the development of the South and to the high status of the South.

Mr. President, there is no comparison between these two races. Because we are opposed to the further immigration of the Chinese, because we are in favor of the elimination of the Chinese from our Northern populations for the present and for the future, it does not follow that we are involved in any inconsistency when we ask that the negro American citizen, born here and with an ancestry as old as our own on this continent, when we ask for him, not social rights, but that he have simply those same civil and personal rights which we demand for the white race. That implies no negro domination over this country. It does not imply in the social sense any negro equality, nor does the negro ask this quality of social association at all. He simply asks, like the white race, to be let alone upon his own homestead in the exercise of his own personal rights, living under the same laws, vindicated by the same courts of justice, and receiving at the hands of the law and at the hands of the institutions which he has himself aided to preserve the same vindication of his life, his liberty, and his right to the pursuit of happiness, and his right of property—precisely the same that the rest of us obtain. We ask for him nothing more, and I am not aware that he asks for himself anything more; and it seems to me that our friends ought to yield to that. Perhaps they do; but certainly in the matter of political rights there is a failure.

There is one thing more, Mr. President. The people of the South ought to consider that the people of the North look perhaps with a special feeling of friendliness towards the colored race for another reason. In the terrible struggle of war, with the balance hanging even, the question as yet undecided, and apparently not to be decided without some outside help, as it seemed, between the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race arrayed in deadly hostility against each other, whether the Government itself could be preserved, the negro cast the weight in the balance which settled the question of unity and the perpetuity of our institutions. We feel some obligation to him for that; and it does not seem to me that our Southern friends ought to complain when we demand that he shall have the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness when he does not interfere with the white man. He is the weaker vessel. His demands have rather more than less of right, it seems to me, and here is this grand resuscitation of the South, this compliment, which is less than the truth, paid by Mr. Blaine in the address from which the Senator from Missouri has read to us this afternoon. But are we to forget, and is the Senator from Missouri to stand here before the Senate and forget, as he seemed to do, that the labor of the colored men of the South has been, if not the chief, at least the equal agency in the accomplishment of this grand resuscitation of that fair country; and is he not to receive some credit for that?

I might well go one step further and inquire if the Senator from Missouri will receive the approbation of his companions in this Chamber or of the Southern people if he will have us to understand that, following out the analogy he entered upon, because he would remove the Chinaman, because he would expel the Chinaman from our borders, would he do that to the Southern negro? No, Mr. President. The truth is just this, the eight or ten millions of the Southern colored population are an integral part of the great unit of the American population. They do their full share in the way of industrial contribution to the greatness of the whole, and the American people as a whole, the South as well as the North, would resent and would by every lawful measure prevent anything like the forcible extradition of the Southern colored man from our shores. Everybody knows that.

But we attack the Chinese upon a different ground altogether, and I say that if we could prudently and with this specific piece of legislation, by the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed, and then by the adoption of some amendment which will carry it into force very soon unless the treaty itself be ratified, we shall secure the great end at which we are all aiming.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I did not get an answer quite satisfactory to the question which I put to the Senator from New Hampshire, for the reason, perhaps, that he was not himself informed on the subject; but I find in the testimony taken several years ago by an investigating committee of the two Houses of Congress the following testimony of a Mr. Pixley, whom I do not know—perhaps some of the gentlemen from that part of the world can tell us who Mr. Pixley is. The third interrogatory put to him was:

Do they come here voluntarily, and by what means do they get here?

This was his answer:

Very many of them undoubtedly come upon their own means. It requires but the little sum of $40. Chinese labor commands in China from $3 to $10 per month. Those who have not the means to come by themselves; after the first came and made money they returned money to aid their friends and relatives, as all our European immigrants in the early times used to do. There are undoubtedly many instances where the Chinese Six Companies, or wealthy members of them, send to bring them here, and order that they may go upon their roll and become laborers, out of which they make money as middlemen or agents. The Central Pacific Railroad demanded 10,000 of these laborers, and this demand was greater than the market afforded. Through the Six Companies they sent their money to China, and brought them here, and that is the way in which they come.

I am quite willing to do anything that I can constitutionally and lawfully do to prevent the evil of which our friends from the Pacific coast ask to be relieved; but, according to the testimony taken before that committee, the people of the Pacific coast themselves are responsible for the evil, and are continuing to be responsible by inviting these very Mongolians, whom they now denounce with so much bitterness, to come into our country, and giving them employment. They must come on some steam-ships that ply between this country and China. They certainly could not exist in this country unless they were employed, and they could not get employment unless they got it through the people on the Pacific coast.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly, because I want information.

Mr. STEWART. Did the Senator vote for the act to prohibit contract laborers being brought to this country?

Mr. BUTLER. Did I approve it?

Mr. STEWART. Did you approve it?

Mr. BUTLER. I think it very likely I did. No doubt I voted for it.

Mr. STEWART. Did the Senator regard it as a reason why that act should not pass that people in this country employed such persons?

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all. I am simply replying now to the demand for such hasty action on the part of the Senate that we shall in violation—as has been stated on this floor—of the solemn obligations of treaties, that we shall without regard to those obligations, as the Senator from Nevada said awhile ago, railroad this bill through this body.

Mr. President, I repeat that I am willing to do anything I possibly can to relieve the situation on the Pacific coast; but before coming to the Senate and demanding at our hands, as they do, that we shall pass this legislation, it does seem to me that they themselves ought to take some steps among themselves to prevent the very evil of which they complain; and yet they seem to have taken no action in that direction. Here is a large corporation in California, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, bringing in 10,000 Chinese laborers at one time and sending the money to China to bring them here, in pursuance of treaty stipulations; inviting them, begging them, asking them, buying them, bribing them to come; and now we are told that in the face of our obligations with a friendly power, in the face of the action of the American people inviting them here under the Burlingame treaty and subsequent treaties, we shall, without regard to the honor of the Government, the honor of the American people, shut the door upon them in the face, as I say, of these stipulations. I think it behooves us as a part of the treaty-making power of this Government to proceed at least with seemly caution and deliberation before doing that; and I can see no possible injury, no wrong, no harm to the people of the Pacific coast if we take that deliberation and caution which a great government ought always to take in dealing with another government, and gentlemen from the Pacific coast should not be clamoring, clamoring, clamoring that Congress shall do something to exclude the Chinese, when they themselves are inviting them and encouraging them by giving them employment.

The Chinaman is not going to stay in San Francisco unless somebody employs him. He is not going to Oregon, or Washington, or Nevada unless he can get employment there. If there is that intense feeling of hostility to the Mongolian and that great fear of his driving out the Caucasian race from the Pacific coast which the Senator from Nevada would have us believe, it seems to me that the commonest dictates of self-preservation and of self-protection would enjoin upon those people the necessity of themselves putting a stop to the evil which they complain of before they come and ask Congress to do it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in voting for the reconsideration of this bill, as I shall do, my sole purpose is to get some amendments upon the bill which I think will improve it very much and relieve us from the difficulties of the situation that are now apparent. I approve the substance, and I think the phraseology also, of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], which would postpone the effect and operation of this proposed statute until, I believe, the 1st of November unless the treaty with China, which is now being negotiated, shall be meanwhile ratified.

I am opposed to sending this bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I think that would be an unnecessary delay; that the Senate having the bill now in its care should prescribe the time when this matter shall become a final legislative act or shall cease to be such. The object of referring it to the committee, if there should be such a motion made, could only, it seems to me, be to delay action, because the Senate understands this question just as well as the Committee on Foreign Relations will understand it, and has all the information necessary to enlightened action upon the bill.

I think that this bill needs amendment in two important particulars besides the one suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. The first relates to the $276,000, which in the fifth article of this treaty we are now negotiating we agree to pay to China, not because we are indebted to China or the Chinese for that amount of money, but because it is a benevolence that accords with our sentiments towards those people, and results from the fact that we have not been able to protect their lives and property in the Territories of the United States owing to the very great distance that those Territories are from the control of the executive department of the Government. It is impossible for us to keep police and soldiery in the different places in the Territories of the United States where Chinese are congregated, for the purpose of preserving the peace.

We see that this race question arises between the laboring men and the Chinamen in different localities in the United States and is totally irrepressible. That is one of the reasons why I am in favor of getting back just as soon as we can to the legislative control of this entire question. I do not believe now that we shall ever be able to control it by any agreement with China. Having proposed that compensation to China under the circumstances and conditions mentioned in that fifth article, which denies any liability of the United States, and the Senate in its ratification of the treaty having also approved of that fifth article, having made no amendment to it, but sent it to China, it would be the proper thing for the Congress of the United States, in the passage of this measure, to put that feature in as a clause of the bill, so that China might not understand that Congress had any mercenary object in view to save $276,000 or any view to revoke that feeling of benevolence in which that appropriation originated and through which it was carried into the treaty.

I propose, if there should be a reconsideration, to submit to the Senate an amendment which I have prepared, the substance of a bill that is before the Committee on Foreign Relations now, that I offered the other day, covering this branch of the case, and I also shall propose another amendment by adding a section, which will read as follows:

SEC. —. That section 12 of said act, approved July 5, 1884, to which this act is supplemental, be further amended, so that Chinese who are required by said act to be sent out of the United States, in accordance with the provisions thereof, may be sent either to the country from whence they came or to China.

Perhaps I had better read the twelfth section of the act of 1882 so as to get it clearly before the Senate:

That no Chinese person shall be permitted to enter the United States by land without producing to the proper officer of customs the certificate in this act required of Chinese persons seeking to land from a vessel. And any Chinese person found unlawfully within the United States shall be caused to be removed therefrom to the country from whence he came, by direction of the President of the United States, and at the cost of the United States, after being brought before some justice, judge, or commissioner of a court of the United States and found to be one not lawfully entitled to be or remain in the United States.

In 1884 we amended that section 12 along with other sections of that law, and I will read the section as it was amended in 1884 to show how the legislation progressed, how it grew, and has not yet attained that growth which is necessary to cover the evil we are trying to prevent:

Section 12 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That no Chinese person shall be permitted to enter the United States by land without producing to the proper officer of customs the certificate in this act required of Chinese persons seeking to land from a vessel. And any Chinese person found unlawfully within the United States shall be caused to be removed therefrom to the country from whence he came—and at the cost of the United States, after being brought before some justice, judge, or commissioner of a court of the United States and found to be one not lawfully entitled to be or to remain in the United States; and in all such cases the person who brought or aided in bringing such person to the United States shall be liable to the Government of the United States for all necessary expenses incurred in such investigation and removal; and all peace officers of the several States and Territories of the United States are hereby invested with the same authority as a marshal or United States marshal in reference to carrying out the provisions of this act or the act of which this is amendatory, as a marshal or deputy marshal of the United States, and shall be entitled to like compensation to be audited and paid by the same officers. And the United States shall pay all costs and charges for the maintenance and return of any Chinese person having the certificate prescribed by law as entitling such Chinese person to come into the United States who may not have been permitted to land from any vessel by reason of any of the provisions of this act."

The practice under that section 12 as amended has been this, as I am informed: The Chinese come into the British possessions on the steam-ships that run regularly now to the coast of China; but the British possessions, in their local legislation, I believe—I think it is not an act of the Dominion Parliament—have provided that every Chinaman who comes there shall pay $50 as head-money on being landed. The object was to tax them so that they would not come there, I suppose. The Chinaman, however, having his real destination in the United States, comes in at Vancouver or Victoria or wherever it is, enters the British possessions, and comes immediately into Washington Territory, or Oregon, or California, or Arizona, or Nevada, all down the coast. They distribute themselves throughout that entire country. When we take them up under this law for having violated the immigration statutes and carry them before a judge or a justice of the peace under the different system of statutes which we have regulating immigration, they are put in the penitentiary and kept there for a term of perhaps six months or a year; I forget the precise provision upon that subject, but I believe it does not exceed a year.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. We are all aware that it is necessary to have some further legislation in the way of a law to exclude them. There have been several bills introduced for that purpose. Mr. FELTON, a member of the other House from California, introduced a bill during this session for registration. That would be necessary in order to distinguish which are which. A bill of that kind will have to be considered by a committee. It will be complicated in details and will require considerable machinery to prevent their coming in from Canada on the north and from Mexico on the south. In that bill we can also make the appropriation that the Senator speaks of. These things can be done, but to do them properly will require some consideration. I suggest to the Senator to let this bill pass, and make the declaration that no more Chinamen shall come, and we will then take up the legislation, which will have to be considered very carefully, and it is very doubtful whether we can complete it at this session.

Mr. MORGAN. I will complete the statement I was making about this immigration before I reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada.

These people come in here and are put in the penitentiary under our laws for a year or less for violating our immigration laws. They stay there until they get through with their little term of service, are well fed and all that, and we turn them out, and then what are we to do with them? The statute says they shall be returned to the country from whence they came. That is construed, I think, rather narrowly myself, but it is construed by the judicial and other officers of the country out there as meaning the British possessions when they come through the British possessions, so that when we go back with the Chinaman, our Chinese ex-convict, we go back to the British line with him, and they charge us $50 head-money for getting him in again. We can not afford to pay it. We have tried to send a good many of the Chinese back into that country, but it would not do.

This all results because we omitted from the twelfth section of the act of 1882 and the act of 1884 the words "or to China." Just put those words in the statute, and then when the convict has served his term, if you choose to punish him, or before that time if you do not choose to resort to the penal laws of the United States for his punishment, we can send him back to China—keep up the current, put him right on board ship, and send him out of the country. That would be a very great relief; and it has occurred to me in trying to formulate bills that were in some sense consistent with our treaty relations and also with our necessities, that perhaps we could do several things that might obviate the coming of Chinese through the British possessions. I suggested in committee—the printed report of what occurred there is before me—that we should provide that no Chinaman, it made no difference what country he came from, should be landed in the United States except at one of the open ports of our country. That would cut off his egress from Mexico into this country and also from the British possessions. We have a perfect right to provide that no Chinese laborer who comes here, whether he has a certificate of having gone back to China and being entitled to return in consequence of any provision of law or treaty, shall come with that certificate unless he comes to an open port of the United States. I have no doubt about our power to provide that, even under the existing treaty, giving it all of its force and efficacy.

But I go further back than that on that question. I hold that China has solemnly declared that she does not want her laborers to come to the United States, and that therefore there is no objection at all now to our assuming the function of legislation that we ought to have assumed the first moment we could. There can not be any objection to it. China consents to it. She does not say that she wants the introduction of these people, these coolies, or whatever you please to call them, to be regulated by treaty, but she wants to prevent their coming, and really I think we are attaching a great deal too much weight and importance to the idea of our honor being involved in the matter of breaking a treaty with China when she herself has declared that she does not want the very thing to take place which we are trying to prevent by our legislation.

China is aware, painfully aware, as she expresses herself, that the Burlingame treaty of 1868 and the treaty of 1880 and all the statutes we have enacted upon that subject are really incapable of protecting the Chinese subjects in the United States against mob violence. I remember when I was in the city of Los Angeles some few years ago, it had been but a few days before that time when twenty-one Chinamen were strung up by halters and hanged, no offense having been committed except that they were Chinamen and in the way; they were a nuisance in that country and the people of Los Angeles made up their minds to get rid of them. There they were strung up on halters and hanged. So we know this turbulence has existed in Washington Territory, in Wyoming, and I believe in Idaho. I doubt if there is a single State or Territory in the West which has not been troubled with the presence of these mobs inflicting violence upon the Chinese. It all argues merely an aversion to that race in consequence of the exhibition of their vices amongst our own people and the contaminating influence of their presence amongst the youth and all classes of the people of the country. These little mobs rise, but they can not exterminate them, and we can not prevent it. All we can do is to keep them out of this country. The Chinese Government understands this just as we do precisely, and has so solemnly declared, and therefore I do not see any reason why we should not proceed to legislate.

The modification of this bill as proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will probably give it a little more of what we call respectability in the eyes of the world by postponing this legislation to see whether or not the treaty is to be ratified, and whether or not the bill that we have passed at the present session of Congress through both Houses and now in the hands of the President to execute that treaty shall become an operative law. Perhaps it would look better, but that is all there is in it. It is a mere question of appearances, for we have arrived, as the Senator from Missouri stated, at that point in American conviction where these people will be excluded from this country, and it is a duty of humanity to exclude them so that they shall not become a means of inflaming the prejudices and passions of mobs for their destruction. It is a very important and a very grave topic, and the gravity of the situation is recognized as perfectly by the Chinese Empire as it is in the United States, and there will be no necessary occasion for any delay, it occurs to me, in perfecting our legislative system upon that subject.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was not here last week when this bill was voted on and had not the opportunity of listening to the arguments advanced in favor of and against its passage. I find, however, that the bill is now before the Senate, under a motion to reconsider. For that motion I shall vote.

I am fully aware of the incubus of these people upon the Pacific coast. I have been there and seen, both in Portland, Oregon, and in San Francisco, Cal., the condition of affairs, and I know that it is a great burden to the people of the Pacific coast to have these persons among them. But they came here under treaty stipulations, and they have a right to be here, therefore, while the obligations of the treaty are recognized to be binding on this country.

I shall not discuss the question as to whether, if we saw proper to abrogate all treaties with China, we might not have the power to return those people to their country. But I find in this bill a provision which excludes Chinese who came here under treaty stipulations and who have departed from this country in accordance with the requirements of our laws, taking with them a certificate of identification. That is the pledged faith of the Government, that those people may return upon the production of that certificate. I think the pledged faith of this Government ought not to be violated.

Mr. MORGAN. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the treaty which was sent to the Senate by the President had precisely that same effect, because that treaty required a new certificate of identification, different from the one that a Chinaman carried out with him, before he could be permitted to return. The Senate, however, not being satisfied with the language employed in the negotiation for the purpose of reaching that result, amended it, so that under the amended treaty that we have sent to China there is no doubt that persons who are absent from the United States now with all those certificates are prohibited from returning.

If the Senator will indulge me one moment I will add one further remark. It may be asked how did that happen, in virtue of what treaty was it that these two Governments took away from an individual man a certificate that had been given to him by the United States and rendered it null and void? It is based upon the fact that the Chinese Government is an absolute despotism and that it has never consented nor have we consented to the full expatriation of a Chinaman if he comes into this country. He remains a Chinese subject in the United States, and the jurisdiction of the Chinese Government has been retained—absolutely and expressly retained—to change the condition of their subjects in respect of their rights of emigration. So that Government did consent in the treaty that was sent here to a regulation which the Chinaman was absolutely prohibited from returning to the United States although he had our certificate. That is the actual situation, and we are not legislating one hair's breadth beyond the doctrine and points that were made expressly both in the negotiation that China authorized her minister to make here and that which remains as we have amended it and sent it back after a vote of the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am fully aware that the treaty as agreed to by China contained the provision referred to by the Senator from Alabama. I voted for that treaty, but I stated at that time, not in the Senate, but in another place, as to that provision that destroyed the effect of our certificate, that were it not for the consent of the Government of China, I could not agree to it. But recognizing that these people are subjects of China, that they acknowledge their allegiance to China, that all their rights, therefore, are dependent upon arrangements made by their Government, even though they may have the certificates of the United States, I consented to vote for the treaty containing the provisions referred to by the Senator from Alabama.

But this is a law of Congress, not a treaty. No consent of the Chinese Government is necessary for us to enact a provision of this kind. It is a provision with which the Chinese Government have nothing to do. It is an agreement with the individual subjects of China—the pledged faith of the Government to these subjects, when they come here under treaty stipulations to return to their own country, that if they took with them a certificate of identification, that should entitle them to a return to this country at any time they saw proper or within a certain limited time. Now, I say that the provisions of this bill violate that pledged faith of this Government, and while I recognize the great evil of the Chinese population on the Pacific coast, while I recognize the desirability of getting clear of them and am willing to go as far as any Democrat can go as to the rights of these people, I ask whether, in the American Senate, a body charged, not only with preserving the healthful condition of our population, but charged with maintaining the honor and good faith of this Government, we are at liberty to ignore the plighted faith of this country even to the vilest man that ever trod the earth.

Sir, we had better move slowly, I think, rather than bring a stain and reproach upon the honor of this Government. I admit the great evil with which we are dealing. I express my anxiety to see these Chinese people not only prohibited from coming to this country, but if we can do it consistently with the obligations that we are under to the Chinese people that are here, I would be willing to see legislation that would remove from this country those that are here. But, sir, in this bill there is a plain declaration that the faith of this Government pledged to these people shall be violated. Hence I want to see the bill reconsidered for the purpose of giving the Senate time, and I shall vote for its reference to the committee for the purpose of giving time to the Senate to deliberate calmly and dispassionately whether they will adopt a bill which no man can say does not violate the pledged faith of this Government to those people that have gone out with the certificate of the Government. Let us be cautious in deliberating. There may be a present necessity that would justify even that extreme measure, but we ought to be satisfied that such necessity exists before we adopt it. I shall therefore vote for the motion to reconsider and I shall vote to refer this bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations that the matter may be properly considered.

I am willing to go as far as any Senator can, so far as I can do it consistently with my ideas of my duty to my Government as well as to those men who have gone away with the certificates of the Government, but I would not willingly aid in tarnishing the fair fame and faith of this Government pledged to these men.

Mr. TELLER. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to facilitate the business of the Senate, and I therefore ask unanimous consent, as I am satisfied there is not a quorum present, that the question may be taken to-morrow at 2 o'clock. I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw his motion and let the vote be taken directly on the motion to reconsider. That will probably avoid a double vote.

Mr. STEWART. I will agree to that if it can be understood that if the vote be reconsidered, and any amendments are offered, there shall be no discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, the Senator can not go beyond the motion in hand. I have known dozens of cases in which that has been tried without result. The Senator can not expect to tie our hands behind our backs even in the case of a proposed amendment. I do not wish to say a word regarding the merits of the proposition, but let us have an understanding that we take the vote at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. Let us test the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the vote on the motion of the Senator from Colorado may be taken to-morrow at 2 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. STEWART. Let us wait till the vote is taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is not a quorum, the unanimous agreement which the Senator wishes to have made can not be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada objects. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BLAIR. It having been stated in the hearing of the Senator from Colorado——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Colorado to withdraw his motion for a moment. I want to make a statement that will not take three minutes, perhaps not one.

Mr. TELLER. I have done that when any Senator wanted to say anything, and I will of course do it for the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn.

Mr. HARRIS. Shortly before the vote was taken on the passage of this bill there was a motion to commit it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I voted for that motion. The motion failed. The question then was on the passage of the bill, and the bill was passed. After its passage the Senator from New Hampshire entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed in order that he might move an amendment that he had read at the Secretary's desk. I was not inclined to reconsider the vote for the purpose of considering that amendment, and more than once I voted against reconsidering, or for laying the motion to reconsider on the table, which is substantially the same thing. Since that time there has been considerable debate upon the general question. Being now, as I was before the passage of the bill, decidedly of opinion that this bill ought to have gone to and been considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations, I shall now vote to reconsider, not for the purpose of considering the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire particularly, but for the purpose of moving (if some other Senator does not move) to commit this bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations, in order that it may be considered there and that the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, or any other amendment that that committee may deem wise, may be reported to the Senate after such consideration. That was all I desired to say.

Mr. TELLER. I now renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada insist on his objection to the consent asked for by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that we had better take the vote at an earlier hour, because we dwindle out here and are without a quorum. I think we had better have it immediately after the morning business.

Mr. HARRIS. The morning business has been cut off for two or three days, and it may take two hours to-morrow to get through the morning business.

Mr. STEWART. But at 2 o'clock Senators leave the Chamber.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, no; they all stay until 2 o'clock at any rate, and if the vote is to be taken at that time they will all stay to have it taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose the Senator goes one step further. Suppose the motion to reconsider prevails and the Senator should offer an amendment? There are two amendments that are now proposed. In that case, while I am perfectly willing to adopt the five-minute rule, I think that to cut off a moderate debate upon those amendments would be wrong. For instance, the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is before me, and I would suggest an amendment probably to that, which he would agree to. I do not think it right to cut off all debate. I am willing to have the vote taken on the motion to reconsider at 2 o'clock to-morrow; but as a matter of course there may be amendments which may be modified in the interest of the bill, and we ought not to cut off our right or power to amend the bill or to amend an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Can we have the five-minute rule then?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing to have a two-minute rule.

Mr. STEWART. So that there may be explanations made, if necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; if we agree to the motion to reconsider. Of course if that motion fails the bill is passed.

Mr. TELLER. I think all we want is to agree to take this vote at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all.

Mr. TELLER. Then if the bill shall be (as I trust it will not be) reconsidered, I do not think we ought to have a limit on debate. I should like to be at liberty, if necessary, to take an hour to speak if I thought that an amendment offered was a very objectionable one. I am anxious to have the bill passed. If we can prevent the amendments, all right; if not, they will have to go on.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Chair what is the matter before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the request of the Senator from Ohio that unanimous consent be given for the taking of the vote on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. To take it on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it include the motion to reconsider if it is not laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. TELLER. In order that there may be no trouble I will withdraw that and let the vote be taken on the motion to reconsider, which is about the same thing.

Mr. BUTLER. That, I think, is much preferable—to vote directly on the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Colorado to withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the question may be taken on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed to-morrow at 2 o'clock without debate. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. At the suggestion of a Senator, I ask permission of the Senate to have printed the amendment proposed by me to this Chinese exclusion bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 109) declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor bill of August 11, 1888; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9271) for the relief of James A. Stewart was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the bill (S. 12) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Missouri to withdraw that motion for a moment in order that I may move for a short executive session.

Mr. VEST. Certainly. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 14, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 13, 1888.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate September 13, 1888.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

William W. Moffett, of the District of Columbia, to be a justice of the peace within and for said District, to be assigned to the city of Washington.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, September 13, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, when the Senate bill No. 2851, relating to internal commerce, was pending in the House yesterday an order was made permitting members who desired to propose amendments to forward them to the Clerk's desk in order that they might be printed in the RECORD. I had already secured recognition from the Chair and had prepared amendments, which, immediately from the order being made, I filed with the Clerk before any one else. I filed three amendments and called the attention of the Clerk to them, and received from him the assurance that mine had been received in advance of any other amendments. I find this morning that, instead of their appearing first in the RECORD, they are last. I can imagine that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] may have had consent of the Chairman to the offering of his amendment in advance, but as against any other amendment than his mine certainly had priority.

The SPEAKER. The amendments were numbered by the Clerk and passed by him to one of the Official Reporters for publication in the RECORD. It may be that the numerical order was not observed in printing them. The correction will be made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, for three days.

To Mr. DUNN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GEST, for ten days, on account of business.

JAMES A. STEWART.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 9271, and that it be put upon its passage. The bill has been reported from the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay James A. Stewart, of Cincinnati, Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $5,000, said sum to be in full payment and discharge of the amount due the said James A. Stewart for services rendered as pilot of Government transports and gunboat from October 6, 1863, to April 30, A. D. 1865.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PENINGTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9271) for the relief of James A. Stewart, report as follows:

The claim is for services rendered as a pilot on Government transports from October 6, 1863, to April 30, 1865. Claim stated at $5,000.

The proofs obtained from the War Department show that James A. Stewart, late private Company L, Fourth Regiment Ohio Cavalry, was enrolled August 27, 1862, to serve three years, reported present for duty to April 30, 1863; from May 1, 1863, to October 30, 1863, absent, detached on escort duty. He was detailed as pilot on the Tennessee River by Special Field Order No. 266, paragraph 3, Department of the Cumberland, October 6, 1863. The records of the War Department show that he remained on duty as pilot to April 30, 1865.

The Quartermaster's Department paid pilots on the Tennessee River $250 per month.

Your committee append to this report a copy of a letter from General W. S. Rosecrans, dated May 1, 1888:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, REGISTER'S OFFICE, May 1, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: James A. Stewart tells me he has a claim before your committee for services as pilot on the Tennessee River, in the Government service during the war.

"When it was necessary to have such services it was found that Mr. Stewart, of the Fourth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, was qualified. He was therefore detailed as pilot, and his services were in such demand from that time that he was kept at it for nearly two years. Being a soldier, however, he was obliged to serve where orders placed him. He got no compensation for these services above his soldier's pay.

"I have no hesitation in saying that this treatment was outrageously wrong, and ought now to be righted.

"Very truly, yours,

"W. S. ROSECRANS.

"Hon. THOMAS R. STOCKDALE,
"Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives."

In view of the foregoing statement of facts your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendment:

In line 6, strike out "five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "four thousand seven hundred."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] that this bill be now considered?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WINONA, MINN.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 2475, to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Winona, Minn.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and internal revenue and other Government offices at the city of Winona, Minn., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $150,000; and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order, and I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees be dispensed with, and that members having reports to present may file them at the Clerk's desk in the usual manner.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON].

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has demanded the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I supposed there was going to be objection to every one of these bills. If there is not, I will withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the objection of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] to the consideration of House bill 9271 is withdrawn, and as that bill was called up first, I ask that it be first considered.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection that bill will come first.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, upon information which I have received since I made the objection, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WINONA, MINN.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] desires to offer a resolution to extend the appropriations——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to withdraw the demand for the regular order. If that is done, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] has the floor upon his request for unanimous consent to pass a bill which was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. All right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read, reserving the right to object.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Permit me to make a statement. This bill has been reported favorably in the Senate and passed there. A bill identical with it has been considered by the House Committee and reported favorably. The House report is more full and satisfactory. I ask that it be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Winona is much the largest city in Minnesota south of St. Paul, and is rapidly increasing in population, business, and wealth.

In 1880 the population was 10,240, in 1885 it was 15,697, and at this time it is about 22,000.

Winona is situated on the Mississippi River, and on the lines of road of the following railroad companies: The Chicago and Northwestern, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Chicago, Burlington and Northern; and it is the western terminus of a line of railroad from Green Bay to the Mississippi River, and the eastern terminus of the Winona and St. Peter Railroad, a line running westerly from the Mississippi River, through Minnesota and Dakota, to the Missouri River.

From the data furnished to your committee it appears that the value of the manufacturing plants in the city is $3,268,000; the number of men employed during the last year in the business of manufacturing is 2,972; the monthly wages (on an average) to the employés of that business is $133,960, and the value of the manufactured product of the year, $6,876,265.

A term of the United States district court has been held there for many years, and by an act passed in the House at this session a term of the United States circuit court is to be held there annually.

There is no Government building in Winona. There was appropriated by Congress, at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, $100,000 to purchase a site and erect a building. Of that sum $15,000 has been used to purchase the site, and the Supervising Architect estimates that not less than $8,000 will be required for heating and $5,000 for constructing approaches, leaving $72,000 for the erection of the building. This sum, in the opinion of your committee, is insufficient. If Winona increases for the next decade as it has for the last, the population will be about 50,000, and it seems to us neither wise nor economical to erect a building that would not be sufficient for the wants of the place a few years hence, or even at the present time.

Your committee therefore recommend that the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, internal revenue, and other Government offices at the city of Winona, Minn., be increased to $150,000. The committee therefore recommend that the bill (H. R. 3400) be amended by striking out the words $200,000, in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof $150,000.

Subject to said amendment, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word to my friend from Minnesota. It appears from this report that the real cost of the site, approaches, etc., will be in the neighborhood of $25,000, $15,000 having already been expended for the site. Now, it does seem to me that, for a town of 20,000 people, an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of a public building is very ample. The great trouble we are encountering in regard to these public buildings is the large amount we are expending in particular localities. It has been shown abundantly that brick is a better material than marble or granite for the erection of public buildings. That is the judgment of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, as expressed to the House committee within a very short time; and the cost of this material is very considerably less. I therefore suggest that $125,000 for the cost of site and building ought to be regarded in this case as sufficient.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, we do not expect to have a public building erected of marble or granite. Let me read a few words from the Supervising Architect. He says:

The present limit of cost is $100,000, of which $15,000 was expended in the purchase of a site, leaving $85,000 for the construction of this building. A building can be erected of sufficient size if constructed of brick, without ornamentation, for $85,000; but if it is desired to erect the same of stone and make it fireproof, it will cost from $60,000 or $70,000 additonal.

A building such as any private individual would construct for his own use under like circumstances would cost, as the architect says, $60,000 or $70,000 more. On examination, the committee, in view of such considerations as my friend from Indiana suggests, has cut down the additional amount to $50,000 instead of $60,000 or $70,000, which the Supervising Architect has declared necessary. To build a structure something like a barn, of plain brick, without stone for window-sills, window-caps, or door-caps is something no one would do in erecting a corresponding building for private purposes, and it would be a discredit to the Government to do it in this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. While I shall not object to the gentleman's request, I must say that the large sums which are being appropriated for the erection of expensive public buildings in particular localities, the expenditures in many cases far exceeding the cost of our county court-houses, where in many instances larger accommodations are required, tend to deprive many of our towns of the chance of getting any public buildings. I represent a city, the largest in my district, with very nearly as much population as this town of Winona, and for that city of Madison, Ind., I have asked, for a public building, an appropriation of only $40,000. I believe that for a plain, substantial building such as the Government ought to have a less sum than that named in this bill ought to be sufficient.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to know the population of Winona.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Twenty-two thousand. Within the last eight years it has increased a good deal more than 100 per cent. The Government will make money by the erection of this building. The interest on the amount to be expended is not near what it will cost the Government to procure the necessary accommodations in rented buildings. Our city is the city of the State, outside of St. Paul. The expenditure proposed in this case is not as much as we are expending there this year upon a county court-house.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I have great sympathy with these gentlemen who desire public-building bills passed, because I have been trying to get an appropriation for a public building at Sioux City, Iowa, which has a population of 32,000. A bill was recently passed by Congress appropriating $150,000 for a public building at that city, but it failed to receive Executive sanction. I merely desired to know about the population and some other facts bearing on the gentleman's case, in order to judge of its merits as compared with the bill in which I have recently been concerned. I assure the gentleman I will sympathize with him from now on until the time Executive action is taken on his bill. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GEAR. I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the bill is not before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees for reports be dispensed with, and that members have leave to file reports at the Clerk's desk.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

REPORTS FILED.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11403) to provide for granting leaves of absence to employés of the Post-Office Department employed in the mail-bag repair shops connected with said Department; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT LAWS.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 4959) to amend section 4965 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN F. RICHARDSON.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8276) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin F. Richardson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL STATIONS, WEST INDIA ISLANDS.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11392) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to establish signal stations on the West India Islands; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER ST. JOHN'S RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. PHELAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 227) requiring the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the St. John's River, Florida, below Palatka, Fla.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY], who desires to offer a resolution extending temporarily the appropriations for the Government.

Mr. FORNEY. On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask the consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled 'A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.'"

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled 'A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government,'" approved September 1, 1888, be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 25th day of September, 1888.

The SPEAKER. This would necessarily have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if the point of order was made.

If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. Res. 221) was considered, ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. GENERAL WARD B. BURNETT.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the special order fixed for to-day, being the pension bill in behalf of Mrs. Burnett. I would like to say that I hope the House will grant this motion to reconsider. I feel very much like exclaiming "Once more to the breach, dear friends, once more!" I am very anxious to have this matter disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 681) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. General Ward B. Burnett.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order this bill to be read the third time.

Mr. STRUBLE. Allow me to correct the Chair in one respect. The motion was originally made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], but being in charge of the bill I call up the motion now to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House reconsider the vote by which it refused to order the bill to be read a third time?

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary question. Can the gentleman from Iowa not call this up at any time, being a privileged motion?

Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to say that I desire to put this bill in such shape that at the next session of Congress I may ask a vote upon its merits.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman had better leave it, then, where it is, for the motion to reconsider is privileged and can be called up at any time.

Mr. STRUBLE. I am advised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] that he intends to call a quorum on the motion, and I ask that it be postponed——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it is not necessary to make an order postponing the consideration of the motion, which is privileged. But if the gentleman desires to dispose of it with certainty at this session of Congress, a day had better be fixed.

Mr. STRUBLE. I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I will not make any further effort to secure consideration at the present session; but on the second Thursday of the next session, if living and well, Providence and the House willing, I shall call up this bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. There is another special pension bill following this, and I ask that it go over until the second Thursday in December. It has been set down for this morning to follow the consideration of the bill just referred to.

The SPEAKER. That was set for consideration on last Thursday, and the recollection of the Chair is that it was postponed to be taken up when called up, after the special order then under consideration, which was the bill known as the retaliation bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. My understanding is that it was to follow the Burnett bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the Journal Clerk that the order to which the Chair refers was the one just called up by the gentleman from Iowa, and not the one referred to by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CHEADLE. Then I was mistaken.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of bills reported from committees. The hour begins at twenty-two minutes past 12 o'clock.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the bill coming over from yesterday is amended by the Committee on Commerce, and I ask that the amendment be first read. It will be found in line 20, on page 2, and also in line 23.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, before that I want to make a proposition to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, who now has the floor, and to other gentlemen here, who, like myself, have offered amendments to the pending bill; that is, we all permit our amendments to be withdrawn, so that the bill may go back to the Senate without amendment, and in that way speedily become a law. The bill has been pressed upon us by all the commercial associations almost throughout the country without any opposition or fault finding, as far as I can learn, in the Committee on Commerce, of which I have the honor of being a member, and without any opposition on the part of the railroad companies. Hence the shippers, as well as the transporters themselves, interested in sending goods over the lines of railroads, and the railroads interested in conveying them, everybody, in fact, concurs in the amendment as passed by the Senate, and the desire is that this bill should soon become a law. Now, I fear that if we go into these amendments—they are very important amendments, all of them, the one offered by myself, as well as those offered by other gentlemen—that we will not get through with the bill to-day in the remaining hour left to the Committee on Commerce, and that the bill pending may be pending for a number of days if it loses its day now. We do not know, in fact, when it will be reached again. So in the interest of the commerce and transportation of the country, I ask that all gentlemen be permitted to withdraw their amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. But I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not take the gentleman from Pennsylvania off the floor to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rose to make a request of the chairman of the committee who had the floor, and instead of simply making a request he is making a speech.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am not making a speech, because I have an amendment to speak to when that amendment comes up.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. We all have amendments.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I am appealing to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to both the gentlemen from Iowa, the gentleman from Minnesota, and others who have offered these amendments, in the interest of the transportation of this country, to let the committee's amendments go and let these amendments go for the present, so that the bill may get back to the Senate and not be hanging up for two or three weeks, and prevent it becoming law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] rose to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. This is an important matter, and it seems to me that notwithstanding it is a railroad measure it ought not to be railroaded through this House. The Senate is not to measure of the duty of this House in reference to matters of legislation. In this bill there are other amendments which will come up to perfect it, in my judgment, that ought to be considered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit me

I will state, notwithstanding I want to perfect the bill, I desire that it shall pass now.

Mr. CRISP. These appeals are simply addressed to individual members. I can not have any control over them whatever. I ask, first, that the Chair——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to know whether this is a general discussion on the bill or on the amendments?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has the floor, and when the general discussion closes the amendments will be taken up and voted upon in order. The first vote is to be taken on the committee amendments.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Unless the gentleman from Georgia permits the consideration of these amendments this bill will not be allowed to pass.

Mr. CRISP. Intimations of this sort are quite unnecessary. I am merely asking in the orderly course of business to take up the committee amendments, which, under the rules of the House, ought to be voted upon first.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understood the gentleman had asked the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is not a question whether the amendments offered by the Committee on Commerce ought or ought not to be passed in the House, but it is a question of whether this bill shall go back to the Senate with amendments. However plain the amendments may be, and however desirable it may be to pass them, I do not want the bill to be delayed any longer. I consider that I have the most important amendments offered to this bill; more important than any other amendment offered by any gentleman on the floor, and I am willing to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw this motion, I think there will be no objection on his part or that of any other member of the House.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not object to it; my only point is to prevent delay.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed, and the Chair will not recognize any further interruption except by his consent.

Mr. CRISP. On page 2, line 20, the Committee on Commerce recommend striking out the word "kept," which refers to the schedules, and insert in lieu thereof, "posted in two public and conspicuous places." That is the first amendment. If there be no objection I should like to have it voted upon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23 it is proposed to strike out the words "in such places and."

Mr. CRISP. That amendment is made necessary by the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. As I stated to the House on yesterday, I am very anxious for the passage of this bill. I have no disposition to prevent any gentleman from offering an amendment. I do not want to prevent the offering of any amendment unless it becomes absolutely necessary for the purpose of passing the bill. I propose now to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] in which to offer his amendments and debate them.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, under the order of the House, I sent to the Clerk's desk, to be printed in the RECORD for information, five amendments to this bill. If it be in order now, I wish to formally offer as amendments to the pending measure the last two in the series of five, and I will ask the Clerk to read them.

Add after the word "created," in line 10 of section 3, the following:

"And said commission is hereby authorized and required to prescribe for the use and guidance of said common carriers in making their schedules of rates and charges for transportation of persons and property one uniform classification, and shall transmit copies thereof to said common carriers on or before the first Monday in January, 1889, and thereafter the failure or refusal of any such common carrier to observe said classification in making schedules of rates shall be an unlawful act, and all rates and charges not in conformity with said classification shall be deemed and be unreasonable rates and charges."

Amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, by adding the following section:

"That in all civil actions and proceedings of whatever nature arising under an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and under all acts amendatory thereof, concurrent jurisdiction with United States courts is hereby conferred upon State courts of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time allotted me in this consideration hour I can but speak briefly with reference to the purposes of the amendments that I offer. I had hoped that during this session I would be permitted to submit extended remarks with reference to the revision and modification of the interstate-commerce law which was passed by the Forty-ninth Congress, but opportunity is denied and I shall have to defer them.

It is not worth while to more than advert to the great power that the highways of this country have over the commerce of the country, or to the unlimited and unrestrained power which they exercised over the entire commerce of the country up to the enactment of the law of February 4, 1887. Even after the enactment of that law we find them exercising more power in this Government and in the management of the highways—the common highways—than is consistent with sovereign power properly exercised on the part of the people.

For instance, in the year 1887, after the passage of the interstate-commerce act, these railroad companies in the aggregate collected, according to Poor's Manual, from the people of this country for transportation of their commerce, nine hundred millions of money, and it is currently reported and generally believed—at least I have never seen it denied in any quarter—that notwithstanding the law as it now exists against discriminations and favoritism, these railroad managers gave back to their favorites along their lines more than one hundred millions of money in the way of rebates. And this sum did not enter into the account of gross earnings, amounting to $900,000,000, but was in excess of that sum, making a grand total of $1,000,000,000, $600,000,000 of which is sheer extortion, being to that extent in excess of a reasonable cost of service, taking the actual value of the roads and equipments, less watered stocks and bonds, as the only just basis on which to estimate rates and charges.

These various lines, according to Poor's Manual, had in operation, in 1886 125,146 miles of road charged up to the country in capital stock, and debt at more than $8,000,000,000, with earnings to the amount of about $800,000,000, whilst for the year 1887, Mr. Poor says, at page 10 of his Manual for 1887, that—

The earnings for 1887 are likely to equal $900,000,000, the increase to equal fully 10 per cent. over that of 1886.

And from the same authority we learn that the roads earned $305 per mile more in 1886 than in 1885, and he adds that—

Hereafter it seems probable that the earnings of our railroads are to increase in ratio considerably greater than the amount of capital invested in them.

And for the benefit of those who are endeavoring to make the people think the interstate-commerce law of last year is a thing of virtue, I call attention to Mr. Poor's observation that—

The general managers of our great lines feel themselves to be much more masters of the situation, as it were, than for some years past.

So it would seem that the railroad owners are well pleased with the law in its present form, which is rather suggestive that substantial amendments are in order if the interests of the people as well as the railroads are to be regarded.

Mr. Speaker, the manner of conducting the business of these highways is not only demoralizing to the management of the roads themselves, but it is absolutely sapping the foundations of business integrity in every commercial circle throughout the length and breadth of this land. The great power that these railroad companies exercise must be defined and limited. The very first step in the direction of doing that is to make the railroad rate a fixed quantity and a known quantity, and the next great thing to be done is to give the courts jurisdiction that will secure the enforcement of the law. As the case now stands, it reminds me of the old gentleman that the agitation of the prohibition question developed in Maine, who announced that he was "in favor of the law, but agin its enforcement." I do not intend to be extravagant, but I undertake to say, after having given this matter careful attention for years, that a statute professing to eliminate discrimination on the part of these railroads, but containing in it the words "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions," is a section that is not even a step in the direction of a limitation upon the power of the railroad companies to discriminate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend explain what he means by the words "uniform classification," as used in his amendment? I do not understand the precise use of the term.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. The Board of Interstate Commerce Commissioners have discussed that question in their report, and if the gentleman had read that report he would understand. It is the classification of railway freights for transportatiron, and that classification should be uniform throughout the entire length and breadth of the land, and should apply everywhere alike to all common carriers subject to the provisions of the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As my friend from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] has studied this question, I trust he will give for my information and that of the House an illustration of the evil of which he complains, and the manner suggested in his amendment for curing it. I am not opposing the amendment at all.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Classification of property is the basis for all freight tariff schedules.

A railway company makes a schedule of rates embracing fixed charges with reference to a given class of freight. They immediately afterward, for the express purpose of evasion and fraud, change the classification of a given article by taking freight from one class to another and placing upon it a higher and a different rate. By this reclassification and change of schedule rates they constantly, in violation of the spirit of the law, practice discrimination and extortion to an unlimited extent. Now, I would like to strike out of this act as it stands the words "under similar circumstances and conditions," and will offer an amendment to that effect if I have the opportunity to do so. I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that any circumstance or condition which is the just basis of a differential charge is so tangible a thing that it is the subject of classification, and can be put in the schedule, and the discretionary power that now rests in the hands of the managers of railroad companies to fix that matter at the time of the shipment will thus be restricted. This manner of establishing and publishing all rates will destroy the dangerous power of the rail common carrier over the commerce of the country.

Mr. GEAR. Will my friend answer a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. GEAR. I agree with him that there ought to be some remedy applied; but would he apply a fixed schedule on certain given classes of freight to all roads?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I would make the rate a fixed quantity; I would make it a known quantity; I would have it posted in conspicuous places in large letters that could be read. Thus, in the sunlight of publicity, the amount of the rate would, I think, largely take care of itself. If this should not prove to be the case, if time should develop the fact that this restriction was insufficient to curb corporation greed and the rates continue still exorbitant in spite of all this light being turned on, we can advance further and fix a schedule of rates; for the country will not stand this robbery.

Mr. GEAR. My friend does not understand my question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said about the surplus in the Treasury; but these great commercial contrivances which permit the railroad and telegraph companies without let or hinderance to charge what they please and give to favored customers, by way of rebates and special rates, whatever advantage they please, is carrying into the hands of a few men in this country much more money than is carried into the Treasury of the United States by exorbitant taxation; and that money is as fully withdrawn from circulation and the channels of trade as the money which goes into the vaults of the United States Treasury.

I can count one dozen men who have more money than is lying idle in the Treasury, and it has been taken from the people in the last few years by exorbitant, extortionate corporate charges more unjust and unreasonable than the tax charges by which the great surplus found its way into the Treasury; and this money is as much withdrawn from the business of the country, and is wielded in its aggregated capacity with more harmful effect, than is the money in the vaults of the Treasury building.

And much has been said about trusts, the commercial monsters that are crushing the life out of competition in all important lines of trade; and just at this time there is a dispute not only as to their nature and functions but as to their origin. In this country trusts are largely, if not wholly, the offspring of the greed and corruption of the owners of railroad property, as the essential element of power in them that enables them to crush out rivals in the line of business in which they are engaged is found in the cheaper freight rates they can obtain. The great Standard Oil trust would not have been possible but for its advantageous transportation arrangements, and most great trusts are on the same footing.

This tremendous power must be taken out of the hands of these soulless corporations, if a just equilibrium in the business and commerce of the country is to be restored.

The amendments I have offered to the original act and to the pending measure, I think, are a long step in the direction of the attainment of that end. Remove the power of discrimination, provide one uniform classification as the basis of all railway freight and passenger charges, and, above all, provide courts available and within the reach of the people for the administration of the law. This will put the corporations on their good behavior, and in case of infractions of the rights of their patrons will give parties aggrieved a chance to be heard where equality between the parties to the controversy will be one of the controlling-elements, as it ever should be, in the administration of justice under the interstate-commerce laws of the country. I hope the pending amendments will be adopted.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I shall not undertake to reply to the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON]. The amendments offered by him were printed in the RECORD so that members might see them this morning. I will say, however, that the Committee on Commerce, in considering this Senate amendment, felt, as seems to have been felt elsewhere, that the law establishing the Interstate Commerce Commission was largely experimental, and that as it has only been in operation about eighteen months it is wise to confine ourselves to such amendments of the act as have been recommended by the Commission themselves, having been suggested by their experience in the administration of the law. The amendments offered by my friend from Iowa are radical. They go back to the old question of State court jurisdiction. I may say that I favored that proposition; it was in the interstate-commerce bill as passed by the House. It was surrendered in conference in order that we might secure the passage of a law on this subject. The committee has now felt, as I feel, and as I hope the House will feel, that having made this surrender, having agreed upon a law, we should give it a fair trial, and should content ourselves with adopting now such suggestions as are made by the commission, with the view of remedying the faults which have been found to arise in its practical administration. Let us give the law a fair test upon this principle, and if it should prove a failure we can then make such changes as may be regarded as necessary.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Has not this proposition with reference to conferring power on the State courts been adopted by this House on three separate occasions—in the Forty-fifth, the Forty-eighth, and the Forty-ninth Congresses?

Mr. CRISP. I think so. This House was disposed to insist upon that proposition; but, as I have stated, when we went into conference we surrendered it. The House having approved that surrender, in order to give this experiment a trial the Committee on Commerce of the House and, I presume, the Senate concluded it would be wise now to make only such amendments in the law as have been suggested by the commission, so that the experiment may be fairly tried.

Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon this amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. CRISP. I am only calling the previous question upon the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. There are two amendments.

Mr. CRISP. My only object is to get a vote on the amendments of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is not pending for the purpose of being voted on. The various amendments presented by members stand in the order in which they were submitted, and I have a right to insist upon their being voted upon in that order. The gentleman from Iowa has been speaking in the general debate, and his sending his amendment to the desk had no other effect than to suggest his own views.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I understood that I formally offered those amendments.

Mr. CRISP. I yielded to the gentleman for the purpose of offering his amendment or series of amendments, and also yielded to him ten minutes for debate. As I understood, the amendment was offered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I also understood that the amendment was formally offered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The general debate had not been closed.

Mr. CRISP. We are not in the Committee of the Whole and there is no such thing as the general debate to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But we have reached the point when these amendments are pending and I think they should be called up in the order in which they have been submitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia to state that he yielded yesterday to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] for ten minutes to submit amendments, and that they were submitted and are printed in the RECORD this morning. Is the Chair correct?

Mr. CRISP. Yes; I yielded to the gentleman from Iowa for ten minutes and I supposed, of course, the House would vote on those amendments and then proceed to the consideration of other amendments which other gentlemen desired to present.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My understanding has been that the amendments were not offered, but merely printed in the RECORD for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the first amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

To amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1886, by striking out wherever they occur in said section the words "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions."

To amend section 3 of same act by striking out wherever they occur in said section the words "undue and unreasonable."

To amend section 4 of same act by striking out of said section all after the word "distance" where it occurs before the word "Provided."

To amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, by adding the following section:

"That in all civil actions and proceedings of whatever nature arising under an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and under all acts amendatory thereof, concurrent jurisdiction with United States courts is hereby conferred upon State courts of competent jurisdiction."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa which has just been read.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. When the vote has been taken on that amendment I wish to know whether the second amendment I offered will not immediately follow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that such was the agreement. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CRISP. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The second amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be added after the word "created," in line 10 of section 3 of this act:

"And said commission is hereby authorized and required to prescribe for the use and guidance of said common carriers in making their schedules of rates and charges for transportation of persons and property one uniform classification, and shall transmit copies thereof to said common carriers on or before the first Monday in January, 1889, and thereafter the failure or refusal of any such common carrier to observe said classification in making schedules of rates shall be an unlawful act, and all rates and charges not in conformity with said classification shall be deemed and be unreasonable rates and charges."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CRISP. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL], a member of the committee, has an amendment, and I will yield to him. How long does he wish?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Five minutes; hardly that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My parliamentary inquiry is this: It was understood yesterday the amendments pending would be considered in the order in which they were offered. Now I submit the amendments I presented yesterday are next in order, so far as that understanding is concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not for the Chair to say what the understanding was.

Mr. CRISP. The understanding is correctly printed in the RECORD. There was some inquiry as to that matter. There was no understanding or agreement. I simply yielded to the gentleman from Iowa to present his amendments. There is no trouble about it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the agreement yesterday was that the amendments should be considered in the order in which they applied to the sections of the bill. The Clerk will read the RECORD.

Mr. CRISP. I do not think it so appears in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRISP. I now ask unanimous consent that the amendments which gentlemen desire to offer may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And that they be considered in the order in which they amend the act of 1887.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the order in which they apply to the sections of the bill.

Mr. CRISP. I think we had better leave that for the Chair to determine.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

Mr. CRISP. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is mistaken.

Mr. CRISP. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask the Clerk to read the proposition submitted by me and which is printed in the RECORD of this morning.

Amendment to come in at end of line 139, page 7:

"That from and after ninety days after this act shall take effect it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to engage in the transportation of passengers or property between the several States and Territories of the United States or between any place in the United States and a foreign country over any route which includes as a part thereof a railway or water route outside of the United States without first having procured a license authorizing such carrier to engage in such transportation, and the conditions of such license shall be the acceptance of this act by such common carrier and of such regulations as said commission may lawfully make in pursuance thereof, and agreement by the common carrier or carriers controlling the portions of such route situated within the United States to become responsible for and guaranty the observance by those controlling the portion of the route outside thereof of the terms and conditions of such license.

"All licenses issued shall be renewable each year, and may be suspended by said commission for cause after full hearing, and, upon the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, may be revoked by said commission for a violation of its terms or of the provisions of this act."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I now ask to have read the paragraph in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 4, which is the resolution of investigation offered by Senator CULLOM, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be, and it is hereby, directed to ascertain and report to the Senate whether any railroad lines located in the United States are owned, operated, or controlled by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or any other Canadian railroad corporation; whether commerce originating in the United States is diverted from American to Canadian lines of transportation, and, if so, to what extent and by what means; and whether there is any discrimination in the charges made for tolls, or otherwise, against American vessels which pass through the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals.

Said committee is further directed to inquire fully into the question of the regulation of the commerce carried on by railroad or water routes between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, and to report what legislation on the subject, if any, is necessary for the protection of the commercial interests of the United States or to promote the enforcement of the "act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

In making the inquiries required by this resolution said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a clerk and a stenographer, to sit during the recess of Congress, and to do whatever is necessary for a thorough investigation of the subject. Any subcommittee may exercise the powers hereby granted to said committee, and the expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers duly approved.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I made the magnanimous offer to the chairman of the committee and other members of the House who have amendments to submit to let the bill pass as it was reported from the Committee on Commerce in the Senate. I do not wish to delay the passage of these very excellent amendments of the interstate-commerce law one minute of time further than is absolutely necessary. Beside that, I have had to-day conversation with several Senators who are members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and they assure me the investigation directed to be made by Senator CULLOM'S resolution, which was unanimously adopted by that body, will be acted on and report made at the next session of Congress as to the control of the Canada Trunk Railway and other railroads over railroads of the United States.

Knowing from the constitutional questions involved in my proposition, as well perhaps as matters relating to our treaties, it will give rise necessarily to debate, and not wishing in any respect whatever to delay or endanger the passage of this measure I will now withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Kansas, of the committee, has an amendment, and I yield to him ten minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which is printed in the RECORD last.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the following section be added to the said act of 1887:

"That the commission is hereby authorized, empowered, and required to execute and enforce the provisions of this act; and upon the request of said commission the Attorney-General of the United States shall institute and prosecute all necessary proceedings in the proper court for the enforcement of this act and for the punishment of all violations thereof."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I now ask the Clerk to read the amendment that is first printed in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at end of second line:

"That section 5 of said act of 1887 be amended by adding the following: 'That all pools, agreements, understandings, or arrangements of any kind existing or entered into, or to be entered into, by any corporation or carrier subject to this act, and all rebates, drawbacks, underbilling, or devices of any and every kind whatsoever, to regulate or affect interstate commerce, either by maintenance of rates or charges, or by divisions of traffic, territory, or earnings, are hereby made unlawful.'"

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the great trouble with the present law is that it is not the duty of any one to enforce it. Reliance for its enforcement was placed upon the interests of the shipper. The idea was that where the law was violated, the shipper, whose interests were at stake, would go into the courts, or go before the commission, and have the remedy provided by the law applied. But, as a rule, there is no large shipper in the United States who dares to apply either to the commission or to the courts. If he does, the railroad corporations have it in their power to crush him by withholding cars, and other devices. The result is that the law to-day stands unexecuted to an alarming extent where these violations occur. The first amendment which has been read simply proposes to give the commission power to execute and enforce the provisions of the present law. It makes it the duty of the existing commission, as the agent of the United States, to see that this United States law is enforced; that is all there is of it. And upon the request of the commission this amendment makes it the duty of the Attorney-General to institute proper proceedings for the execution of the act, and for the punishment of any violations of it. That proposition, Mr. Speaker, is so simple, it is so important to the people of the United States, and must commend itself so strongly to the judgment of the House that it is not necessary, and I shall not take more of the brief time allotted to me for the purpose of arguing it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let us have a vote on that proposition now.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If the gentleman from Georgia is willing to have a vote on that proposition now, and will allow me to resume and occupy the remainder of my time, I am willing.

[Objection was suggested.]

However, the next amendment, Mr. Speaker, is the one in relation to pooling. Undoubtedly it was the intention of the House and of Congress in passing the act—what is known as the present interstate law, as to pooling—to prevent the combination of the roads, by which they annihilate and eliminate all competition between them, and enable themselves to fix any rates they may see fit. But a narrow interpretation has been put upon the word "pooling," and the language of the existing law seems to confine the prohibition of the law simply to pooling for freights. I will read from the original act:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights on different and competing roads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of such earnings, etc.

Now, that has been construed to limit this enactment to a specific formal pooling of freights. My amendment goes somewhat further and provides that all pools or agreements, understandings or arrangements of any kind or character for the maintenance of rates are made unlawful. I find in this morning's Tribune the following statement, dated Chicago, September 12:

ORGANIZING TO RESTORE RATES.

The general managers of the Western roads to-day succeeded in reorganizing the Western, Northwestern, and Southwestern roads under the general name of the Western Freight Association. One form of agreement applies to the whole of this territory, but the association was divided into three sections, J. W. Midgely being elected chairman of the Southwestern division and J. N. Faithorn chairman of the Western and Northwestern. On all matters affecting two or more of the divisions the two chairmen are to act jointly, and they are also to exercise joint supervision over Colorado, Utah, and Pacific coast business. The Southwestern Association is strengthened by the addition of three new lines—the Chicago, Santa Fé and California, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, and the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis. The first action of the Southwestern lines after organizing was to agree upon a restoration of all rates to take effect September 23. The Western and Northwestern lines will meet to-morrow to canvass rates.

Now, the fact is the railroad associations to-day, under some form of an agreement, have organized the greatest "trust" in America. And where the United States Government under the law takes $1 from the people in the way of taxes these railroad companies take $4 through their agreements, not their pools, as defined under the existing law, but through their understandings and associations like that presided over by Mr. Finck, who is the "high muck-a-muck" of the Eastern association and these other associations in Chicago, covering the whole Western territory, and through their Southern associations. They have to-day a practical and effective trust, which takes from the people of the United States without law, and in absolute defiance of the law, without competition among themselves, to a large extent, a thousand millions of dollars a year. If any trust is unlawful, if any combination in restraint of trade is against public policy, then this procedure, this agreement by which the railroad companies make these combinations by which, as shown by this dispatch, they are to restore rates, that is, to raise them, is unlawful; and the second amendment I offered proposes to make any such agreements or devices an unlawful proceeding.

Now, these are the amendments to which I desired to address myself in the short time allotted to me; and I simply submit to the gentlemen who look well to the interests of the people of our country, to those who realize that where the tariff and the internal revenue take $1 from the people the roads are taking $4 from them by such unlawful combinations, to those who realize that a combination of roads, wielded by Finck, Midgely, and the rest of their associates, has and exercises the power to tax the wheat-growers of the country, taking out of the farmers' pockets 5 cents on every bushel of wheat they raise, to tax the cotton producers of the country and the cattle-raisers and all persons who are interested in the produce of the soil or manufactures of any character—I submit that such power is dangerous to the Republic and that such a combination ought to be declared unlawful, and that the men who organize such a combination, the men who take part in it and direct its action, Albert Finck, Midgely, Faithorn, or any president of any railroad, ought to be put into the penitentiary and kept there. [Laughter and applause.]

Either some such remedy for an existing wrong, making the present law effective in some way, must be adopted, or you will find that the people of this country who are really having the life-blood drawn out of them by these great trusts, these infamous, outrageous combinations of selfishness, of greed, and of rapacity—either these things must be stopped, or, gentlemen, you will find that the people of this country will send here men who will stop it and send men to the Senate who will stop it. Now I ask a vote on my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. CRISP. I desire, Mr. Speaker, as it is apparent that the eight or nine minutes of the hour remaining will be insufficient to pass this bill, to ask unanimous consent (and I hope our friends will not object to it) for an extension of the time for one hour to-day. I think that we can get through with it in that time; and I want to couple with that a proposition that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] be allowed fifteen minutes of that time.

Mr. BLAND. Why not extend the time until the completion of the bill?

Mr. CRISP. And that five minutes be given to Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa; also that I be allowed to control the rest of the time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would suggest to my friend from Georgia that he ask an extension of the time for one hour and a half or two hours.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I was going to suggest that there be an extension asked of two hours. We will have nothing more important than this before the House; and we had better consider this bill than be fighting about the want of a quorum.

Mr. BLAND. Why not extend it to the completion of the bill?

Mr. CRISP. I was only anxious to propose an extension of the time that would be acceptable to everybody.

Mr. WEAVER. I would like the gentleman from Georgia to allow me a minute in which to make a statement.

Mr. CRISP. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to say a word on this question. Notwithstanding the friends of the Oklahoma bill feel the importance of that measure, they also concede that this is an important measure now pending, so important to the people that we will not interpose an objection to a reasonable extension of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the request of the gentleman from Georgia to be that the time for the consideration of this bill be extended two hours after the expiration of the morning hour?

Mr. CRISP. It is; and of that time the gentleman from Ohio is to have fifteen minutes. And if there be no objection, and the House will allow me to control the time, I will see that those gentlemen desiring to address the House shall have time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state the request of the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that two hours additional time after the expiration of the consideration hour be allowed to consider this bill, or so much as is required. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CRISP. It is understood that the House permits me the control of the time?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Georgia will be permitted to control the time. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] desires to ask a question.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I want to ask this additional extension from the House, and if I am permitted to go on I can state it in one minute. I know the House will agree to it. There is another bill, reported by the Committee on Commerce, to wit, a bill touching railroads that have been organized under the laws of the United States running through the States and disregarding State laws regulating the tolls thereon. We have one bill already reported to the House which touches that and gives States jurisdiction in such cases. I do not believe its consideration will take more than five minutes, but I ask unanimous consent to report such a bill. There has been such a bill sent on by the railroad commissioners of my State on that matter, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. At present I object. It is a bill involving entirely different principles. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to say just one word in relation to the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON]. His first amendment seeks to enforce the interstate-commerce act. I will say in respect to that, under the law as it is now upon a complaint being filed the commission are required to enforce the act; and it would seem to be a little out of place to require them to proceed in a matter without information from some party injured. That is all I desire to say about the matter. Under the law anybody complaining has simply to send notice to the commission, and they are required to proceed and investigate the case. It seems to me that is enough.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Has the commission ever instituted any proceedings?

Mr. CRISP. So far as I know the commission have fully discharged their duties under the act. In every case, so far as I know, where application has been made to them it has been respectfully received and considered, and a hearing given.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The commission has never carried a case into court.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I want to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. RYAN (to Mr. CRISP). Is not the aggrieved party now entitled to make application for redress directly to a court instead of to the commission?

Mr. CRISP. He is.

Mr. RYAN. He can take his choice, can he not?

Mr. CRISP. He can take either. He can go to the court or to the commission. We have already provided that in every case where he shall recover he shall also recover counsel fees in addition to the damage.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I think that part of the law is not enforced.

Mr. CRISP. The next amendment is to touch upon the question of pooling, and my only reply to that is to ask the Clerk to read the fifth section of the act of 1887.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It does not touch this at all.

Mr. CRISP. I ask the Clerk to read the section, and if it does not cover this subject I am at a loss to know how language can be framed to cover it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid, each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense.

Mr. CRISP. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a vote on these amendments of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I presume it is in order for me to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, having some knowledge of this section that the gentleman speaks of, I wish to say that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is very evidently striking at a matter that can not be very well regulated either by the Interstate Commission as it exists, or even by the through trunk-line associations. The gentleman's proposition contemplates that the present Interstate Commerce Commission, or some other commission to be created by this Congress or by some subsequent Congress, shall provide all the paraphernalia of a pooling, combining, and adjusting division for all the railroads of America. Let me say in justice to the railroads that the very dispatch which has been read by the gentleman [Mr. ANDERSON] this morning arose out of a quarrel on the terminals west of the Missouri River. The question was whether those companies that owned the trunk lines, like the Burlington and the Topeka and Santa Fé and others, should or should not secure the through freight that came from the West to, say, Kansas City, on their through bills, and consigned to Chicago or St. Louis, yet is stopped at Kansas City and sold there, but is reshipped thence to the East at proportional of the original through rate; whether such freight shall be open to competition by all lines eastward when it came to reshipping.

The managers of trunk lines west of the Missouri River contend that the competing lines east of the river that had not built roads or put on heavy operating equipments, costing millions of money, should not come in and compete for this class of freights with the trunk lines. Now, that is a question that evidently lies entirely with the railroads themselves. Take the through rate from New York to San Francisco on dry goods, $4 a hundred. Do you think the settlement of that rate between the Eastern trunk lines and the transcontinental association is left to chance? No, indeed; for one of the most expensive pieces of clerical work that the railroad companies have to provide and pay for—not for the purpose of "combines" or of "pools," but for fair business purposes—is to settle the just and proper division of through and competing rates among themselves. As between those railroad associations and the Interstate Commerce Commission there is, I presume, a perfect understanding. The transcontinental lines that were mentioned a while ago in their prorating West claimed so much. Then the central traffic association claim so much, and they agree among themselves as to their proper proportions of the through rate; but that through rate itself is the standard of the commission.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] were to be adopted, you would have to turn your Interstate Commerce Commission itself into a pooling arrangement. This matter of a division of rates among the railroads is entirely open and above board. The newspapers and the public discuss every dollar that is divided. Generalities or impassioned talk do not cover the question. It is as plain a business proposition as the position of the Sergeant-at-Arms paying a member his salary.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let me ask the gentleman, is not the object of the railroad associations expressly to keep up rates?

Mr. FARQUHAR. No. I deny that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And do not the people have to pay for it?

Mr. FARQUHAR. No. In 50 per cent. of the cases of contention these very associations I have named have put on and upheld uniform rates and kept your farmers from being skinned. I assert that as a fact and I can prove it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. They have put on an uniform rate, and that uniform rate is an extortionate one.

Mr. FARQUHAR. No, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask that the amendment as offered be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the following section be added to the said act of 1887: "That the commission is hereby authorized, empowered, and required to execute and enforce the provisions of this act, and upon the request of said commission the Attorney-General of the United States shall institute and prosecute all necessary proceedings in the proper court for the enforcement of this act and for the punishment of all violations thereof."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will allow me a moment, I wish to submit just one remark. I am not opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON]. I am in favor of every proposition that goes to restraining the power of these highwaymen that are managing the affairs of this country literally as highwaymen. But in my judgment the present law as it stands, if there was any place on earth where it could be enforced, would be good enough for all the purposes for which the people thought it was intended.

If this amendment conferring jurisdiction upon the State courts should prevail and become a law there will be an assurance to the complainant when "on his native heath," in the domestic court with which he is familiar, that it will not require the entire amount of his claim to prosecute it; and thus the effectual enforcement of the law will be promoted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Take the class of cases which must necessarily be tried in the United States courts, cases in which the commission itself in the course of its investigation has discovered violations of law. Would not my friend be willing that this amendment should be adopted giving to the commission a power it has not now of enforcing the law, and causing the Attorney-General to institute proceedings?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Certainly. I am not intending to antagonize the amendment, but am endeavoring to enforce the necessity of a court somewhere to secure the effectual execution of our laws on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

The amendment was adopted; there being—ayes 27, noes 16.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the next amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at end of second line:
"That section 5 of said act of 1887 be amended by adding the following: 'That all pools, agreements, understandings, or arrangements of any kind existing or entered into, or to be entered into, by any corporation or carrier subject to this act, and all rebates, drawbacks, underbilling, or devices of any and every kind whatsoever, to regulate or affect interstate commerce, either by maintenance of rates or charges, or by divisions of traffic, territory, or earnings, are hereby made unlawful.'"

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend that amendment by adding these words:

Whether said pooling be done by railroads running only through the United States or by railroad companies outside of the United States through their agents doing business for them in this country.

I take it, sir, from what has been said by the gentleman from Kansas that he wants to prevent all possibility of pooling, all possibility of any discrimination by rebates, drawbacks, or in any other way in favor of one class of shippers as against another. I presume, therefore, that he will be willing to accept this amendment. It proposes in a moderate way to reach railroads running through Canada and owned by foreign capitalists, while it does not at all interfere with the charges that those railroads may make in a legitimate way.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman proposes, I understand, to add that to my amendment?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I accept it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I modify my amendment by inserting the word "rebates" after the word "pooling."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, having just entered the Hall, I am not as familiar with this amendment or with the bill as perhaps I ought to be. But in listening to this proposition of the gentleman from Kansas, the question occurred to me whether the amendment may not go further than he intends. If there are arrangements by which undue rates are exacted or by which drawbacks are allowed, I apprehend there will not be much division of opinion in providing a remedy. But as I listened to the amendment, I found myself asking whether it is not broad enough to cut up by the roots all agreements and arrangements touching transportation. For instance, if starting in Kansas, or some other point of the West, you desire to make shipment of freight to the seaboard, there are, as I understand, a number of arrangements or agreements by which, as a matter of convenience, a continuous haul is secured, and which in the main give cheaper rates. Now, I ask for information whether this amendment may not be so broad as to interfere with these arrangements between connecting lines of railway, so as to leave each railroad to make its own agreement with the shipper, and requiring perhaps half a dozen agreements in order to secure continuous shipment from the West to the seaboard?

Mr. CRISP. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that such consideration as I have been able to give that amendment makes it very doubtful in my mind whether, if it were adopted as law, there could be such a thing as joint tariff rates at all.

Mr. CANNON. If the amendment is liable to operate in that way, it might strike a very serious blow which we do not intend, because, as I understand, the business of the country, so far as transportation is concerned, has been revolutionized within the last fifteen or twenty years by these arrangements for continuous transportation. If we should go back to the old system under which "every tub stood on its own bottom," and if we should require a man, in order to transport his product from his farm to the seaboard to make half a dozen contracts with as many different corporations, it might do very great harm. We ought to take care, in seeking to remedy abuses, that we do not inflict great injury upon the public, and cut up by the roots a system of doing business with which we do not desire to interfere.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to answer his question?

Mr. CRISP. Most certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And I will do it by reading my proposed amendment. It is as follows:

That section 5 of said act of 1887 be amended by adding the following: "That all pools, agreements, understandings, or arrangements of any kind existing or entered into, or to be entered into, by any corporation or carrier subject to this act, and all rebates, drawbacks, underbilling, or devices of any and every kind whatever—

Now, for what?—

to regulate or affect interstate commerce—

How?—

either by maintenance of rates or charges, or by divisions of traffic, territory, or earnings are hereby made unlawful.

Now, that does not in the slightest prevent them from making joint schedules. What is a joint schedule? It is a schedule agreed to by two roads.

A MEMBER. Or more.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Each makes its own rates. That is all there is of it, and gentlemen need not be scared.

Mr. CANNON. There is no desire, I will say to my friend from Kansas, to scare anybody, but there is an honest desire to get to the meaning of the amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I admit that the gentleman from Illinois does not mean to scare anybody.

Mr. CANNON. I think there are a number of us just as anxious as my friend from Kansas, although we do not make so much noise about it. [Laughter].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is correct. I wish to ask, even supposing my amendment does go too far in a proper direction, does any one doubt the Senate would correct it? Gentlemen need not be scared. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman from Kansas to accept the modification which I suggested to his amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me but a single word more. I live, Mr. Speaker, a thousand miles from the seaboard, and am honestly anxious to provide legislation that will cut off rebates, drawbacks, understandings, or arrangements of any kind, and especially to cut off unjust poolings, as any man upon the floor of this House, but I stand here before action is taken to get as much knowledge as I possibly can touching this matter. I am inquiring in good faith and not for the purpose of antagonizing this amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas. For one, I am not here to allow anything to go through without seeing that the House understands all about it, and without thoroughly understanding it myself in every particular. I have my own responsibility, and am perfectly willing to shoulder it.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I said in the beginning of the consideration of this bill that some of the amendments would bring up questions which have been before the House a great many times and which I thought and the committee thought had been compromised by the adoption of this bill to which we wish to give effect. Now, I hope the House will not understand from anything said by the gentleman from Kansas on his amendment that the act of 1887 does not by itself prohibit, because it does prohibit in as strong terms as language can make it, rebates, drawbacks, pools, agreements, arrangements, or anything of that character, which seem to be pointed out by the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does the gentleman deny pools take place under the present law?

Mr. CRISP. You will find the present law prevents rebates. The gentleman does not question that?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Suppose you read it.

Mr. CRISP. It is in two or three sections. It prevents rebates; you do not deny that?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. It prevents drawbacks.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. It prevents unjust discriminations?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. What else do you want?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My amendment goes to the extent of preventing agreements for maintenance of rates.

Mr. CRISP. I am not going into a discussion of this case. I take it for granted the House understands the bill. It is not clear if the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas should be adopted, railroads would not be allowed to make joint tariffs to give cheap freight from here to Kansas.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And the result will be each road will charge local rates over its line.

Mr. CRISP. Yes, and I think these joint tariffs for great distances are in the interests of the people.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Fairer arrangements have been made under this act by railroads than ever before.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, for robbery. Under the present law they collect more to-day than they ever did.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Some gentlemen do not know what they are talking about.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is mere assertion. There is not a president of a railroad company in the United States who is not violating the present law.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman does not dare to make his assertion over his own signature.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, I do—over my own signature.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to call attention to the language of the present law?

Mr. CRISP. I will yield to the gentleman; how long?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. For only a few moments. I want to read a provision of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. CRISP. Then I will yield to the gentleman for a few moments.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if I can be recognized I desire to call the attention of my colleague from Illinois, as well as the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to the provision of the existing law, which is as follows:

That every common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property to and from their several lines, and those connecting therewith; and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines; but this shall not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks and terminal facilities to any other carrier engaged in like business.

It seems to me that that provision of the law affords as strong an assurance as can be given to compel this continuous interchange of traffic by railroad transportation.

Mr. CHEADLE. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me a moment to make a statement in response to what has been stated upon this very point?

Mr. CRISP. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. CHEADLE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] wanted an illustration of the question he raised; and I can give him one if I can have his attention for a moment. I live in the town of Frankfort, Ind. Four railroads pass through the town, one of them being what is known as the "Air Line." Now, it is 48 miles from Frankfort to Indianapolis, and the rate from Indianapolis to the seaboard cities was 1½ cents less per bushel than from Frankfort; and yet under the provisions of the existing law the Air Line road can take freight from Indianapolis and pull it north, passing through Frankfort to its connections at Chicago, for 1½ cents per bushel less than they charge from Frankfort over the same route.

Mr. CRISP. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman from Kansas has accepted my amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I did.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the easiest abuse possible in this House, or out of it, is the abuse of the great railroad system of the country. I dislike very much to hear it wherever it may come from, because we all know to-day that the railroad companies have done nothing in opposition to the law, but are satisfied with the provisions of the act of 1887, and will be better satisfied when we pass this Senate bill, which makes clear some points in doubt, a bill which practically originated in the idea that there was underbilling of rates all over the country, and to prevent this underbilling was the object of the bill.

This has been recommended by all of the commercial bodies everywhere throughout the country and by the people who know what they are about—the shippers of goods and those directly interested in railroad traffic. The people of the country have been instructed by the operation of the law up to this time. I know from my own city, the city of Philadelphia, which I have the honor in part to represent, that I have received memorials and petitions which I have presented here, from boards of trade, from the Commercial Exchange, and from the other business exchanges, asking that this law, this bill of the Senate, may be adopted by the House and sent back, so as speedily to be enacted as the law of the land; and I express my regret, sir, that we are prejudicing action upon the bill by taking up the time with these amendments and so changing the character of the bill as it came from the Senate as to make the question of its final passage one of delay if not of doubt. I sought this morning to have all amendments withdrawn, that the bill might be adopted in its original form, but objection was made. I hope we will not prejudice the passage of the bill by further action here to-day; and while I am strongly in favor of the passage of the bill, I regret that I feel compelled to refrain from voting on any of the questions presented. I am paired with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIDSON], and not knowing how he would vote I shall also refrain from voting.

Mr. CRISP. I hope we will now have a vote on the pending proposition.

Mr. NELSON. I want one moment to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I want to say to him, in reference to his amendment, that I think if he will read it again he will see that it has precisely the opposite effect from what he understands it has. It is precisely what we would like out West. We do not want the trunk lines to pool with the trunk lines of Canada.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken. The amendment was carefully drawn.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MACDONALD. I do not like the wording of the amendment, and I would like to suggest an amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I understand the first question is on the pending amendment to the amendment to the amendment—that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That was accepted by the gentleman from Kansas as a part of his amendment.

Mr. BLAND. But the House has a right to vote upon it. It has not yet been adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Kansas accepted that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I was willing to accept the amendment to the amendment, but objection was made and a vote was demanded upon it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Very well; I have tried my best, in the most modified way, to do something to check the railroads owned by British capital and Canadian capital.

Mr. MACDONALD. I have an amendment which I think is necessary here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not now in order. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I now ask the previous question——

Mr. MACDONALD. Let me suggest an amendment here. I suppose it is in order now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If it is an amendment to that of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is the purpose of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the word "and" after the word "pools," and strike out the words "of any kind" and insert in place thereof the words "having pooling, rebates, or drawbacks in view."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. So it will read how?

Mr. MACDONALD. I will tell the gentleman. So it will read:

That all pools and agreements, understandings or arrangements, having pooling rebates or drawbacks in view, etc.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no; that is the present law.

Mr. MACDONALD. The gentleman is mistaken in that. This is to prohibit just exactly what the gentleman has referred to. Your amendment declares any arrangement that any railroad company may make is unlawful.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Where it is to keep up rates.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Kansas provides for the maintenance of rates. So you go against the very schedule required to be posted up.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore stated that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRISP. I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND], who has an amendment he desires to discuss.

Mr. LIND. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I offered yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 6 the following:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance; that it shall also be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation per ton per mile for the contemporaneous transportation of the same class of freight for a longer than for a shorter distance over the same line, in the same general direction, or from the same original point of departure, or to the same point of arrival; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge as high a rate per ton per mile for a longer as for a shorter distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act."

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, this does not introduce nor seek to introduce any new feature into the interstate-commerce act as it was understood at the time of its passage. Nor is it a novel scheme. It is a provision that is to be found in the railroad laws of the State of Iowa and other States, and in the railroad law of my own State. Instead of making a speech I will endeavor briefly to explain the effect of and the difficulties this amendment seeks to remedy. The leading feature in the interstate-commerce act, as we call it, is that which denies the right of a railroad corporation to charge a higher rate for a short haul over the same road than for a longer haul which also includes the shorter. That is the principal, the one leading idea in the interstate-commerce act, but the reverse of that proposition is not provided for.

There is another feature which that act does not prohibit, and that has been more burdensome than that form of discrimination. While it is true that the law prevents a railroad company charging more for the shorter distance than for the longer one, it is not true that it prohibits it from charging proportionately less for the shorter than the longer. To illustrate—and I trust you will not think that this is an attempt to introduce a distance tariff, but to illustrate the idea that is expressed in this amendment—I will take for instance Chicago, the general distributing point for the West. St. Peter is situated west of Chicago, and New Ulm is another town still farther from Chicago. The rate from Chicago to St. Peter, I will say, is $10 a ton. It is 500 miles. The rate to New Ulm, only 30 miles farther west, is $15 a ton. These are figures for illustration only.

Mr. ROWELL. Is not that a violation of the law?

Mr. LIND. It is not a violation of the terms of the act, and the commissioners have so decided. While the distance from St. Peter to New Ulm is only 30 miles, the rise in the charges for transportation is $5. I purposely exaggerate these figures simply to bring out the force of the illustration. The difference actually charged is not so great, but nearly so.

Mr. RYAN. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LIND. Wait one moment until I have stated another fact in this connection. Gentlemen will notice the unfair discrimination made against New Ulm. That town is only 30 miles farther west than St. Peter, and still the company charges a difference of $5 a ton on freight. As a matter of fact it is charging a difference of 40 cents a ton on coal, whereas if we were given the same rate per ton per mile that St. Peter received and which we ought to have, the difference would be only 16 cents per ton on coal.

The proposition involved in this amendment is this: That if a railroad company can haul freight, we will say 150 miles, at 1 cent per ton per mile, they certainly under the same circumstances, over the same road-bed, can carry it 500 miles at the same rate per ton per mile. If there is one axiom in transportation it is this: That with the increase of the distance there should be a decrease in the rate per ton per mile.

Mr. CRISP. That is where I want to ask the gentleman this question: Is not that a violation of the interstate-commerce law?

Mr. LIND. It is not of itself, and the commission has so decided.

Mr. CRISP. Would it not be an unreasonable rate?

Mr. LIND. That is another question. But as I have already stated the commission has already decided that this state of facts is not of itself an unreasonable rate. I say the gentleman can not point to one case where the commission has yet pronounced any rate unreasonable. Our people brought the matter up before the commission, and it was heard, and relief was refused.

Mr. CRISP. The trouble is that the gentleman wants the law itself to define in every case what is an unreasonable rate, which is impossible.

Mr. LIND. No. The gentleman does not understand me. I do not undertake to define in this amendment what the railroads shall charge. The amendment simply does this: You have already said by your law that they shall not charge more for a short haul included with a long haul than for the long one, and we ask this additional provision that they shall not charge more per ton per mile for a longer than they do for a shorter distance in the same direction and over the same road.

Mr. ROWELL. It is introducing the mileage rate, is it not?

Mr. LIND. No, sir; nothing of the kind.

Mr. RYAN. The illustration which my friend from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] has given satisfies me that, so far as that is concerned, his amendment is all right; but will it not have a further effect? Take, for instance, a case like this: A ton of flour is shipped from my town, Topeka, Kans., to the Mississippi River. Now, will the railroad companies be required to carry that flour at the same rate per ton per mile that they would carry it to New York for?

Mr. LIND. No, sir; not at all. I will explain. If you have a continuous line of railway from Chicago to Topeka by way of Kansas City, this amendment will compel the railroad company to carry freight from Chicago to Kansas City and beyond there to your town at no greater rate per ton per mile than they charge to Kansas City. It is a fair regulation, and it has been thoroughly tested in our State.

Mr. RYAN. If that is the only effect of the amendment, I think it is a good one and should be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND].

Mr. CRISP. A word in reply. Whilst the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] insists that this amendment does not propose the introduction of the mileage principle into the law, it will be very difficult for him to satisfy the House of the correctness of that proposition. His amendment is the converse, so to speak, of the short and the long haul clause in the existing law. When we provided that a railroad should not charge more for a short than for a long haul we thought we were correcting the inequalities that existed; but the gentleman's proposition is that, as to the long haul, the railroads shall not charge more per ton per mile than they do for the short haul. Now, there may be some case—doubtless there is such a case, because the gentleman refers to it, and I of course accept his statement—where the practice of the railroads discriminates against a town.

I suppose that is the kind of case to which the gentleman refers, but there is another provision of the law which would reach a case of that character. All rates are required to be reasonable and just. There must be no discrimination against individuals or against localities, but it is utterly impossible to prohibit specially in the law every injustice that may arise. Gentlemen will see that the short and the long haul provision, about which so much is said, is merely a determination by Congress, when the question of reasonableness or unreasonableness of rates arises, that in every case, unless the commission shall decide differently, it is not unreasonable to charge more for a short than for the long haul. The general proposition is that in every case the rates shall be reasonable, but as to that particular matter Congress says to the railroads, "Whenever you charge more for a short than you do for a long haul you are doing an unreasonable thing, and this commission shall have authority to modify the rate." But the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] is a proposition to add to that, and to protect the long haul as against the short haul.

Mr. LIND. That is it.

Mr. CRISP. It introduces for the first time in the legislation of this country the per ton per mile principle.

Mr. LIND. It does not do that at all.

Mr. CRISP. It certainly does, if language can do it. It provides that the charge shall not be greater "per ton per mile" in the one case than in the other. As I have said, we have never introduced the mileage principle into our legislation on this subject.

Mr. LIND. It applies, however, to the long haul, and not to the short haul.

Mr. CRISP. But the gentleman does not seem to get the idea that it introduces a mileage rate.

Mr. LIND. It does not.

Mr. CRISP. The question of the mileage rate is very distinct from the question of reasonableness, as between the long and the short haul. A mileage rate means so much for every mile. It is a principle which certain parties have sought for some years to introduce into our legislation, but, so far as I am informed, it has never met the approbation of Congress in either branch.

I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND], as I understand he will occupy but a short time.

Mr. LIND. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that this proposition, as I claimed in my former statement, does not introduce the mileage system. Suppose there are on a railroad route three points —A, B, and C. A is 100 miles distant from B; C is 10 miles further. Between A and B there is a certain rate per ton per mile. Now, we say it is not reasonable as a matter of law that the company should be permitted to charge a greater rate per ton per mile for the longer haul than for the shorter one, the transportation being over the same road, in the same cars, and under the same circumstances.

Mr. CRISP. That introduces the mileage rate.

Mr. LIND. No, it does not; the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me a moment?

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir.

Mr. MACDONALD. My view of the matter is that this is a restrictive clause inserted in the law, and simply provides, as any person will see, that where a railroad is carrying freight for 500 miles at a stipulated rate per ton per mile, it shall not charge more for 600 miles. The proposition ought to be plain. Its adoption does not compel the companies to adopt exactly the same rate, but simply prevents them from charging more.

Mr. CRISP. But you are applying the mileage rate.

Mr. MACDONALD. Oh, no. This is the only way in which you can have a restriction applied. I am unable to see anything objectionable in a rule which is based upon what is termed the "mileage rate." The present law is the result largely of agitation caused by railroads giving better rates to terminal cities, which were favored by having competing railroads, than they did to intermediate points which were a less distance and shorter haul. Now, here is a case where it is found that where railroads have competing points which are intermediate they charge a sum which is proportionately much less than to points a short distance beyond. It is the old story in a slightly different form. The railroads are willing to carry freight at reasonable rates where, because of competition, they are compelled to; but where there is no competition they put up the rate to an extortionate figure, whether the non-competing point is a longer or a shorter distance. All should be required to carry at a rate which is reasonable, and the same should be uniform in proportion to the distance. In determining this you must resort to the "mileage rate."

Mr. CRISP. The present law says the rate shall not be unreasonable or unjust. Take the case presented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND]. Two points, A and B, are 100 miles distant, while the distance from B to C is 10 miles. As I understand it, what the gentleman desires to accomplish is that the company shall not charge $10 from A to B, and $15 for the other 10 miles. Now, I ask, if this were done, whether it would not be an unreasonable rate, and whether the interstate-commerce law does not already prohibit it?

Mr. MACDONALD. I will answer that question by asking another. If the amendment should be modified by omitting the words "per ton per mile," making it provide simply that these companies shall not charge more in proportion for, say, 600 miles than for 500 miles, would that be more satisfactory? I can not see how it would improve it.

Mr. CRISP. I do not myself see any necessity for such a provision.

Mr. MACDONALD. If it is a fact that they do charge more in proportion there certainly is a necessity for it. This transportation question is yet in its infancy, and it is by experience that we can learn what is necessary in the way of regulation and control. I do not believe that railroads carry freight at a loss, or for amusement simply, to competing points. If they do they will have to cease their folly. As public servants they should serve all alike, and no one citizen should be required to pay for services received by another. No man should have to pay freight which another should have paid for.

Mr. BRUMM. Allow me to illustrate the difference between the position of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and that of the gentleman who has offered the amendment. Let us suppose that the rate per ton for 100 miles is $2. That pro rata rate would apply all along the route. But at a certain point there is a town which is off the regular route and which the railroad company wishes to punish; it wishes to deprive it of freight, because by sending it that way it must necessarily go over some other route. Under the existing law the company may charge an extra dollar per ton to the point they wish to punish; but if this were not allowed, freight could be shipped to that extreme point which the company wishes to punish without any increase of rate, even though it might go over another road. The purpose of the present provision is to prevent a discrimination in this respect.

Mr. CRISP. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that the present law prohibits any such discrimination—anything like "punishing" a town, or an individual, or a railroad.

Mr. BRUMM. I have mentioned a case in which it may be done.

Mr. CRISP. Do you want to make the law stronger than it is? It now distinctly prohibits discrimination.

Mr. BRUMM. The proposition is simply to apply the same rule to the longer distances that the present law applies to shorter distances.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this matter, I see, is not generally understood; but I think a moment's reflection will make it understood. We will suppose that two railroads start from a given point. One reaches a second point by a route 100 miles long; the other by a route 150 miles long. At the crossing or competing point the road that has the short haul always makes the rate; and the road which has the long haul must either go out of business in respect to that competing point or it must consent to take freight at the same rate as the road having the short haul; that is at the 100 mile rate. Now, the question presented by my colleague [Mr. LIND] is this: if a road having a line of 150 miles takes freight at the competing point at the rate of the road having the line of 100 miles, shall this longer road be compelled, where it goes beyond the competing point, to take freights at the same rate per ton per mile as at the competing point? That presents the question in as few words as I can state it; and that is the whole case.

I admit with my colleague the ordinary rule is true, and true in almost every instance, that the rate at which the railroad carries for 100 miles ought to be and is a reasonable rate for a greater number of miles. But the question is whether that should be the unchangeable rule in every individual case, or ought it to be left to the commission to determine in exceptional cases. That is the simple and only question in this case. If we adopt a cast-iron rule, we may, and in some few cases doubtless would, give all the business at the point of crossing to the shortest line, thus preventing competition at that point; whereas, if we do not adopt this rule, injustice may be done to points on the longer line beyond the point of crossing. Often, or at least sometimes, injustice may be done to a point by charging a rate to it that is not absolutely too high. A great wrong may be done to a town, A, by charging too low a rate of freight to a neighboring town, B.

That is the way I understand it. Am I right?

Mr. LIND. I do not concede the correctness of the gentleman's conclusion, but he does state one of the features of complication I seek to avoid.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will say that I will vote for this amendment. I have inquired a great deal in reference to this question; I have inquired of the Interstate Commerce Commission; I have inquired of the railroad commissioners in my own State, and I have thought a great deal about it.

There is a great deal to be said on both sides. Any one who says there is not, and that it is free from difficulty, either has not devoted any thought to the subject or makes statements recklessly. I have thought of it and have come to a conclusion not altogether satisfactory to myself. My State has instructed me to vote for it, and although I do not always follow instructions, in this instruction I shall. I am a little in doubt how I should vote on this question if I were uninstructed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether he has recently examined the proviso to section 4, and whether in his opinion that proviso is broad enough in its terms to invest the commission with discretion to suspend the section even, should the amendment of his colleague [Mr. LIND] be adopted by this House?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Under the present law?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Do you get my question?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Well——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. You cite, for instance, in the case of a line of 100 miles to a competing point, the other road having 150 miles, the application of this amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota would work injustice to the longer road beyond the competing points. Now, if the amendment be adopted would the Commission be invested with power to suspend that fourth section as amended?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I have not looked at it enough to answer dogmatically. They have the right to correct it if it works an inequality, or if it is unreasonable, by another clause. Which is the greater evil, to deprive the people at the point of crossing of the competition and lower freights or the people beyond that point on the longer line of equal rates with the people at that point?

For instance, shall the people of Mankato, in my State, be deprived of such competition and be compelled to pay higher rates so as to prevent the injustice that it must be admitted the people of New Ulm are subjected to by being compelled to pay essentially higher rates of freight than are charged to Mankato?

Mr. RYAN. Permit me for one moment.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I have not control of the time.

Mr. RYAN. I will not take a minute. There is a railroad running directly from Chicago to my town. I may say there are two direct lines. From Chicago to the Missouri River, we will say, is 500 miles. It is 65 miles further to my town, Topeka, in Kansas—565 miles between the terminal points. Can the gentleman tell me why these companies ought to be permitted to lay freights down at the end of the 500 miles, at the Missouri River, for a less rate per ton per mile than they lay it down at the end of the line, 565 miles, per ton per mile?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not pretend to say that there is any reason for it or justice in it, and unless there is some exceptional reason there is no justice in it. That the rule you cite is general, and almost always true, is without doubt. The question is: May there not be an exception which should not be governed by cast-iron rules? That is all.

Mr. RYAN. This amendment simply compels the road to carry it the 565 miles at the same rate per ton per mile that it carries it for the 500 miles.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I understand that.

Mr. RYAN. Then what is the objection to it?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not say there is any. I was trying to state the difficulties; and if I have failed it is because I do not know how to present the question so that it may be understood.

Mr. CRISP. The objection is that this is introducing for the first time the mileage rate, as I stated before, in the legislation of Congress upon this subject. I think the House can rest assured, and the public can also be satisfied, that the long haul will take care of itself; and while the gentleman may find occasionally a case of hardship, if the hardship is apparent, it follows that the rule is unjust, that it is a discrimination; and if it is a discrimination it is a violation of the law.

I can see very well how some gentleman living at an intermediate point would insist that the long haul should be raised in order that some neighboring town should not have equal privileges with him. But I do not understand why for any other reason such a provision should be advocated.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: Wherein in principle is there any difference between the proposed amendment and the existing law in reference to the short and the long haul? I ask for information, of course.

Mr. CRISP. The law provides that these roads shall not charge more for the short than for the long haul. It does not provide that they may not charge the same. They may charge as much under the provisions of the law for hauling 50 miles as for a hundred miles unless the charge be affected by the other provision of the law, which provides that such rates must be reasonable. That, however, is the only provision governing that point; and, taking the long and the short haul clause, the language is that you shall not charge more for the short haul than for the long haul.

Now, the proposition here is that when you come to the long and short haul you shall not charge less per ton per mile for the long haul than for the short. It does not provide that you may not charge more.

Mr. MACDONALD. That would be satisfactory, provided we assume that the railroads are carrying freight too cheaply to the competing points, which I do not admit.

Mr. CRISP. That question does not arise at all. The gentleman asked the difference in principle between this amendment and the present law, as far as it is applicable to the long and short haul clause. I say in response to him that as to the long and short haul you may charge as much for the short as for the long; but the proposition here is to apply the charge to so much per ton per mile, and provides that a similar rate must exist between the long and the short haul. That is the distinction between them.

Mr. MACDONALD. My remark was applicable to the proposed amendment and the statement in reference to it. The gentleman fails to make clear the difference in principle.

Mr. CRISP. Let me state further that I have heard no complaint of this from anywhere except it be from Minnesota, where I believe the railroad commissioners recommended it, but from no other State has there been any complaint and no recommendation by the railroad commission that I recollect. It comes solely from that State, and, I suppose, from some agitation in some towns where one or two have conceived themselves to be and perhaps are discriminated against, in which case, if they will go to the commission, under the present law they will probably get relief.

If no gentleman desires to discuss the matter further I would like to have a vote upon it.

Mr. WEBER. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. WEBER. Whether he is able to answer the question propounded by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the gentleman from Minnesota, to wit: Would there be power under the existing law, if this amendment were adopted, for the commission to regulate in exceptional cases, such as were cited by the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. LIND. I will say no; but if anybody desires to amend in that respect, it can be readily inserted, giving the commission discretionary power in extraordinary cases.

Mr. WEBER. It would seem that there should be such power vested in the commission; and if adopted, the principle that no greater rate shall be charged per ton per mile for the short than for the long haul would be proper. There should be a provision to regulate just such cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. LIND. Before that question is put I desire to modify the amendment by inserting three words, and my friend from Wisconsin is draughting it.

Mr. WEAVER. I hope it will not be in the way of granting discretion to the commission. They have enough now.

Mr. LIND. I withdraw my request for a modification.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 23, noes 27.

Mr. LIND. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were refused, seven members only voting in favor thereof.

Mr. MACDONALD. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made—does the Chair understand the gentleman to make the point of order that no quorum voted on the demand for tellers?

Mr. MACDONALD. I want a vote by tellers on this question.

Mr. CRISP. The motion was for tellers. The Chair announced that not a sufficient number of gentleman had arisen. No question of no quorum arose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked the gentleman if he asked whether there was a quorum. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is rejected.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] has an amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In section 2, line 50, after the word "weighing," insert the words "false representation of the contents of the package."

Mr. CHEADLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHEADLE. There was a division, and before the result was announced the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] asked for tellers. Tellers were denied. Then before the Chair had announced whether or not the amendment had been rejected or accepted a demand for a quorum was made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACDONALD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACDONALD] to say that he asked for a quorum on the last vote, and the last vote was on the demand for tellers.

Mr. MACDONALD. My demand for a quorum was on the vote rejecting the amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. At the time the demand was made the vote on the ordering of tellers had been taken, and tellers had been refused, and that was the only vote on which at that time a quorum could have been asked.

Mr. MACDONALD. Well, let the point go.

Mr. CRISP. I do not object to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert:

"Provided further, That any railroad company or other common carrier heretofore or hereafter created or incorporated under the laws of the United States shall, as to the transportation of passengers or property from one place or station to another place or station in the same State, over a route wholly in that State, be subject and amenable to the laws of such State relating to the transportation of passengers and property, the same as though it were a railroad company or common carrier created or incorporated under the laws of that State."

Mr. CRISP. I raise the question of order on that amendment, that it is not germane to this bill. This is a bill for the regulation of interstate commerce, and the amendment of the gentleman relates wholly to railroads within the States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on that question. I will first state the facts which gave occasion to offering the amendment. One of the principal railroads of Minnesota, running east and west through the northern half of it, with a branch line to St. Paul, is the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation created by act of Congress under an act giving it a large grant of land to aid in the construction of the railroad. This company claims that because it is a corporation created under the laws of the United States, having a land grant, and because Congress has passed an interstate law, it is not amenable to State legislation or State control in respect of local traffic. Exactly what the Northern Pacific Railroad claims has been said by the Union Pacific Railroad, the Central Pacific Railroad, and other land-grant railroads. They insist that being Federal corporations, created by act of Congress since the interstate-commerce law has passed, they are not liable to be controlled by State legislation in respect to local traffic. Now, the object of this amendment——

Mr. CRISP. That claim has not been sustained by any court.

Mr. NELSON. I understand that it has been sustained by a court in the West.

Mr. CRISP. Not by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. By a circuit court of the United States. I am informed by a member near me that it has been sustained by Judge Deedy in Oregon. The Northern Pacific Railroad in our State have denied that they are subject to our State railroad laws or our State railroad commission, and I know of my own knowledge that that road has put it upon this ground among others, that because we have an interstate-commerce law, that being a Federal corporation, it is not amenable to the State laws in Minnesota. The object of this amendment is to remove all doubt from the question and leave these corporations in respect to purely local traffics on a par with the local companies in the State, and amenable to the same rules and the same local legislation. Now, they claim this immunity, and as I have said one of the grounds on which they claim it is this interstate-commerce law. They say that it has been passed, and they being a corporation created by Congress and no reference being made as to them they are exempt from any control by the States.

Now, I claim that these great corporations we have created by Federal statutes in the first place have acquired their substance in the shape of money and land from the United States in respect to purely local traffic within our own State should be under the interstate-commerce act; that they should be on a par with other companies in this country and liable to the same rules and regulations. It is, therefore, for the purposes of removing this doubt and settling this question, and to evade long and tedious litigation in the Supreme Court for two, three, or four years before it can get through the court, that I have proposed to add this clause to the bill, and I think it is germane to it. It defines clearly the line in respect to the provisions between the interstate law and the State law, and is to prevent them from claiming directly or indirectly that they are entitled to this special immunity that they claim.

Now, this can certainly do no harm to the bill. It serves a useful purpose, and I think every gentleman who understands the question will be in favor of the measure and can not possibly have any objection to it.

Mr. CRISP. I shall not discuss the merits of the proposition. I probably agree with the gentleman. In fact, the Committee on Commerce have reported a bill to relieve the difficulty of which he complains, but certainly not upon the idea that the act of 1887 has any relation to it. I call the gentleman's attention to the first section of the act of 1887, which provides:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used, under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such a place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country.

It will be seen that under no construction can the gentleman claim that this act which we are now amending covers or influences the question which he seeks to reach here. His proposition that a railroad company chartered by Congress can not be regulated by the State as to commerce wholly within the State I totally dissent from. Within the State the State and the State commission, in my opinion, can regulate it. But whether they can or not, the point here is that we are dealing with interstate commerce, while this is a proposition to confer, if I may use such an expression, upon the State the power to regulate matters within its own jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this law deals not only with interstate commerce but also with transportation lines engaged in interstate commerce, and, as I understand it, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is designed to affect those transportation lines, lines which are authorized by acts of Congress and over which we have jurisdiction. The amendment is not for the purpose of regulating commerce in the State at all, but for the purpose of giving the State power to regulate its own commerce over transportation lines created by Congress, lines therefore which are covered by this law. The very subject which we are legislating upon is these corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and hence the amendment of the gentleman is clearly germane to the subject-matter under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to inquire whether the Chair is ready to rule on this point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to make a brief reply to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. I hope the gentleman will confine himself to the question of order, which is the only question now before the House.

Mr. NELSON. I will. As to the legal proposition I agree with the gentleman. I am surprised at this claim that the railroad company has set up, and if a case arising under that claim ever gets to the Supreme Court of the United States I do not think the decision will be in favor of the company. But we all know that it takes years and years before a litigation of that kind can be brought to a final determination in the Supreme Court, and it is to remove all doubt and put these great interstate-commerce carriers on the same footing with the other railroads that this amendment is offered. Now, these corporations that have been created by Congress and given these great land grants are the great interstate-commerce carriers of the country, the trans-continental lines; and as to those lines we have a right to say that outside of interstate commerce they shall be in all respects amenable to the rules and regulations established by the States in which they do business.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this is the very measure to which I referred when the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected, and I wish to have ten minutes to discuss it, because it concerns the people of my State.

Mr. BRUMM. If the gentleman is going to discuss the merits of this matter I shall object, but if he is going to speak to the point of order I shall not object.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there be any doubt about the question, this is a matter of such importance that it certainly ought not to be ruled out on a point of order. The effect of such a ruling would probably be to defeat the bill at this session and perhaps at this Congress, and it is a bill which I do not believe one man on this floor would object to on examination, because it is so essentially fair and just. As I was about to say, our railroad commissioners in the State of Minnesota——

Mr. BRUMM. Now, Mr. Speaker, I must insist upon the point I have raised, that the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order, but is speaking to the merits of this measure.

Mr. MACDONALD. The point of order necessarily involves the merits of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Gentlemen must permit me to go on in my own way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are two bills in this House reported by the Committee on Commerce, and this amendment is one of them. They were drawn by the Railroad Commissioner, and they have been reported by the committee, every member of it concurring, and if they are cut off now, they probably will not be reached this session. Therefore I say that if there is any doubt in the mind of the Chair about the point of order, it ought to be solved in our favor, and I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. CRISP] to let us get our bill up and pass it.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Well, if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] insists that he will not withdraw his point of order, I will ask the Chair to rule upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota relates to the transportation of passengers or property from one place or station to another place or station in the same State, over a road wholly in that State, whilst the act of 1887, which he seeks to amend, relates to the transportation of passengers or property from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory of the United States, and therefore the Chair thinks that the amendment is not germane; and the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia is sustained.

Mr. CRISP. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] fifteen minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have submitted three amendments to this bill; and I will discuss them in the order in which they stand in the RECORD. I do not present these amendments in any spirit of hostility against the railroad corporations of the United States. I by no means make myself a party to the unnecessary condemnation of railroad managers. I offer these amendments with the view of making the existing law better and more effective for the purposes for which it was enacted. I was not originally in favor of this law; and I did not look to it with the hope or expectation that it would yield a great deal of benefit to the people.

I desire to submit a word upon the first amendment which I have presented, and to explain the purpose I had in view in offering it. I ask the Clerk to read that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 1, the following:

"Provided, however, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to carry refined oils and other petroleum products, cotton-seed oil, and turpentine for any shipper, in tank or cylinder cars, who shall own, lease, or control the same in any manner, except upon the condition that said carrier shall charge the same rate for the transportation of said products in wooden packages or barrels, in car-load lots, as in said tank or cylinder cars, the said tank and cylinder cars and said wooden packages and barrels being carried free in each case."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the discrimination which is now made, and against which this amendment is directed, is one which I pointed out in the speech I had the honor to make at the time of the passage of the act of 1887. This discrimination was not only not guarded against by the terms of that law, but by fair construction and inference the right to make such discrimination was reserved to the railroad companies covered by the statute. I refer now especially to the practice of shipping for certain favored customers in cars belonging to the shipper, not to the railroad corporation. At the time of the passage of the original act, the previous question being demanded, I was deprived of opportunity to offer precisely the same amendment I have now submitted. The result of omitting a provision of this kind is demonstrated in a series of figures which I incorporate in my remarks, showing the discrimination against the barrel shipper and in favor of the car-load shipper, a discrimination of such a character as to defeat substantially the whole purpose of the act.

The Interstate-Commerce Commission has referred to this subject on page 15 of its report, from which I read:

It is well known also that the transportation of mineral oil is already to a very large extent in tank cars owned by parties who are not carriers subject to regulation under the act to regulate commerce. A willingness to disregard the rules of equality and justice as between shippers, when it can be made for the interest of the carriers to do so, is as likely to make its appearance in the action of the managers of any one of these outside organizations as in that of the managers of the railroads, for the temptations will be the same and the same class of persons will be bidding for special privileges and advantages which before the act was passed prospered so unfairly upon railroad favors. The act has not changed the nature or the grasping disposition of individuals; it has only interposed certain restraints, which it is reasonable to assume will be evaded if the opportunity shall be presented.

These facts are noted for the purpose of placing the whole subject distinctly before the National Legislature. If it is the will of Congress that all transportation of persons and property by rail should come under the same rules of general right and equity, some further designation of the agencies in transportation which shall be controlled by such rules would seem to be indispensable.

I do not care to elaborate my views upon this amendment farther than to say that it is one which I think must commend itself to the judgment of every thinking man as a provision which beyond possibility of doubt ought to be incorporated in any act which undertakes to make the existing law more valuable.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, it is barely possible that this amendment as now presented applies to the wrong section of the bill; hence I reserve the right to modify it in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, I have before me a very able argument presented to the Committee on Commerce by Hon. J. Randolph Tucker, of Virginia, which points out the difficulties that have arisen under this discrimination. I may properly say that this amendment which I offer has been drawn in conformity with Mr. Tucker's suggestion, and in my judgment has been drawn by him, although I can not personally make that statement. It is at any rate in strict accord and compliance with the recommendation of the Interstate-Commerce Commission. So much for that amendment.

The next amendment, Mr. Speaker, provides that any party complaining that he has suffered injury by discrimination——

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] will permit me, I will say a word upon his first amendment before he proceeds to discuss the next.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. As to this first amendment I confess my sympathy with it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will say that if this amendment be adopted, although it is not as vigorous as I should like it, I will withdraw my second amendment, which is much more radical in its character.

Mr. CRISP. This amendment, Mr. Speaker, seeks to correct an evil which undoubtedly exists, and which it occurs to me every man who desires to see equal and exact justice meted out by the railroad companies would desire to see remedied. The only embarrassment I have had in regard to it is, in the first place, that it was not favorably reported by the committee which I represent; and, in the second place, I was not perfectly clear the language as now presented is exactly what it ought to be.

The object of the amendment, the House will understand, is to prevent discrimination by railroad companies in favor of great oil companies who own their own tank-cars. The evidence taken before the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as the papers before the Committee on Commerce, discloses the fact that great monopolies in this country, like the Standard Oil Company, by furnishing their own tank-cars, get discrimination against companies who are forced to use barrels and ship their oil in them. The discrimination is very great in favor of the monopolies owning their own tank-cars. I have not the figures before me at this moment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will furnish them to be printed in the RECORD with my remarks.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Ohio states that he has the figures and will print them with his remarks in the RECORD.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this amounts to a discrimination of 30, 40, or 50 cents on each barrel, which is enough, you know, to drive the others out of the market.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. And does drive them out.

Mr. CRISP. I recollect, in looking over the matter, that from my own State the difference is over 30 or 40 cents a barrel.

These tank-cars are owned by the Standard Oil Company. They furnish their tank-cars to the railroad lines and the railroads charge less for oil shipped in these tank-cars than for the oil of other people which is shipped and sold in competition with the oil of the Standard Oil Company.

That case has been heard before the railroad commission. A gentleman by the name of Rice made the point. The railroad commission did not see how they could apply the remedy. This proposition is to give a remedy. While I am not entirely satisfied with the language and can not accept the amendment as a representative of the Commerce Committee, I am frank to say as an individual that I sympathize with the amendment. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the language of the amendment is in fault, when it comes before the conference committee it can be corrected.

Mr. GROSVENOR'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I now offer the following amendment.

Add at the end of section 2:

"That in all prosecutions under this section on complaint of a citizen of the United States such citizen shall be entitled to have and receive for his own benefit all fines that may be imposed and collected for any violations of said act in any and all prosecutions in which he may be such complainant, if such complainant shall prove that he has been injured by the said violations of this act."

"Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, to carry or transport any commodity, for any shipper, in a car or vehicle owned, leased, or in any way controlled by such shipper: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any shipper to make any contract with any carrier to convey the property of such shipper in cars or vehicles owned or controlled by such shipper.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, as the law stands at this time it is a burden upon any private individual or man of moderate means to carry on the prosecution or examination against a railroad corporation. This provision is a simple one. It provides that to the extent of the injury which a shipper has received by reason of the discrimination of which he has complained, and upon which he has received a decision in his favor, that he shall be entitled to that extent to be paid out of the fines to be assessed against the corporation. It seems to me that is perfectly fair. It is in the nature of a tax on the corporation in favor of the individual against whose rights it has itself acted in violation of law. It will do more, in my humble judgment, to make this law efficient and effective than any other provision we can put into it.

As it is now the remedy is so expensive that very few are able to secure it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CRISP. The amendment now proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] proposes to give the penalty to the informer; that is, the person bringing suit against the railroad company is to have the fine. I am opposed in principle to that kind of legislation, so far as I am concerned. It breeds a class of informers, a class of spies, a class of people who are not entitled to the sympathies of the court when they have cases of this sort. As suggested by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], by every account we get in history of this character of persons you will find they are odious, and so regarded by all people. I do not mean the men who complain, but the professional informers, who get the fines imposed by the court.

Now, you see while, of course, it is something of a hardship for a gentleman to appear before the commission with a complaint, yet you should recollect that you provide under the general law that he shall have his costs and counsel fees. I do not know what other expenses he may be subjected to except his personal expenses for traveling. All costs, witness fees, and counsel fees are taxed upon the defendant. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio now is to give him the fine. Is that the proposition?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is to compensate him for the particular damage which he may have sustained by a violation of the law.

Mr. CRISP. If the Clerk will report the amendment again I think my friend from Ohio will find that he is mistaken as to its purport. As I understand it, all fines go to the informer.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I consent that the gentleman is partly right and partly wrong. It ought not to take all the fine; but it is only for the purpose of compensating him for the damage done by a violation of the law. It can readily be modified, so that there can be no question as to its meaning, by the addition of these words at the end of the amendment, "to the extent and not beyond the amount of his actual injury thereby;" that will of course make it specific and prevent any misunderstanding.

Mr. CRISP. It is in the discretion of the court now as to how much the railroad company shall be fined; or it must be remembered that the officer violating the law may be imprisoned, if it be a willful violation under this amendment which we now propose.

This suggestion, however, of the gentleman from Ohio is a proposition that the complainant shall be paid out of the fine collected his damages. The law provides that he may get his damages by suit against the company, and that he gets his cost and counsel fees under the law. It seems to me, therefore, and I have not time to say more on this question, as the hour is nearly exhausted, that it will be a very great departure from the rule we have heretofore established. All of this system has been wiped out in our legislation heretofore. In the revenue laws we have repealed all provisions which permitted moieties to be paid to informers, because it will be remembered we once had such a system, but it is obnoxious to the people, and the general tendency, I think, is to oppose such legislation. I should regret very much to see that provision incorporated now in this bill, and I hope the House will not concur in the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If this was a proposition to create an informer I would be as strongly opposed to it as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], and for the same reasons; but it is not. No person other than the injured party is entitled to this compensation. Therefore the whole character of informer is wiped out. It does not interest any other than the party aggrieved or damaged under the interstate-commerce law. This provision is simply, if I may be permitted to state it that way, an amendment to an amendment, and provides that out of this fine the party injured shall be reimbursed for the discrimination that has been made against him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this amendment will make the provisions of this bill vastly more effective than the bill is now. The property that is taken from a railroad corporation in a fine is to be put into some other man's treasury, while the man actually injured by the outrage has no remedy except to proceed by a long litigation, which I had the honor to point out a long time ago was out of the reach of anybody of ordinary means in this country. This provides for a reinstatement or reimbursement, to the individual who has been injured, out of the money which the court has already assessed against the corporation, and which is the property of nobody. Nobody has lost anything except that one individual who was aggrieved. It amounts simply to this: To whom shall this money go? The law says it shall go into the public Treasury. I ask that a moiety or share of it, equal to the actual damages sustained, shall go to the person—not an informer—but the party discriminated against by the railroad. It is very easily ascertained. The court could refer it to a special master to ascertain the amount. The judgment is given as to what the rate shall be from point A to B and that it shall be at a certain price. This would simply be a reimbursement to the party overcharged.

Mr. CRISP. That would be using a penal law to collect it. The law gives the right to sue for damages, but the proposition of my friend would be to make the offense penal, and in that method to collect the damages. It really makes a penal law to collect the damages, and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to offer an amendment, in order that the amendment may be perfect. I propose to add at the end of the proposed amendment, "to an extent equal only to the amount of actual injury caused by such violation."

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The third amendment which I offered is of a very radical character. It would necessarily lead to a great deal of discussion, as it affects a great system of transportation in this country, and with the leave of the House I will withdraw that amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that he informed me he wanted to offer another amendment. I would be glad if he would offer it now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Georgia for calling my attention to it.

In line 15, page 20, in original section 22, I desire to add after the word "soldiers" the words "or inmates of soldiers and sailors' orphan homes."

I ask unanimous consent that that be placed in the bill.

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. I now move the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, in writing, was delivered to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, returning without approval House bill 6371, granting a pension to Jesse M. Stilwell.

The message also announced that the bills of the following titles having been presented to the President on August 27, 1888, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, have become laws without his signature, namely:

An act (H. R. 7508) granting a pension to Julia E. Ambrose;
An act (H. R. 8889) granting a pension to Charles Molseed;
An act (H. R. 9684) granting a pension to William J. Brown;
An act (H. R. 9697) granting a pension to Mrs. Helen B. Brown;
An act (H. R. 10275) granting a pension to Joseph Hunter, M. D.;
An act (H. R. 8545) for the relief of Samuel Purcell; and An act (H. R. 9795) to restore Nathaniel Francis to the pension-roll.

Also, that the following bills had been approved by the President September 11, 1888, namely:

An act (H. R. 7013) to place the name of Delia Newman on the pension-roll;
An act (H. R. 3902) for the relief of Sophia B. Moore;
An act (H. R. 5516) for the relief of John H. Weeks;
An act (H. R. 165) for the relief of H. C. Markham; and
An act (H. R. 8087) for the relief of Thomas Strodder.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3447) amendatory of the act relating to postal crimes and misdemeanors and the statutes therein mentioned.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which concurrence was requested, the resolution of the House to print 10,000 copies of the President's message and accompanying documents relating to the Pacific Railroad Commission.

The message further announced that Mr. BECK having been excused as a member of the conference committee on the sundry civil appropriation bill, Mr. COCKRELL had been appointed in his stead.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. We have eight minutes of the two hours remaining, and if the House will consent I will yield the time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] to ask consent for the consideration of a bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I now ask consideration of the bill to which I referred earlier in the day.

Mr. WEAVER. Within the eight minutes, let it be understood.

REGULATION OF CERTAIN RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 8367) to provide in certain cases for the regulation of railway companies chartered by the United States by the several States and Territories in which the railways of such companies run and are operated.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where any railroad company heretofore chartered or incorporated, or which hereafter may be chartered or incorporated by act of Congress, has built or constructed and operates, or shall build, construct, or operate a railroad through, across, or into the territorial limits of any State or Territory of the United States, the tolls, rates, and fares made or charged for the transportation of property and passengers over or upon such road or roads for traffic within the limits of a State or Territory, and the tariffs and schedules thereof shall be subject to the legislative control of and by the several States and Territories through, across, or into which such road or roads are constructed, built, or operated, anything in the charter of, or acts of Congress creating such, company or companies, or any law of any State or Territorial Legislature enacted in pursuance of such charter or act of incorporation, to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That section 1 of this act shall be limited in its operation, and shall apply only to the carriage and transportation, by such company or companies, of passengers and property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water (when both are used under a common management, control, or arrangement), from one place or station to another place or station, both being within the territorial limits of one and the same State or Territory, and shall in no case apply to any commerce between the States, Territories, or into foreign countries.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The bill was agreed to unanimously by the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VIOLATION OF POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. ROWLAND, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, submitted the following report:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to communicate to this House whether it is true that an enormous edition of a certain publication called the Tax-Reform Advocate has been sent and distributed, in violation of the postal laws, through the mails, being sent out from Columbus, Ohio, to all or nearly all the post-offices of the State, and, if such is the case, whether any officers or officer of the Post-Office Department has been guilty of such acts, or has known of the same and has not taken any steps to prevent the same; and also what further legislation by Congress is necessary to enforce the laws of the United States in regard to the postal service and to prevent the repetition of such offenses; and also the honorable Postmaster-General is requested to report what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to punish such offenses and to prevent their recurrence.

The committee, having had the same under consideration, recommend that the same do pass.

Mr. ROWLAND. I call the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ROWLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIRCUIT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT, MISSOURI.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 1604, entitled "An act to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

D. B. CULBERSON,
JOHN H. ROGERS,
L. B. CASWELL,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEORGE G. VEST,
JAMES F. WILSON,
RICHARD COKE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House submitted the following statement to accompany conference report on House bill 1604:

The effect of the report of the conference on the disagreement of the House to the amendment of the Senate may be stated as follows:

The House bill provided for a change of time of holding the circuit court in Kansas City.

The Senate amendment substituted for the House bill a provision regulating the times of holding the circuit court at the different places in the judicial district where the court is established, including Kansas City. To this amendment the House disagreed, and the conference recommends that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, my object being to reach the consideration of the bill to organize the Territory of Oklahoma.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER; and there were—ayes 45, noes 14.

Mr. BARNES. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to; and a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members answered to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doors will now be closed and the Clerk will call the names of the absentees. During this roll excuses may be offered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the list of absentees for the presentation of excuses.

The following-named members were absent on leave:

Allen, Mich.	De Lano,	Johnston, Ind.	Sherman,
Bacon,	Ermentrout,	Lehlbach,	Snyder,
Bayne,	Finley,	Long,	Steele,
Biggs,	Fitch,	Matson,	Stewart, Tex.

For the remaining absentees no excuses were offered, except in the following cases:

Mr. McSHANE. My colleague, Mr. LAIRD, has been called out on important business, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MOORE, be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. NUTTING, be excused for one day, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STEELE. My colleague, Mr. WHITE, was in the House just until the call was ordered, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That all leaves of absence be, and the same are hereby, revoked, excepting those for sickness or sickness in the absentee's family, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is hereby instructed to notify by telegram all absentees of the action of the House on this subject, requiring them to return forthwith, as well as those who are absent without leave; so that the public business may no longer be impeded by reason of their absence and the lack of a quorum.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope that this resolution will be adopted. It seems to me that this House ought to take some action to enforce the attendance of its members, so that the public business may no longer be impeded by reason of a lack of a quorum. Certain members feel compelled to stay here because they believe that a "public office is a public trust." [Laughter, and cries of "Chestnut!" on the Republican side.]

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, it is unfair to members who feel it their duty to be constantly in attendance upon the sessions of the House that others should be permitted to go off and reform their political "fences" at the public expense, inflicting upon those who remain great inconvenience in the transaction of the public business by reason of the difficulty of obtaining a quorum.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the American people, usually so quick-witted, are in this case more lacking in their ordinary acute appreciation of the obligation of public duties than would appear on the surface. Now, in the case of some of these statesmen who have gone forth to electrify the people with their views upon the tariff, how appropriate it would be after the public meeting was over if the people would organize a little private meeting, and would send up a resolution to this effect: "Whereas there is still pending in Congress important legislation, demanded by the people, which it is impossible to have accomplished by reason of the absence of this gentleman and other gentlemen from their posts, they are hereby instructed to return to their seats and earn the salaries they are drawing from the Treasury." [Applause.] Such a resolution, I am sure, ought to be enthusiastically adopted. A good, healthy "boycott" of this kind by the American people would be in order at this time and cause them to come back.

We have on our statute-book a law which instructs the Sergeant-at-Arms to deduct from the pay of each member—it is an absolute, plain law, and it is remarkable that it has never been enforced—the Sergeant-at-Arms is instructed by positive law to deduct from each member's account the amount of his per diem for each day that he is absent without leave. If this question was measured by dollars and cents I think every member would find fourteen good reasons every day why he should get back.

A MEMBER. We understand it is to be enforced.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It is about time it should be.

A MEMBER. You were absent for awhile.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I was absent, but only for a few days; and I had a biblical excuse. [Laughter.] I went home to get married; that was all right. The House would unanimously give leave of absence for such a purpose as that. I am criticising absence for political reasons.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this resolution will be not only adopted but enforced; and I trust no member of this House will be so wanting in consistency as to get up here to-morrow and ask us, as has been done heretofore, to grant additional leaves of absence. The action of this House in the last case of this kind, when on a Saturday it adopted a resolution revoking all leaves of absence and sending out telegrams to bring members here, and then on the following Monday extended leave of absence to two gentlemen to go home and engage in the political campaign in Indiana, was a farce, and no member could fail to recognize it as such. Those two gentlemen are now speaking to the people of that State; but do you not think in that case, as both candidates were members of the House, they should have remained here and made their campaign from their seats?

The Oklahoma bill my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has charge of to-day ought to pass, and important labor bills are still pending that ought to be passed. Concerning pending labor bills, while now on the floor it will save me the trouble of hereafter referring to it by now calling attention to a series of falsehoods that I noticed in a Massachusetts paper, signed by a man named Frisbie, who, I am informed, is associated with a claim agent of this city, one J. Daniels, who has faithfully labored to secure contracts from workingmen to pay him 25 per cent. of their claims, and by his pernicious activity has retarded and injured the prospects of the bill more than any other cause. We will take care to protect the workingmen against these claim agents when the bill comes up again.

I am not now and never have been in charge of the bill. Those members in charge of it have faithfully done their duty, and I have cheerfully co-operated with them. Of the four days given to the Committee on Labor during this session almost the entire time during two days was given to this back-pay question, and I hope it may be yet reached and disposed of.

For my part, every member of this House is at liberty to make such efforts as he thinks proper to secure a day for the consideration of this bill. I have tried day after day to secure additional time for labor legislation and without success. I am not in the way of any member who desires to make the effort.

They have my permission to get up here day after day and try to get a time fixed for its consideration.

If my friend from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] could bring back into the fold those absent brethren, we might secure several days for the consideration of important pension legislation. If those members were brought back, and if we would legitimately and intelligently apply ourselves to the discharge of public work, we could make such a record in reference to the accomplishment of efficient legislation as has never been known in the history of this country. [Applause.]

If we adopt that resolution, let it be distinctly understood we mean it, and that we are going to send for these absent gentlemen. Let us appoint enough deputy sergeants-at-arms to go to the various localities and insist that these gentlemen shall come back. [Laughter and applause.] If you intend to do this, adopt the resolution; but if you do not, it certainly ought to be defeated.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] offers this resolution and complains of the absence of gentlemen at this time. He thinks it necessary. My friend has been absent, at least with the permission of the House, for reasons entirely satisfactory to himself. The gentleman from Missouri has also been absent.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The gentleman has no right to refer to that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not complain of it. I think my friend from Missouri did well, much better than we expected. [Laughter.] I think other friends may do as well as the gentleman from Missouri, and I do not see why he wishes to stop here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is an unusual reason for the absence of members of the House. We have reached the 13th of September. We are detained here, not by the business of the House. We should have adjourned many weeks ago so far as the situation of the business of the House relating to legislation is concerned. We are detained by the action of the Senate, and I may speak plainly for we all know the situation. We are detained by a question relating to taxation. That is a question for their own consideration and does not lie within the power of the House. I am not here to declaim against the Senate for its action.

Some time ago I did vote to send for absent members. The situation, as known to us all, was that they prevented the passage of one of the important appropriation bills by the persistent opposition of persons interested in certain claims.

A MEMBER. Is not the condition now the same as it was then?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will come to that. We did take action, finding ourselves in that situation, and sent for the absentees. They came, and we disposed of the emergency.

What is the situation now? There is a bill known as the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. There is another, known as the Dakota bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, and another, known as the Dakota bill, as the gentleman from New York suggests; but I take it the Oklahoma bill is the principal one.

A MEMBER. And several pension bills.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will come to that. It is an important measure, one about which gentlemen differ. There are two reports, able reports, on the subject. The matter might go over, and would have gone over, but for the difficulty with the Senate, to the next session. We can adjourn and let it go over, and from indications it will then become a law.

Now, I submit, we are in the month of September, when gentlemen have been kept here far beyond the legislative period, kept from their business, from their private affairs, and we ought not, in the case of members who are absent, to resort to any harsh rule and treat their absence as though it were an ordinary case of absenteeism during a period when the House is usually in session.

I do not believe, sir, that the absenteeism of this time is of a criminal character, as set forth by gentlemen in their speeches, and as they would endeavor to press upon us by their action upon this floor. I do not believe it is an absenteeism that would have occurred originally or prior to any reasonable date, say the 1st day of August. It occurs now because this is an exceptional time and an exceptional condition of things. These are facts that we should remember; and I trust, sir, that we will exercise that calm judgment about it which justice to our associates requires. I am not willing, simply that the Oklahoma bill may be taken up, that every gentleman who is absent for one cause or another shall be summoned to this Capitol by telegraph, and that if he does not come he shall be arrested and brought as a criminal before the bar of the House. I do not believe that it is the judgment of this House that there is such an exigency pressing.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has suggested that the situation is the same as when we passed a similar resolution some time ago. I submit that this is not a parallel case. Then there was an appropriation bill before the House, and a bill that was necessary to be passed before Congress could adjourn. If we reach a period when gentlemen determine that rather than the House shall adjourn without the disposition of the Oklahoma bill no appropriation bill shall be passed, and the machinery of the Government must stop, we will then have reached an emergency when such a resolution as is now proposed may be proper, and when our associates who are absent will feel that it is reasonable for us to require their attendance. I have no doubt when such an emergency arises they will respond with alacrity. But until we shall reach that situation I am utterly opposed to any such course as is here proposed.

The gentleman from New York has suggested that there are also some pension bills. That may be true. And yet I scarcely think that our friends would insist on sending for the absent members merely for the purpose of taking action on the pension bills at this time. I believe the country would accept an adjournment of Congress at this time more as a relief than otherwise but for the existence of a certain class of legislation. My own opinion is, sir, barring that question, that the adjournment would be received with satisfaction by the people, and that the sooner the House adjourns the better; and I had rather, sir, that we should adjourn this House than pass this legislation, or that we should adjourn for three days at a time, until the Senate shall have taken action with reference to taxation. [Applause.]

Under these circumstances I am not willing to give my assent to the adoption of such a resolution.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] took occasion to refer to me as one of the causes of the obstruction of the business of this House. I desire to remind the gentleman and the House that at the time the resolution was under consideration—I refer to the resolution which was called up by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], and upon which we spent two hours of consideration, the resolution fixing a time for the consideration of general pension bills—a call of the House was had during the two days, and a quorum answered.

When a quorum had appeared and the vote was taken upon the passage of the resolution, fifty-four gentlemen, members of this House, the political associates of my genial friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL], refused to answer to their names, and thereby again broke the quorum. I am not responsible therefore for the delay. It is due to the gentlemen on the other side. Let them take the responsibility.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those members of this House who believe that there is no public necessity and no public demand for the adoption of this resolution or for anything that may grow out of its adoption. We are here in the middle of the tenth month of this session of Congress. It has been unusually prolonged. It has been a long, hard pull. In the early portion of the session there were some delays, and I want to remind gentlemen on the other side, and especially do I commend this suggestion to the gentleman from Missouri, who has certainly broken out with an extraordinary degree of activity for the transaction of public business——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have been here all along, sir. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. To remind the gentleman that for nine days of this session he joined with a minority to absolutely suspend all public business.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. To do what?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Which of course was a matter of judgment on the part of gentlemen connected with it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Why, I was not here. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. And I do not introduce this subject for the purpose of complaint or for the purpose of criticising the action of the gentleman, but simply to say that there was a delay for which the gentleman and his party associates were more or less responsible. So the session ran along, and a debate which in point of time exhausted and in point of ability manifested has never been equaled by any debate upon any economic question on the continent of America and probably not in this world ensued. The appropriation bills have been substantially gotten out of the way, and within the last week the last of them has passed the House of Representatives.

The time has come, therefore, when members of Congress who desire to be here in December ready for business have a right, Mr. Speaker, under all the usages of Congress, to go home and attend to whatever business they may find to engage in. It is a very small piece of business for a member of Congress here to criticise at this point of time the judgment of men who are disinclined to sit down here day after day and go through this miserable dribble of legislation. The public are not asking it at the hands of Congress. I defy any gentleman to put his finger on a paragraph from a respectable newspaper of this country where the action of members of Congress in going amongst their constituencies in this great exigency of politics has been criticised. It has not been criticised in my district by the very vigilant members of the opposition. It has not been criticised when a large number, about an equal number of gentlemen composing each party, made their appearance in the contested State of Maine during the last two weeks of the campaign. I heard no complaint whatever. To tell you the truth, the people of the country are positively more interested in the issue of the coming campaign than they are in what will be done by a little, unselfish, faithful, perspiring band of patriots who choose to remain here in Washington. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another suggestion, and I make it for the benefit and commend it to the consideration of members on the other side of the House, and that is, that there is vastly more danger of injury to the public welfare in the passage of bad legislation at this time than there can possibly be in allowing these bills, or any of them, to be laid aside and go over from now until December next.

And I want to say that you can not bring members of Congress in here as might be done with school children and compel them to do your bidding. You may have measures—and I do not criticise them, though I have my own judgment in regard to some of them—that you think are vitally important to the country, but other gentlemen do not seem to understand it in that line. A clean majority of the House of Representatives, just as responsible to their constituents as you, have seen fit to go home and seen fit to mingle with their fellow-citizens, and press their re-election, or whatever they may consider to their interest at home, and their judgment is just as good as the judgment of you who are staying here and dragging out the session to an untimely extent.

I have heard vastly more criticism at the apparent purpose to remain here and prevent any vacation than I have about the absenteeism of anybody. It is not a question, Mr. Speaker, of whether a man is always in his seat so much as it is as to whether he is able to discharge his duties satisfactorily to his constituency; and if he has done that he is not to be called up as though he were recreant and be put up to be lectured by everybody who can get upon this floor and who may possibly have bills for consideration. The gentlemen who are anxious to have such bills pass will find that they can promote their passage vastly better by going along and taking things as they find them than they will by undertaking to force Congress to do anything.

A member of the American Congress is not to be driven about the country as though he were a criminal. If he takes it upon himself to go to that highest source of power, the constituency that sends him here, he frankly recognizes the fact that he is absent from his post; it is not a proper proceeding to send out for him and break up his arrangements in order to bring him back here; and nobody will make anything by it in personal popularity or in furtherance of the business of the House. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the country escaped very well from the hands of this Congress, and that they are willing to stand about where they do stand. They have made an extraordinarily safe escape from the hands of this Congress. I think the issues of 1888 are made up, and that there will be no supplemental pleadings filed that will be recognized by the great court before which these great questions are to be tried. The issues are made up on which the judgment of the people of this country is to determine these questions. To hurry legislation here under whip and spur and propose to drag here unwilling members of Congress would simply be to put upon the statute-books legislation which has not been properly considered and which is utterly valueless to this country.

Mr. TAULBEE. Would it disturb the gentleman for me to ask him a question here?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not in the least.

Mr. TAULBEE. Do I understand by the statement of the gentleman that there will be no supplemental pleadings filed in the issue that the Senate will not report a bill revising the tariff?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not here to criticise the action of the Senate or to speak for it. I am not here criticising the action of the Ways and Means Committee of this House which took a long time to incubate the tariff bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Eight months.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is not for me to say that the gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee delayed one hour or one moment beyond what they saw was right. I believe it is the duty of every member of Congress to carefully consider measures before presenting them to this House—and certainly it ought to come with very poor grace from that side of the House. I believe the Committee on Ways and Means, in their long delay in reporting the bill, acted in good faith; and in the long discussion of fifty-odd days—almost three months—the bill was under discussion here I am not willing to say, and I do not say, that any member of this House occupied one moment of time over what he thought was proper in the discharge of his duty to the people of this country.

Now, then, to answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky. The Senate of the United States ought not to be, and shall not without rebuke in my presence, be criticised for its present action. If I had my way——

Mr. TAULBEE. I beg leave to state that I am not criticising the Senate; but the gentleman has failed to answer my question. I want him to tell us what he means by the pleadings to which he referred, so that we may understand just what he is talking about. Then I want about five minutes in which I may be heard in reply to his argument.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman ought not to break into my speech in that sort of way.

I was saying if I had had my way, there would not have been any of this tariff discussion and consideration after the House of Representatives passed a bill, which I believe now will be repudiated by the American people by a verdict so overwhelmingly decisive that in December next we will understand better what to do than we do now. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Senate has seen proper to enter upon consideration of the bill, and in doing so they have acted according to the dictates of their judgment, and not according to the dictation either of myself or the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think the gentleman ought to consume all of my time. He has made a fairly long speech already, and I have not. I want to occupy only about five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is speaking in his own time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am speaking in my own time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I thought the gentleman gave me the floor. [Laughter.] I ask him now whether he will not divide his time with me. We have got only twenty-one minutes altogether before the hour for adjournment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will divide my time with somebody before I get through. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky wants to know what I mean by the filing of supplemental pleadings. I will tell him. When, after the presentation here of the President's message, which for the first time in the history of this Government treated upon a single proposition only, the Mills bill was brought forth here and carried through by the power and influence of this Administration and by the Democratic party, the Republicans almost unanimously voting against it, the issue for the Presidential election of 1888 was made up. The petition had been filed upon the part of the Democratic party asking for a reduction of tariff duties in that form, and upon the plan and idea in that bill contained, and the Republican party had made a general denial of the propriety of that sort of legislation.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman's party considered the issue closed, I would like to know——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. TAULBEE. I was only going to ask what they were doing in the Senate, if his party considered the issue closed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am telling the gentleman what I meant by supplemental pleadings. When the people of this country were ready to go to battle upon one great question and one great issue, and that they did not care a fig for any other, it was a supplemental pleading for the President of the United States, after the Senate, acting properly and legitimately under their constitutional right, had rejected a treaty—it was, I say, a supplemental pleading on the part of the President to formulate a bill of particulars such as he sent to Congress and undertake in that way to make up a new issue, and to seek to create a public discussion of a question of war or peace with England and a question of retaliation and all that.

Mr. TAULBEE. Did it hurt?

Mr. GROSVENOR. And the result of it is that the American people understand that, and laugh in the face of the man who talks about any issue of retaliation in this campaign.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe there were only four dissenting Republican votes on the passage of that bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to interruption. I can not talk against a brass band, a steam-boat whistle, or the voice of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE]. [Laughter.]

Again, Mr. Speaker, when the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, acting jointly, passed a bill upon the subject of carrying into effect an existing treaty between the Chinese Empire and this country, and when that bill was lying upon the table of the President ready for his signature or his disapproval, and the exigencies of the campaign in one of the States of this Union made it necessary that something should be done to retrieve the falling fortunes of the party to which the President belongs, it was a supplemental pleading that was sent in here from the State Department with the approval of the President, as is fully admitted everywhere, a bill to be passed into a law revoking and abrogating a treaty and undertaking to place upon the table of the President at the same time two bills, one of them to carry into effect a treaty and the other to abrogate a treaty. It created a condition damaging to the wisdom and the honor of this country.

Mr. TAULBEE. Why did you not vote against it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was not here.

A MEMBER. He was in Maine. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. But I will tell the gentleman who did vote against it, and I will tell him who it was that came to the rescue of the honor of the American people. It was one Senator in the Senate of the United States who dared to lift up his voice in opposition to it, and to point out the terrible stultification into which the Administration was projecting us—JOHN SHERMAN, of Ohio; and it was another American Senator who moved to reconsider the hasty, injudicious, and almost revolutionary act by which that bill was passed. The answer to the whole proposition is that to-day there is not a Democrat on that side of the House, nor a Democratic Senator, nor the President himself, nor any member of his Cabinet, who will stand up and say that he wants that bill to become a law. [Cries on the Democratic side of "Oh, yes!" and "We all want it!"]

Mr. GROSVENOR. They have been crying out with a Macedonian cry for some one to come and save the people of the United States from the disgrace of the supplemental pleading which the President filed in that case.

That is what I mean by supplemental pleading. I mean an attempt to turn aside the people of this country from consideration of the blunder committed in introducing and passing the Mills bill. From one end of the country to the other the response is coming. It is not coming from the Republican States of the North alone. There are indications of an uprising in the South, and I can say to some of the gentlemen on the other side who think that they are secure of their seats that possibly before the frost comes some of them will be found going home to look after their interests as members of the next Congress of the United States.

The sound comes up from Kentucky. It comes from the State of Arkansas, where 36,000 majority was cut down suddenly to about 13,000. It has come from everywhere; and I predict to the gentlemen on the other side that when they get back here in December they will have to hunt around for somebody they know among those who have been elected on that side to the Fifty-first Congress. [Laughter.]

So, Mr. Speaker, I say the duty of the hour does not lie in dragging in this Hall men who have to be at home attending to their business. It lies in the direction of closing up the business of this session as soon as possible; and then let the Democratic members of this House get down on their knees before their constituents and cry out, "Lord, be merciful to us sinners!" [Laughter and applause.]

I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like the gentleman from Ohio to give me a little time.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution. The gentlemen who have asked leave to be absent from the House have done so for reasons which are evidently sufficient to themselves. That leave was granted by the House; and unless public necessity should absolutely require their presence here, it appears to me it would be a violation of good faith if we should undertake to rescind that leave.

I wish to say a word in reply to the remarks of my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. He criticises the Senate as being responsible for the delay in the termination of this session. I want to call his attention to the fact that it took (to be accurate) exactly seven months and nineteen days for the "dark-lantern committee" to formulate, introduce, and pass the Mills bill. Not a single man in all this country representing the laborer or the manufacturer was invited to be present before that committee to submit any argument in reference to his side of the case. The right of petition, a right dear to the American people, was denied by the action of that committee. Mr. Speaker, it is just fifty-four days since that bill went to the Senate. Are we to sit here now and criticise the Senate because of the fact that they are giving to the manufacturers, the wage-workers, and to all the people the right to be heard on a question which is fraught with great good or great evil to the country? It seems to me not. I think the position of the gentleman from Georgia, in criticising the Senate, is not well taken.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, rose.

Mr. GEAR. I do not yield. The gentleman can talk in his own time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I know the gentlemen does not wish to be unjust.

Mr. GEAR. I do not yield.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman on the other side says it is time for us to go home. Why does not the Committee on Rules report the resolution for final adjournment which was offered here the other day? They have the power to do so. Why do you not report it, gentlemen, and give us an opportunity to vote on that question? Then we will tell you whether in our judgment it is time to go home or not; and if that resolution should pass here and go to the Senate that body will give us their opinion of it very quickly. It is, in my judgment, bad policy and bad politics for my friend from Georgia to criticise the Senate for the delay connected with this session when gentlemen on the other side have taken seven months and nineteen days for the framing and consideration of one bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the floor to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe I had the promise of the gentleman from Ohio that he would give me five minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. TAULBEE. Now let the gentleman from Illinois yield me five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in the ten minutes remaining of to-day's session I can hardly say what I want to say.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TAULBEE. I only ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me enough time to ask unanimous consent that the session be extended five minutes in order that I may be heard. [Laughter and cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CANNON. Why does the gentleman from Kentucky insist on wasting my time? I want to say a word in reply to my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. He says it is notorious that the House could have adjourned (if it had desired or been ready for adjournment) weeks ago. Well, I suppose it could; but it did not. Three times, if not four, have the general appropriations for the service of the Government for the last fiscal year been extended into this year.

A MEMBER. Four times.

Mr. CANNON. I have been very anxious during all these weeks that we should close up the business of the House, provide for the public service, and then, if the House did not signify its readiness to adjourn——

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of order. My point of order is that this discussion is not pertinent to the issue pending; it is a manifest effort to waste time and delay the business of this House. I shall insist that gentlemen engaging in this debate shall proceed strictly in order. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not see that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is out of order. He seems to be replying to the argument made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will say again that if this House had passed the sundry civil bill, the deficiency bill, and the other appropriation bills weeks ago we could have been ready to go home. I have not felt free to go for the reason this work yet remained to be done, and as one member of the House I felt it to be my duty to do it, although time and again I have asked, in season and out of season, the business be presented; and for weeks I have been standing with other members on this side of the House, asking that the point of no quorum be not made so this important business could be transacted with less than a quorum because there was no quorum here to do it.

Now, when this House gets ready to adjourn by performing its part of the duty of legislation, and informs the Senate so far as it is concerned it has finished its business and is ready to adjourn——

A MEMBER. That is right.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CANNON. Not now.

Mr. TAULBEE. For a question that is pertinent?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. Then if the Senate is not ready to adjourn it will indicate a time when it will be ready, and if it is ready to adjourn let it concur in the resolution. In either event if the House has clean skirts and has performed its duty and the Senate has failed to perform its duty let the Senate be responsible. [Applause.]

I tell you gentlemen on the other side of the House, as much as I admire your great ability, you have not ability enough to run this House and the Senate, too. [Laughter and applause.]

I will now yield to my friend from Kentucky to ask his question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am obliged to the gentleman for yielding to me the six minutes remaining. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I yield for a question only. [Renewed laughter.] The gentleman asked to be permitted to ask a question in the middle of a sentence, and I did not yield at that time; but as the gentleman is himself disposed to be courteous, I will be courteous to him and permit him to ask his question. I will still retain the floor.

Mr. TAULBEE. My question is not pertinent to the resolution pending before the House, but it is pertinent to the discussion had by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] all of which I have contended was out of order as being irrelevant to the pending question.

It relates to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has been pleased to call the pleadings upon which the issues are to be joined in the campaign on which we are entering. [Laughter and applause.] I put the question to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and so far as I caught his answer he claims that the pleadings consist of the President's messages. If that be true his party is excusable for entering upon trial without plea or traverse, for the people ordered the previous question on messages from Republican Presidents in 1884, and they will have no opportunity to plead for the next twenty-five years. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, if the pleadings consist in the legislative records of the two parties compared to their promises in their respective national platforms of 1884, then the pleadings will not be complete until the Republican party either joins issue with the Democratic party as to the mode of revising the tariff, or until a Republican Senate by its failure to report a bill confesses itself incapable of dealing with the question and unwilling to even make a feint at compliance with its promises and goes before the country content with asking the voters to allow them the benefit of a traverse, thus hoping to prevent a judgment by default.

Will the gentleman from Ohio or the gentleman from Illinois longer claim that the Democratic party is afraid to take a position on any economic question? Afraid to take the aggressive, or that it is not a party of positive ideas, or delinquent in the matter of complying with its promises?

Has not the Democratic party given to the country a bill revising the tariff schedule? Has not that bill gone to the Senate, and, although the gentlemen and their party claim that the most disturbing and depressing influence brought to bear on the business interests of the country is the agitation of tariff taxes, yet has not the Senate and its Committee on Finance been for more than fifty days juggling and smuggling and "tinkering" with the tariff? And are not the gentlemen on this floor and at the other end of the Capitol trying day by day to evade the issues and go into the campaign without a clearly defined position, hoping to hoodwink the people with empty promises renewed, which they now have the power and opportunity to comply with, but which they never intended to fulfill? [Applause.]

I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in order that he may answer. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute of my time, after having answered the question of the gentleman from Kentucky, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCULLOGH. Mr. Speaker, some little reflection has been made on the Senate in regard to its non-action. I only wish to call the attention of the House to one or two things in our own history. The first is that we came here last winter, many of us new members and unknown to the Speaker, it is true (but for the first few weeks of the session the Speaker was busy in matters pertaining to Kentucky and election committees), and it took the House in its wisdom, in its private consultations, and its assembled statesmanship, which had been here for years, from the 5th day of December until the 10th day of January before we knew where the House and the country were to look for a tariff bill to originate. [Cries of "Time!" "Time!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will desist. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, under its previous order, stands adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. PHELAN: Joint resolution (H. Res. 222) requiring consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the St. John's River, Florida, below Palatka, Fla.—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BELDEN: A bill (H. R. 11427) granting a pension to Amasa Chase—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE: A bill (H. R. 11428) for the relief of W. J. Bond—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: A bill (H. R. 11429) for the relief of Francis Palms et al.—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. SHIVELY: A bill (H. R. 11430) to increase the pension of Harlan E. King—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNES: Resolutions of the Farmers' Alliance of Columbia County, Georgia, relating to trusts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOWEN: Petition of W. D. Brooks and 19 others, citizens of Franklin County, Virginia, in favor of House bills 10320 and 11027 for pure food and pure lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CARUTH: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of James D. Maclay—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. LODGE: Petition of W. M. Bicknell and 14 others, of Malden, and of Helen Ware Myrick and 20 others, of Northborough, Mass., for a pension to Anna Ella Carroll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBERTSON: Petition of James Hagerty, of Washington, La., for relief—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Also, petition of Alexis Leduf, of widow of Samuel S. Simmons, and of Brevard Markin, tutor of minors of John Ward, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of William Stevens and 86 others, citizens of Putnam County, Ohio, in favor of pure food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of A. M. Boxwell and 26 others, citizens of Putnam County, Ohio, in favor of pure lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, September 14, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Lorenzo R. Whitlock, of Albany, Oregon, late of Company E, Boyle's Regiment Missouri Volunteers, praying that his name be placed on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Miss Anna Platt, late a volunteer army nurse, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN. I present resolutions passed at the meeting of the Farmers' Alliance of Columbia County, Georgia. In the first resolution they denounce combines and trusts as unfriendly to the interests of mankind and say that they ought to be made felonies by the laws of the States and of the United States, and they then resolve that they urge upon Congress the immediate suspension of tariff or customs duties on all imports of cotton bagging and jute butts used in the manufacture of cotton bagging. I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of Henry B. Blackwell and others, men and women, of Massachusetts, South Carolina, and New Jersey, praying that a pension be granted to Miss Anna Ella Carroll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

JAMES BRIDGER.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 480) for the relief of James Bridger or his legal representatives, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the claim of James Bridger for the value of the improvements erected and constructed by him at Fort Bridger, and the rent of said premises by the United States Army, situated in Green River County, in the Territory of Utah, appropriated by the United States to its own use, be referred to the Secretary of War, who shall investigate the justice and equity of said claim, and report the amount and value of such improvements used and occupied by the United States Army, and under what circumstances, contracts, and agreements said premises were taken and used by said Army, and also what amount, if any, has been paid for the same; and that he also report what amount of money is equitably due said Bridger, or his heirs, on account of said claim, together with the evidence, for the consideration of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3549) for the relief of John A. Barton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3550) granting a pension to Lorenzo R. Whitlock, of Albany, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3551) granting a pension to Miss Anna Platt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 3552) to abolish rents for the use of Potomac water for domestic purposes in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLODGETT introduced a bill (S. 3553) granting a pension to Joseph J. McIntire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPRINTING OF A RESOLUTION.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the joint resolution (S. R. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting establishments of religion and free public schools be reprinted.

THE COPPER TRUST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] coming over from yesterday, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution directing the Committee on Finance to inquire whether a foreign syndicate or trust controls the production of copper in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. VEST. I believe it was upon this resolution that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made some remarks yesterday on the strength of a publication in the New York World. I would prefer that that Senator be present when I make a statement in regard to the same matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution can lie over, if the Senator desires, until the Senator from Massachusetts comes in.

Mr. VEST. I should prefer that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over for the present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8367) to provide in certain cases for the regulation of railway companies chartered by the United States by the several States and Territories in which the railways of such companies run and are operated; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House requested the Senate to furnish it with a duplicate copy of the engrossed bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams.

The message further announced that the House requested the Senate to return to it the bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to H. R. Blakiston.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1506) for the relief of Addie Bell;

A bill (S. 2252) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company;

A bill (S. 2576) granting a pension to Richard Hudson;

A bill (S. 2750) to increase the pension of Samuel A. Tate;

A bill (S. 2913) granting a pension to Mary Sturgess; and

A bill (S. 3186) granting a pension to Christian Winkel.

FORT MORGAN MILITARY RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up House bill 10679, Order of Business 2025.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will allow the first bill on the Calendar to be stated, when the Chair will recognize him.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1986, a bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120, in the city of Washington, on certain conditions.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill which I ask the Senate to take up proposes to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan, on the spit of land that runs out from Florida. It would be a very great advantage to the Government to have the road there, and the officers of the Government have surveyed and located it according to the necessities of the military as well as the commercial situation. The bill was passed by the House of Representatives. I ask that the Senate consider it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10679) to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. By not only the rules of the Senate, but by the agreement, as I supposed, of gentlemen on both sides, without making any more definite reference to it, it was agreed that we should proceed to the business of the morning hour in the ordinary way under the rule except where appropriation bills and certain other bills should be taken up by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. When was that agreement made?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was made two or three weeks ago, but has been lost sight of by the interposition of the Chinese question.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not here when any agreement of that kind was made, otherwise I would not have presumed to violate it. At the same time this is the first request I have made of the Senate on a question of this kind. The passage of the bill I have called up is a matter of no concern to me at all, but it is important to the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to object to the bill, but I wish to remind Senators of what occurred a week or two ago.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not aware of any agreement of that kind.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was the understanding, but I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is my business to do that. I do not care to object against bills which Senators desire to call up, but I have stated the agreement and I think we ought to go on under it. The Senator's bill will probably be reached in due order.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. No, it will not be reached this session. There is no chance for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. I stepped out of the Senate a moment since, and when I came in I was informed that a resolution which I offered yesterday, and which I supposed would have precedence before we go to the Calendar, was taken up and was laid over because I was out of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair laid the resolution before the Senate, when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] stated that he desired to make some observations in reply to remarks made yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on the resolution and preferred that that Senator should be present when they were made, whereupon the resolution was informally laid aside until the Senator from Massachusetts should come in.

Mr. PLATT. I do not want the resolution to lose its chance this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10679) to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. After this bill is disposed of—for I do not wish to take any snap judgment—I shall again call the attention of the Senate to the understanding, and insist upon the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair of course desires to enforce any understanding, but such an understanding is not in the recollection of the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Chair was not necessarily advised of the order. It was an agreement among Senators that a certain line of business should be pursued.

Mr. MORGAN. It was not made in open Senate. I do not know of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object to the bill now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE COPPER TRUST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the appearance of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire whether a foreign syndicate, combination, or trust controls the production of copper in the United States, and has thereby largely increased the price of all articles made therefrom to the consumers; and if so, whether any legislation can be devised to relieve the people of the United States from such injurious effects of the operation of such foreign combination, trust, or syndicate, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have nothing to say in regard to the merits of the resolution. I have no obstacle to interpose to its adoption.

Yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] read from the New York World a statement to the effect that several Democrats had made contributions amounting to $120,000 to the campaign fund of the Democratic party. It has been the fashion with our friends on the other side of the Chamber, for several days past, to make a special attack upon Hon. WILLIAM L. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, and his name has been brought here in many connections that are not at all complimentary to his character as a public man. I have a dispatch from Mr. SCOTT, which in sheer justice to him I desire to read to the Senate. He telegraphs to me as follows, being out of the city:

There is not a word of truth in Mr. HOAR'S statement.

WILLIAM L. SCOTT.

The statement was made upon the authority of the New York World, and it was made by the Senator from Massachusetts, accompanied with the allegation that it comes from a Democratic newspaper.

It is but just to the Democratic party to say, without pretending upon my part to make any attack upon the New York World, that it is not in my judgment strictly a Democratic paper. That journal exercises the liberty, which it unquestionably has, of supporting the administration of Mr. Cleveland or not supporting it. I do not understand that it is a Democratic paper within the proper meaning of the term.

I have from other gentlemen whose names are mentioned in this editorial the statement that there is absolutely not the slightest foundation for the allegations made in this publication.

Mr. HOAR. What is the statement in regard to Mr. SCOTT which the Senator from Missouri considers untrue and wishes to correct, if he will allow me?

Mr. VEST. I gave Mr. SCOTT'S statement in regard to it. The statement as made in the editorial read yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts is as follows:

President Cleveland is not alone in his contribution to the campaign fund. His check for $10,000 on Riggs & Co., the Washington bankers, has been "seen" by Chairman Brice, who "goes" him $10,000 better, and Congressman WILLIAM L. SCOTT does the same thing.

That is, Congressman WILLIAM L. SCOTT is stated here to have subscribed $20,000 to the campaign fund of the Democratic party. Mr. SCOTT in his telegram states that there is not one word of truth in that statement, and it is but just to him that it should be made public.

The Senator from Massachusetts arraigns these prominent Democrats who are not present in the Senate for having made these voluntary contributions to the campaign fund of the party to which they belong, and he makes as the groundwork of his complaint a bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], which proposed to punish, as the Senator from Massachusetts alleges, for I have never read the bill, a contribution by any executive officer of the Government to the campaign fund of any political party.

I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to state the other day when he discussed a publication made by an employé of the Senate that an American citizen had a perfect right to express his opinions as to any political question, and that, if an employé or officer of the Government, or of either branch of Congress, he had the right to place his official character upon that publication in order to give it credit and weight in the community. If that be so, what discrimination does the Senator make between the right of any American citizen to express his sentiments and to argue in behalf of them and his right to take his money and give it voluntarily to the party of which he is a member for legitimate campaign purposes?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that he totally misapprehends the point of my statement the other day, which of course is my fault and not his, because the Senator is a person whose keenness of apprehension nobody would question.

I stated the first time I called attention to the bill and to the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] that I did not at all concur with him in the view which he entertained. I merely stated it as an illustration of what I considered a wholly unreasonable and unsound view of civil-service reform, and I stated then that I thought, office-holder or no office-holder, any American citizen had a right to express his opinion, make arguments to his fellow-citizens, to engage in political activities, and to contribute his money, whether he was an office-holder or not, just as he would—I used the illustration—if he were an officer of a bank or a railroad. That is my opinion.

If I am not abusing the Senator's patience I will say that the first time I alluded to the bill and argument of the Senator from Indiana I did so to show that he in his view of the civil-service reform thought this was a thing for which the executive officer should be sent to the penitentiary, should be dismissed from office, and should be rendered incapable of holding any office in future. Yesterday my allusion to it and my reading of certain matter from the New York World was in reference to the charge made on the other side of the Chamber that there was a certain connection between the Republican party and the great trusts or monopolies. I read that statement from what I supposed was an eminent Democratic authority, and then had read from the record what certainly Mr. SCOTT will not deny—of course we accept his denial absolutely in regard to this matter—his own statement, or the statement furnished at any rate to the Congressional Directory of his connection with this vast railroad control. If it had been a charge which I considered a charge of turpitude or of impropriety, if it had been anything that I disapproved against anybody, I certainly should not have made it in the Senate on the authority of this paper.

I will say, however, and I certainly do not want to do this gentleman any injustice, and I do not think it is anything that he would regard as an improper charge, but rather creditable to him—I think I am not mistaken in my recollection in saying that a distinguished member of the other House informed me that the gentleman referred to informed him that he made a very large contribution to the Democratic campaign fund four years ago, when Mr. Cleveland was elected. I think I am quite certain of that fact, but I would not even allude to it without giving Mr. SCOTT an opportunity to say whether it be true or not if it had been anything discreditable.

My point is that when these gentlemen are getting up and talking about trusts, from their candidate for the Presidency down through their various speakers in various places, it is proper that the people should know that the great monopolies and trusts of this country are on the Democratic side; that they constitute its treasury in large part, and that the persons whose names are known as the controllers of great business influences, regulating prices, governing transportation, dealing with the necessaries of life, are interested and enlisted and zealous for the re-election of the present occupant of the White House. That is my point, not that it is improper for anybody to subscribe to a campaign fund.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts now to state that he makes no objection to or criticism upon voluntary contributions by members of the Democratic party, whether they are executive officers or not.

Mr. HOAR. I shall make a contribution myself, I will inform the Senator, to the extent of my ability, and beyond my ability, before the campaign gets through.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator to state that he simply cited the bill that was introduced here by my friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], but that he does not approve of that bill.

Mr. HOAR. I said so then.

Mr. VEST. The legitimate inference, the irresistible inference from that statement is that if not only Mr. SCOTT but Mr. Whitney had made a contribution, or if the President had made a contribution, he made himself, in the judgment of the Senator from Massachusetts, amenable to the punishment which is fixed in that bill.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no; that I did not say. That bill did not pass, and they could not be amenable to it.

Mr. VEST. Of course not, but it was simply a declaration of opinion, I presume, on the part of the Senator from Indiana. Whether he drew that bill himself or whether he offered it here as the product of the brain of somebody else, I do not know. I have never read it. For my own part I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. SCOTT, or any other Democrat, has the perfect and complete right to give his money, that belongs to him, to the legitimate purposes of a campaign as much as he has to make a donation to any eleemosynary or religious institution. If he believes the Democratic party is right, that its principles are necessary to the welfare and the honor of this country, he would be derelict in his duty as an American citizen if he did not do all that an honorable man can do in order to promote those principles and put them into active operation.

The fact that Mr. SCOTT is connected with the management of 22,000 miles of railway is no argument that he is making improper use of his money. It is no argument against his character. On the contrary, it simply shows that as a self-made man he illustrates the activity and enterprise and brain work of the American people, and he demonstrates the possibilities that are offered in this country to any man, no matter how poor or obscure, to achieve position and fortune by his own honorable individual effort.

But the Senator from Massachusetts most unquestionably in what he said here yesterday intended to make the impression, as he states emphatically to-day, that the Democratic campaign fund came from trusts and corporations. The Senator was informed yesterday by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] that the Standard Oil corporation or trust had in it only two Democrats, and that a large majority of its stock was owned by members of the Republican party.

The Senator from Massachusetts offers no proof here that these trusts or corporations are contributing this money, or that these contributions came from any such source. But we know from the highest authority almost in the Republican party that contributions are being taken from a trust that reaches to all the products of this country, that levies a tax upon the necessities of life as well as the luxuries, that reaches to every home and every fireside in this broad land.

The other day the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] had read a publication from the New York Tribune, a partisan paper, and I have never seen as much delight upon that side of the Chamber, as much merriment, as much hilarity as when that document was read. The Senator from New Hampshire requested the Secretary of the Senate to handle it tenderly, lift it with care, and return it afterwards to his safe-keeping.

Mr. HOAR. What document was that?

Mr. VEST. The article from the New York Tribune, which was read here.

Mr. President, are there no other trusts in this country besides those which are named by the Senator from Massachusetts? Is it not a notorious fact to-day that the manufacturers of the country, the highly-protected manufacturers, are contributing largely to the campaign fund of the Republican party? I ask the Secretary to read the document I send to the desk. I know nothing about the high Republican authority that is named in it, but it is an authentic document, with facsimile signatures to it, and shows that contributions are now being coerced from the protected manufacturers of the country for campaign purposes of the Republican party.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Confidential.]

NEW YORK, May 25, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been requested to submit the inclosed communication to you, and I do so with the greatest pleasure. With my knowledge of practical politics, I unhesitatingly say that this is the most important undertaking in the campaign of 1888, and I confidently rely upon your prompt indorsement and assistance. Will you kindly subscribe and return the inclosed subscription list to me at as early a day as practicable, as the work is outgrowing the resources of the League, which now contains over five thousand clubs with a membership of half a million voters?

Very truly yours,

ALBERT DAGGETT.

[Confidential.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE REPUBLICAN LEAGUE OF THE UNITED STATES,
New York, May 25, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: The Republican League of the United States desires to bring you face to face with the startling fact that the coming Presidential election is not to be fought on the old party lines which have heretofore divided Democrats and Republicans, but upon the direct issue of free trade versus protection.

The League stands for protection and is fighting in your interest. It is no Fourth of July organization for dress parade, but is an every-day working force of practical political workers, who have in four months enrolled an army of over four hundred thousand men to fight against British free-trade ideas, British gold, and the Democratic Hessians who are fighting under her banners. It is useless to argue the case; Democracy stands for free trade and against your interests, and you know it, no matter whether you have heretofore been a Democrat or a Republican. High-sounding platforms of words can not gainsay this fact, nor fool you unless you wish to be fooled.

The coming campaign will be fought for protection under disadvantages never before encountered. Ninety-nine per cent. of the Federal officials are Democrats, and will contribute financially to the hoped-for success of the free-traders. Never before has the Democratic free-trade or "tariff-reform" party been in so fortunate a position.

The Republican League is not composed of theorists who are forever promising to do something and never keeping their promises. It has already done more than any other political organization ever attempted before the Presidential candidates had been placed in the field. As our patriotic volunteers sprang to the country's defense when secession threatened its destruction, so at the call of the League vast armies have been enrolled to fight the thousand times more dangerous foe to the country's continued prosperity, free trade.

We will win this fight if you will do your share and help us to finish what we have begun; we want money, and want it at once. We are overwhelmed with calls for tariff documents and for speakers and organizers. We propose to organize and fight against free trade in every doubtful Congressional and legislative district in the United States. To-day there is but one majority in the Senate of the United States when the lines are drawn between Democrats and Republicans, and unless much is done the next Congress will see a free trade House, Senate, and President, and then good-bye to your prosperity.

It may not be of your personal knowledge, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that the manufacturers of the United States who are most benefited by our tariff laws have been the least willing to contribute to the success of the party which gave them protection, and which is about to engage in a life and death struggle with free trade.

A Republican United States Senator, from a State which never had a Democratic representative in either House of Congress, or a Democratic State officer, in speaking of the well-known disposition of the manufacturing interest to lock up its money, fold its hands, and look on while somebody else fights for its success, says:

"The campaign which we are about to enter will concern more than anybody else the manufacturers of this country. They have heretofore been very laggard in their contributions to the Republican cause. In fact, if I could punish them without punishing the cause of protection itself, I would consign them to the hottest place I could think of on account of their cravenal parsimony. If this class of people do not contribute to the success of the Republican party, they are welcome to try their chances under a Democratic administration; I can stand it as long as they can." And again: "I was solicited to contribute to a protective tariff league, and I replied that if the manufacturers of the United States in their associated capacity were an eleemosynary institution, that I would vote to give them a pension, but that I did not propose myself to contribute money to advance the interests of men who were getting practically the sole benefit, or at least the most directly important benefits of the tariff laws. I am in favor of protection; not precisely the kind we are having, but I might be willing to keep even that rather than not to have any; but I am sure I can get along without any of it fully as well as the manufacturers can; and if they think the Republican party is going to maintain a high protective corps for this benefit, and that the men who do the work in that party are going to keep up the expenses of a campaign out of their own pockets, leaving them to reap the fruits of the tariff policy without any deduction for political expenses, they are very greatly mistaken. I understand that in a general way the manufacturers of New England have been more liberal in their contribution than those of Pennsylvania.

"In fact, I have it from the best possible source that the manufacturers of Pennsylvania, who are more highly protected than anybody else and who make large fortunes every year when times are prosperous, practically give nothing toward the maintenance of the ascendency of the Republican party. Of course, I shall not violate what I consider to be a proper principle of action; but if I had my way about it, I would put the manufacturers of Pennsylvania under the fire and fry all the fat out of them. If the Mills tariff bill comes to the Senate, there will be some votes cast there which will open the eyes of some of these people who have, while gathering their millions, treated the Republican party as their humble servant."

These are strong words, and bitter, but they are true, and it now remains with you and your associates to determine whether they are to be reiterated after this campaign is over, and protection has, through your apathy, been struck its death blow. If you give us the means to win the victory, we will do it. Are you willing?

Yours very truly,

JAS. P. FOSTER, President.

Mr. VEST. There was great delight and approbation on the other side of the Chamber when the Senator from New Hampshire had read an article from the New York Tribune the other day which presented the President of the United States in a dual personality as Mr. Hyde and Dr. Jekyll. I wanted this article read "trippingly on the tongue," in order to present the duality of the Republican party as between the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts yesterday attacking prominent Democrats for voluntary contributions to the campaign fund of the Democratic party and that instrument coming from the chief officer of the largest Republican association in the United States.

I wanted it read for another purpose. We are told that the tariff tax is paid not by the consumer but by the importer. I should like to know where the "fat" comes from that is now gathered upon these Pennsylvania manufacturers. I should like to know where those millions come from of which this Republican Senator has spoken to Mr. Foster, that have been gathered up for years under the tariff system, and which he demands now shall be expended in the interest of the Republican party.

As a matter of course it would be impertinence in me to undertake to say from whom that statement which is quoted by Mr. Foster in the circular emanated. I do not share the confidence of the Republican party and have no right to make any assumption. The Mills tarift bill came from the House of Representatives, I think, on June 21. It has been before the Finance Committee of this body since that date.

Mr. ALLISON. July 23.

Mr. VEST. Well, I will accept the amendment, July 23. It has been before the Finance Committee of this body ever since. I well remember that the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], for whose public character I have great regard and for whose ability I have unfeigned admiration, has time and again stood in this Chamber and told the Democrats, "Bring your tariff bill here from the House and we will take it up at once and dispose of it." The RECORD will show that that Senator has taunted us for four long years with the fact that the Democratic majority in the House could not and would not pass a tariff bill and send it here for the action of the Senate.

We did pass such a bill. It was brought here on July 23, and where is it to-day? What has become of the promise of the Republican party in their last platform that they proposed to reform the inequalities of the tariff? Who is there now upon that side of the Chamber who will specify those inequalities which his party pledged itself publicly and solemnly to reform?

No bill has been brought forward, and I doubt very much whether any bill will be reported back from that committee to the Senate. But when it comes I am anxious to see this knight armed in proof who, like the "Disinherited Knight" in the famous tournament of Ashby de la Zouche, will come into the arena armed in proof and make good the statement in the circular that strange votes and speeches will be heard from the Republican side of the Chamber upon this tariff question. I want that dénoument to occur. The country is waiting for it.

In the mean time I call upon the Senator from Massachusetts, in the face of the statement that is made here by Mr. SCOTT and that was made here yesterday by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE], and made also in behalf of Mr. Whitney, who was charged to be a representative of the Standard Oil Company in the Cabinet of President Cleveland, to make good his assertion or admit here that it is absolutely groundless.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] seems to be anxious for a political debate. I do not care now to indulge him to any great extent, but I shall make a few observations in reply especially to his pointed allusion to me.

I repeat, the Democratic party has been for the last twenty-five years, is now, and probably ever will be only positive in its opinions upon one or two points. Upon every other point it is a purely negative party and has been during all the time of my service in the Senate of the United States.

I say again, that having for the first time in their history for twenty-five years submitted an affirmative proposition to the people of the United States, the Republican party will meet them upon the ground they have chosen, and we will submit that controversy to the people of the United States to be decided at the next election.

It took them from the first Monday of December, when the President of the United States called their attention specially to the tariff question, excluding from consideration in his message all other matters—it took from the first Monday of December, 1887, until the 23d day of July to frame the meager tariff bill that they sent to us. It was not a careful revision of the tariff, not, as they admit themselves, a completed measure, but was cut to pieces, molded and twisted out of all proportion from time to time by the opposing arguments and demands of individual Democrats in the House. It was sent to us ill-shapen and insufficient, full of crudities and impossibilities, only embracing a portion of the tariff list. They sent it to us in that condition.

Not only that, but during this long incubation the Democratic portion of their committee sat in secret and silence—they refused to hear a single citizen of the United States. They refused to take any open testimony; they refused a hearing to laboring men and manufacturers and all interests affected; but did hear politicians, according to the newspapers, at least in regard to particular provisions, and conformed those provisions to meet the wants and demands of individual Democrats inside and outside of Congress.

They sent us what is called the Mills tariff bill, which breaks down several important industries of our country and impairs and nibbles away at others, which creates disturbance and alarm, and which, if there was any supposition that that bill would pass, would create distress in this country beyond measure. It is a bill which has tended in my judgment to change the course of trade already by largely increasing our imports and diminishing our exports. It is a bill that is a threat to nearly all the industrial interests of the Northern States, but is careful to protect the interests of the men who represent the Democratic party in the Southern States.

That is the bill which is sent to us, and now, forsooth, because we, with a narrow majority here of one or two, do not present a perfect revision of the tariff within sixty days at their demand we are to be blamed as postponing and evading an issue which they have presented to us.

Sir, from the very day that bill came to us we accepted that issue. I would want none other to go before the people of the United States. Take the Mills tariff bill with all its crude provisions and let the issue stand upon that document. But we are not satisfied with that.

The Democrats have had the command of the House of Representatives for ten years out of the twelve.

Mr. PLUMB. They have had control of the House of Representatives fourteen years of the last sixteen.

Mr. SHERMAN. For I think twelve years out of the last fourteen they have had the command of the House of Representatives, where alone a tariff bill may be originated, and they were never able to propose or dared to propose a tariff measure during all that long period of time.

In the single Congress when we had the power we did propose a measure to reduce the tariff, unwisely in some respects. We did grapple with the subject. But they did not for twelve long years, when they had the power, present it as a measure or as an issue. There was one Congress when they had the power in both Houses and five other Congresses when they had the power in the House and could have presented their proposition to the Senate of the United States, whose arms and hands are tied by the Constitution from originating a revenue measure.

Now, because we have not presented a full, carefully prepared tariff bill we are reproached by the Senator from Missouri, who has been here most of the time for the last twelve years and has never had the pleasure of hearing an affirmative measure presented by the Democratic party, and especially has never had an opportunity to hear a tariff measure presented until on the 23d of July last it comes to us for revision and amendment.

What has been the course pursued by the Republicans on this side, with its narrow majority? We threw wide open the door of the committee-room. We appointed a subcommittee composed of gentlemen of both parties to hear and examine witnesses, to hear complaints and consider amendments suggested. That committee have been in session time and time again, and have heard dozens, almost hundreds of witnesses.

They have now printed testimony amounting probably to more than 1,000 pages, which has been taken by that committee in the examination of complaints from workingmen and manufacturers and producers on hearings by parties interested. They have gone over in elaborate detail the whole tariff laws of the United States; and they have now published for their consideration as a committee all the schedules embraced and all the measures proposed for a complete revision of our tariff laws, and have gone carefully over them page by page and letter by letter, and at the same time have heard testimony of many witnesses covering a large mass of very important matter, which in due time will be submitted to the Senate of the United States.

In point of politics or in point of the order of business there was no necessity for this work to be done during the present session. I believe if I could have had my way I would have said "we accept the measure of the Democratic party as containing their views of the principles that should prevail in our tariff laws, and propose to fight the issue on that line;" but the Republican party being an affirmative party, is always ready to meet its adversary on its own ground and to fight the battle for the maintenance of our diversified industries on the affirmative ground that in framing a tariff law we must continue the policy of protection to American industries. We therefore felt that it was our duty to meet this Mills bill by a counter proposition that while reducing the revenue would carefully guard and protect the industries of the American people against foreign competition, that while we would reduce the revenues to the full extent demanded we would also protect our industries, protect our labor, diversify our employments, secure good wages and fair pay for honest work; in other words, we would report a Republican tariff designed to protect and foster American industries in antagonism to this free-trade Mills tariff bill, which was intended to and does cripple or destroy many industries.

It is said sometimes that it is not a free-trade measure. Certainly no such measure is a free-trade measure in the sense of Calhoun Democrats, because their idea is that all duties on imported goods are wrong; and if the principles announced by the President of the United States, even in his recent letter of acceptance are true, then no tariff or duty ought to be levied on any goods imported that come into competition with American products. If it be true, as he says, that the tax levied by a tariff is added to the cost of the article imported, and if, besides, such a tax is added to the cost of all similar articles produced in the United States—if that be so, then all tariff laws ought to be repealed absolutely, and free trade would be right and should be universal.

But it is because these propositions are not true, are not believed in by the people of the United States, that the protective tariff is maintained and defended and supported by them. This Mills bill is a step in the wrong direction. It is a step toward free trade; and if that step is acquiesced in by the people of the United States in the coming election then the Democratic party is committed to take the next step, and the next step, and so on until the workingmen and producers of this country will be reduced to the abject and hard conditions that prevail in European countries. That is their idea; and because we can not frame in sixty days a careful revision of the tariff laws, not only dealing with the defects in the Mills bill, but removing the defects that exist or have grown up in the process of time under the existing law, and shall hear everybody that chooses to come before us, we are to be reproached for delay!

Gentlemen, when six months have rolled around and we have taken as much time as you did to frame your crude, insufficient, and inconsiderate bill, then you may have cause for complaint. Long before that time we shall present you a measure on which we can all stand, but we are not going to be hurried about it. We are going to take our time. We are not going to be taunted in this way into reporting an insufficient measure. Every word and every item of that bill will be carefully weighed and parsed over and considered. Its provisions will be harmonious, and it will contain an entire revision of our tariff laws, so that any custom-house officer or any citizen may see precisely the amount of duty imposed on any article in which he is interested, and all the various provisions of our laws intended to regulate the mode and manner of collecting duties will be harmonized with each other.

Besides that, we intend to repeal those taxes that are most felt by the people of the United States. We intend to reduce the burden of internal taxation. We intend to reduce the revenue to the full extent that is proposed by the Democratic party. There is no difference between us as to the necessity of bringing about a reduction of revenue, although there may be a question as to the amount. We propose to do that, and we propose to do it by a careful revision of the internal-revenue laws, so as to give to those engaged in the industrial arts the use of alcohol untaxed; and so as to practically sweep away the tobacco tax and give that great agricultural production free and fair play in this country, and thus to repeal all that can be properly removed of the taxes imposed by the internal-revenue laws. And we will also propose to reduce the duties on important articles which now pay the largest sums and are the heaviest burden to the consumers of the United States. All these and other propositions have been weighed and considered, and in due time will be submitted at our own good will and pleasure. Until then our constituents will not reproach us with the neglect of our duty.

They expect us to be careful. They know what the Democratic party threatens. They expect us to give them a measure in the opposite direction. We intend to do it, but we will take our time about it, and if the House of Representatives wish to prolong the session until that tariff bill is reported they will wait until we are ready to report it, and we intend to do it as soon as it can be properly done after full hearing of every man affected by it. After this detailed consideration by the subcommittee it will be reported to the Finance Committee, and after being subjected to its revision it will be reported to this body. Then, and not until then, it will be open to free and full consideration of every provision contained in it. Then, then, and not until then, will we be ready to contrast the merits of a tariff bill framed upon the principle of protection with the Mills bill, framed upon the principles of free trade.

If the Senator can make anything out of this statement let him do it; but is it not a strange idea that the Democratic party, which has been twelve years in trying to prepare a tariff bill, and that now under the influence of the President's message has taken at this session from seven to eight months to prepare this abortion of a bill, should taunt us for delaying the consideration of the tariff measure, when the Republican party has framed and formed every tariff law since the year 1861, and has from time to time changed and modified duties and taxes, gradually reducing their burden from time to time, and which in 1883 passed the last tariff act? We will pass the next tariff act, because I believe that when our bill is reported it will so command the intelligent judgment of Congress that our Democratic friends will no longer desire to press the Mills bill, but will accept the Senate amendment as the firm basis of our tariff legislation.

If its consideration should be prolonged until the election in November next we shall then know if the people of the United States have made up their mind to take the road toward free trade by the reelection of President Cleveland. In that event it would perhaps be better for Congress to administer a dose of the medicine prescribed by the Democratic party, and thus to test the ideas and acts of that party. But if not, and General Harrison is elected, we will then be able perhaps to convince our Democratic friends that the measure we propose as a substitute for the Mills bill will be satisfactory to the people of this country and will be approved by them. If not, we shall have a President in the executive chair who will give it his approval if Mr. Cleveland declines to do it during the short period of his term yet remaining.

Mr. President, I did not want to enter into this political controversy; I do not think it is wise; but how can we help it? Here the Senator from Missouri appeals to me personally for holding back this tariff bill. I do not happen to be on the subcommittee that has had the honor and the labor of this great work. My friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], have had this sphere of hard and exacting work to perform. As a matter of course there are three Democrats on the subcommittee. I have nothing to say about how much they have done. That is not for me. There are eleven members on the Finance Committee. I claim no credit for what is done except that I occasionally look in and see what is being done. As the acting chairman of the Committee on Finance I am compelled to answer this unreasonable complaint.

I say, therefore, that these gentlemen wisely and as rapidly as other public duties would allow—for they are all pressed with other important public duties, especially the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. ALLISON], who has charge of appropriations—in season and out of season in the committee-room, right within the door, almost, of your Senate Chamber, have been carrying on this work. They have listened to witnesses, they have listened to Senators on both sides of the Chamber, they have taken testimony precisely like a master commissioner, have been hearing, analyzing, and arranging that testimony, and I have no doubt will in due time present their report to the Committee on Finance, and then only a few more will add their judgment to the general consideration given to the bill by the subcommittee, and then it will be reported to the Senate of the United States.

Then will be the time for the Senator from Missouri, if he desires, to make the contrast between these two measures. One will be a protective tariff yielding also enough revenue and only enough to carry on the operations of the Government. The other will be a revenue tariff looking only to money for the support of the Government and not to the good or the interest of the people of the United States. There is the difference. That striking contrast, no doubt, is already being discussed before the people of the United States. Already the Mills bill has been circulated in great numbers everywhere, and is being read and commented upon. While I am speaking probably hundreds and thousands of men are canvassing and discussing in all portions of the country this vital difference between the two great parties—carrying on the great debate that was commenced in the House of Representatives.

As to the letters that have been read here, as to the biographical sketch of Mr. SCOTT, as to the rumors in regard to partisans giving or not giving money for the election, these are not worthy of discussion here, as it seems to me. I do not propose at least to indulge in it. We all give, no doubt, to help forward our views. A man would be foolish who would not in a proper way support his opinions by his money, who would not bet, if he bets at all, on his own horse. Certainly we shall all contribute as far as we think it proper and right. If President Cleveland gave his check he only did what I believe he had a right to do, and I have no criticism to make either as to the amount or the fact that he gave money.

It is no worse to give money towards aiding in a proper way a good cause than it is to give work. It is no worse to give money to aid in missionary work than it is to do missionary work. If the work is good, it is well. If the work is bad, it is ill. But the motive is the same whether it is money or labor that is contributed to a cause. No doubt both parties may commit errors, foolish letters may be written, and much folly and demagogism may mingle in the conflict. These all are but the incidents of a popular canvass, but after all the real question to be decided this fall is whether the industries of this country are to be maintained and supported upon an American basis or by gradual steps to be reduced to the European basis, and the instincts of the people will, I trust and believe, lead them to maintain the policy of the Republican party.

Mr. VEST obtained the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Missouri kindly yields to me for the purpose of calling up the interstate-commerce bill, which has today come from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope before that is done the pending resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance, so that it may not be called up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has taken the floor on the pending resolution and yielded to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg pardon.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. HARRIS were appointed.

THE COPPER TRUST.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] does me injustice when he states that I am anxious for a political debate. I am anxious to go to the people of this country upon the issues already made up, and I am detained here with other members of the Senate by the delay of the Committee on Finance in regard to the Mills tariff bill. Now, the Senator tells us that at their leisure they propose to report that bill, and that after taunting the Democratic party with having delayed for years, with the political power in their hands, to formulate such a bill and send it here from the House of Representatives. Sir, there is a celebrated case reported in the Court of Appeals Reports of the State of Kentucky, I think in 13 Ben. Monroe's Reports, in which a man named Haggin figured conspicuously, and who has gone down to posterity in our profession as a party to one of the causes célèbres. In that Commonwealth Mr. Haggin gave a promissory note with the following remarkable language:

> Twelve months after date I promise to pay Richard Jones $50 with interest at 6 per cent.; but it is distinctly understood that the said Haggin is not to be hastened.

[Laughter.]

After two years Mr. Jones thought it was time to hasten Mr. Haggin, and he sued him in the circuit court of the State of Kentucky and obtained judgment, but Mr. Haggin took it to the court of appeals, which in that State is the highest appellate tribunal, and the court gave it as its opinion that Mr. Haggin ought to be hastened.

Now, the Senator from Ohio tells us that the Finance Committee and the Republican party, although it has taunted us and dared us and challenged us to bring a tariff bill here from the House of Representatives, is not to be hastened. I propose, if I can do it, to hasten the aforesaid Mr. Haggin and to compel the Republican party to make good what they have challenged us so often to do—to meet them face to face upon this tariff issue.

Why, sir, it is most astonishing that the Senator from Ohio should say the Democratic party has failed and refused to formulate any bill or attempted to do so. He says that about 1878 we had both branches of Congress. But there was then no such surplus in the Treasury as confronts us to-day. In the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses the Democrats attempted to pass a tariff bill through the House, and the Senator's party, with a unanimity never before seen in parliamentary life, resisted it. Did they offer any other bill? Whilst they attack the Mills bill now in the most violent terms, and denounce it as a fraud and an outrage upon labor and all the interests of the country, do they offer anything better? Notwithstanding all their promises, in the popular branch of Congress, whilst that bill was being debated, why did they offer no amendment? Why have they persistently and consistently for years satisfied and contented themselves with standing upon the tariff as it now is?

The Senator speaks of the tariff of 1883——

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator want an answer to the question he puts to me? If he does not, I do not care to interrupt him.

Mr. VEST. I will listen to the answer. Certainly I will yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator asks, why did not members of the House present a counter-proposition? It was clearly understood that the Mills bill was framed in secret. Its terms were not known to the associate members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and when introduced it was made the subject, as the papers stated, of a caucus decision. It was passed upon in that way, and really the Republican members of the House had no time, no chance, no opportunity, to make a counter-proposition. It was distinctly understood that if they did it would be voted down. That is a matter of public notoriety.

Mr. VEST. The Mills bill was before the House of Representatives, speaking as accurately as I can from memory, for more than two months. Was there no time in those sixty days to offer any amendment, to formulate any substitute?

The Senator says the Democratic Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives sat with closed doors. All I know about it is that that statement is positively denied by the members of that committee. They state, and have stated upon the floor of the House repeatedly, that they heard witnesses, that they were willing to hear any one who desired to be heard before them. But what has been the action of the Committee on Finance of the Senate? The Senator from Ohio in stating the members of the Finance Committee of the Senate who have had anything to do with the proposed substitute for the Mills bill enumerated the Republican members alone. Where were the Democrats?

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose they did precisely what they did when they refused to serve on the committee of conference on the last tariff law. They were not present then.

Mr. VEST. The Senator refers again to that committee of conference in 1883. I say that the report of that committee of conference was the most outrageous parliamentary proceeding in the history of this country. They reported a bill here which had been voted down by both Houses of Congress, and the Senator knows it, and provisions were put in that report which had been deliberately discussed and voted down; and yet they were forced upon us in the last hours of the session and by 1 majority in this body.

Mr. SHERMAN. The committee of conference were appointed before the differences between the two Houses were known, and upon the very first committee appointed they refused to serve.

Mr. VEST. But they refused to serve only when they saw that they were utterly powerless. They refused to be a party to what was, in my judgment, an outrageous transaction upon the representatives of the people both in the Senate and in the House. Does the Senator deny that in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses his party opposed every attempt to reform the tariff? In their convention they declared and pledged themselves to reform the inequalities of the tariff. What are they?

Mr. SHERMAN. They opposed the tariff that was proposed, and even Democratic members refused to support that tariff, and therefore they have no right to ask us to regard that as a Democratic measure until the Democratic majority should formulate a measure on which they were agreed. We were not expected, of course, to join the free-trade Democracy in framing a tariff bill.

Mr. VEST. The issue between the Senator from Ohio and myself is this: He has repeatedly stated in the Senate that the Democratic party refused to formulate any tariff bill, and he has stood here in his peculiarly aggressive manner and pointed his finger to us, as I distinctly remember and as the RECORD will show, and said "Why do not the Democrats, who have the House of Representatives, bring us a bill? We will dispose of it in short order; we will settle that question. But you do not dare to bring it." We have brought it, and now it is said, "Haggin is not to be hastened." [Laughter.] That is the whole of it.

The Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses passed and the Republican party persistently refused to consider any tariff bill in the House. They trampled upon the declarations in their platform.

The Senator says the Mills bill is a free-trade measure. I am not here to discuss it now; I have not the opportunity to discuss it now. I want to do so at the proper time. If it is a free-trade measure to reduce the taxation of this country hardly 6 per cent., I should like to have a definition of free trade and high protective tariff from that distinguished authority. If that be free trade, if taxing higher than the Morrill tariff be free trade, I should like to know what would be a high protective tariff indeed and in fact. No, Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the percentage of reduction on the whole?

Mr. VEST. We shall take up the whole question and discuss it hereafter.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator talks about a 6 per cent. reduction. What is it on wool?

Mr. VEST. Wool is put on the free-list, as the Senator very well knows.

Mr. BLAIR. How many per cent. reduction is that?

Mr. VEST. I speak of the average reduction. I say it is not 6 per cent. As to the specific details it will be time enough to take them up when the bill comes before us. We are ready to meet our opponents upon the question and are ready to go to the country to determine whether the people of the United States are in favor of continuing to bind up the interests of the country under the present enormous tariff, or whether they are willing to take a step in the right direction and to do what the Republican party pledged themselves to do, reform the inequalities of the tariff. I want to hear what the inequalities are.

Mr. President, the Senator says, in contrast with the action of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, that the Committee on Finance have had open doors and that they have examined witnesses. They have examined the manufacturers, they have examined the men who are interested in the tariff.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] can answer on that subject; but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is entirely mistaken. The invitation has been broad and open to all, I understand.

Mr. VEST. I have never heard of it until now. No Democratic member of the Committee on Finance of the Senate has been present, I believe, at these ex parte examinations. If there ever has been a conclave, it has been that of this Finance Committee working in the interest of the proposition that "the said Haggin is not to be hastened." [Laughter.]

Mr. FARWELL. Will the Senator allow me to correct him? I was in that committee-room on one occasion when the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was present.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a single moment?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. HARRIS. From the 1st to the 23d of July I was absent from the city. The House bill came to the Senate on the 23d, it is said, and was referred to the Committee on Finance. On the 23d of July I returned and went to the committee-room to ascertain what action the committee proposed to take. Some time prior to that, perhaps a month and a half or two months, a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance, composed of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and myself, was appointed for the purpose of hearing such persons as desired to be heard or as the committee might consent to hear. We had had various hearings before I left the city, on the 1st of July. Upon my return I understood that the Republican members of the subcommittee were examining the question with a view of preparing a substitute for the House bill. I was not aware of the fact for perhaps two weeks that hearings were going on. I think, however, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] attended many and possibly all the hearings that were had during that period; but I was not notified of any hearings for perhaps a couple of weeks, possibly three, after having inquired of some member of the committee, the acting chairman, I believe, if they were going on with the hearings. Since that time there has been no hearing before that committee that I have not been notified of, and no hearing, I believe, before that committee since that time that I have not attended.

It is simply due to the committee that these facts should be stated and that the Senator from Missouri should comprehend them.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, of course I do not propose to do any injustice to the Committee on Finance, and I only stated what was the impression on our side of the Chamber, what I have understood to be the case, that this examination was conducted exclusively by the Republican members of the Finance Committee. If it be otherwise, as a matter of course I make the amende with the greatest pleasure.

But the fact still remains that this bill is not reported back to the Senate, and if the programme of the Senator from Ohio be correct that they propose to extend these examinations until every man interested is heard by that committee, as a matter of course the November election will come upon us without that examination being concluded.

The Senator from Ohio is not consistent. He says that he challenges us to go to the country upon the Mills bill, which he says is crude and imperfect and unjust. We are ready to go to the country upon it.

And yet in the next breath he tells us that his Committee on Finance propose to stay here and examine all the parties interested in order to formulate a substitute tor it.

In much that the Senator from Ohio said in regard to bringing up statements about campaign subscriptions and newspaper articles, I heartily agree. I did not bring them here. They were brought here by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], as the RECORD will show. I have made no political speech here, except in answer to our adversaries. I have never seen the day or the hour, and never will so long as I am physically and mentally able to stand upon my feet and defend my party, that I will not do it here or elsewhere. When these attacks are made upon us are we to sit quietly and placidly and to make no reply? They are to vilify us, and murder and arson and all sorts of crimes are to be charged upon the Democrats of the South, and nothing is to be said in reply. The other day when a harangue was made here, outrageous, in my judgment, in the Senate of the United States, against the Southern people, the Senator from Ohio sat with a smile upon his impassive countenance like an arctic sunbeam playing across a glacier. [Laughter.] That was all right, that was all proper; but as soon as a Democrat undertakes to defend his party, in which he believes as honestly and sincerely as that Senator believes in his, then it is said "Oh, you are dragging politics into the Senate."

It is like the little boy who complained to his mother and said: "John will cry when I hit him on the head, mother, and you ought to make him stop." [Laughter.] The Democrats ought to submit, no matter how hard they are struck, and the minute we undertake to retort and show these gentlemen that they themselves are amenable to thrusts and blows, to spear-point and sword-thrust, that very minute they get upon a pedestal and say, "We do not want any politics; we are statesmen!" [Laughter.]

The Senator speaks of the Mugwumps, the Pharisees. Yes, there is something in the Bible about those gentlemen. I have seen it in modern days. We are told they stood upon the corners of the street with great phylacteries and verses of the Scripture upon their foreheads, and thanked God they were not like unto the poor publicans; and so to-day we hear from the Republican pedestal in this country, "thank God, we are not like these poor, ignorant, whisky-drinking Democrats." [Laughter.]

Well, Mr. President, my party, whatever its faults may be, shirks no issue. The record shows whether the Democratic party is willing to meet this issue fairly and squarely. The President of the United States, if he had chosen to skulk behind some other issue, could have been re-elected President with a unanimity unparalleled in the history of the Republic. Like a brave, honest, and true man, he sent his message to Congress, which struck with steely point the shield of this infamous protective system; and because he has done it he is now denounced here and we are denounced as if we attacked the whole protective system of this country from beginning to end.

Mr. Cleveland said in his message, and the Democratic party has repeated it individually and collectively over and over again, that we do not propose to injure any industry in this whole country or any interest. We propose to do what the Republican party pledged themselves to do and will not do, to reform the inequalities of the tariff. That is all we propose now, and upon that issue we are ready to go to the country.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator answer a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator understand that the Democratic party propose to overthrow what he styled just now "the infamous protective system," or do they propose to retain it—which?

Mr. VEST. We propose to overthrow the oppressions of the present tariff system.

Mr. HOAR. That does not answer my question. The question is whether he proposes to overthrow what he styles the "infamous protective system?"

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; the infamous part of it I do; that part of it which collects money from one man in this country to enrich another without any necessity for the collection other than to enrich classes and individuals; that part of it which pretends to protect labor and does not do it, but protects the manufacturer; that part of it which takes money out of the pocket of one citizen in order to put it into the pocket of another and then hypocritically cries out, "Oh, but for this labor would be stricken down and the interests of this country destroyed." I do not propose, and have so said over and over again, to assail the interests of any portion of this country fairly and honestly existing. The President has said so, and the Democratic party has declared so over and over again; and yet to-day the Senator from Ohio taunts us with being a free-trade party when we propose a reduction less than 6 per cent. on the average of the taxation under the existing law.

Mr. President, I am sorry that I have detained the Senate so long, and I wish simply to conclude by reading what a brother Senator has called my attention to in connection with the original cause of my saying anything at all. I quote from the New York Herald of this morning, September 14, in its correspondence from this city:

Mr. Whitney adds with reference to the use of his name in the Senate in connection with the Standard Oil Trust: "I have never owned a dollar in it nor ever had any relation to it. Every officer or director of the trust is, I believe, a Republican and so are nine-tenths of its stockholders."

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, inasmuch as some allusion has been made both by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the conduct of the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance, of which I am chairman, affecting the tariff bill, I think perhaps I ought to say a few words. But before speaking of that subject I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that he is not waiting here for this tariff bill. It so happens that the most important of all the appropriation bills, that which gathers into its folds more of the public service of this country than any other individual bill, has not yet become a law, and if the tariff bill was in the farthermost part of the earth, we are not yet in a position to adjourn these two Houses of Congress. We are compelled to remain here until the appropriation bills shall pass for the carrying on of this Government for this current fiscal year, which began nearly two months and a half ago. Only yesterday there was read at the Secretary's desk a joint resolution from the House of Representatives amending a joint resolution which amended a previous joint resolution amending a former joint resolution to extend the appropriations of the last fiscal year to the 25th day of September. So, then, the tariff question, as respects the convenience of Senators, cuts no figure in the prolongation of the session.

We are compelled to remain here because the House of Representatives, which has primary control, under the universal custom of the two Houses, of the general appropriation bills, has not yet finished these bills so that we can adjourn the Senate if we are ready to do so.

Now, I want to say a word or two respecting the implied censure of the Senator from Missouri as to the conduct of the Committee on Finance respecting this tariff bill; and first of all I say to him that if there is delay as respects this bill on the part of the Republican majority of this body, it is a delay of less than sixty days as against the delay of three years of this Administration, and it is a delay of the Democratic party in the House of Representatives, as the Senator from Ohio has said, of more than fourteen years.

This "infamous" system of protection, as it is characterized by the Senator from Missouri, has been on our statute-book absolutely unchanged, except as it has been changed by the Republican party, as it was changed in 1883. He characterizes this "infamous" system as a system which the Democratic party now proposes to get rid of. Why have they not gotten rid of it before when they have had for so many years the control of the House of Representatives, the only place where such a question can be first considered? Why did they not get rid of it during the two years from 1879 to 1881 when they had the control of both Houses of Congress? I merely suggest this in answer to the partisan flings of the Senator from Missouri.

Now, what is the situation as respects tariff legislation? I suppose there is no man in this Chamber who has given any attention to the subject of the revision of the tariff who does not know that it is so complicated and delicate in its details that if touched at all it must be touched with care. If it be true, as the President says, that not only every duty is added to the price, but in addition thereto that every single domestic article produced here has also added to it the duty on the foreign article—if that absurd statement be true, then surely it is also true that if we are not to wipe out absolutely the existing system, if we touch it at all, we must touch it with care.

What I complain of the Democratic party and the President of the United States is that he did not exercise the power he had to call Congress together in extra session a year and a half ago. Instead of doing that, he allowed nine months of this Congress to pass away before a tariff bill could be touched at all. We met here on the first Monday of December last, and one whole month of this Congress passed away without the committees of the other House being organized, so that the month of January of the present year arrived before Mr. MILLS became the head of the Committee on Ways and Means. His tariff bill was reported to the House about the 1st of May—I think the 22d of April, perhaps. It came to the Senate on the 23d day of July. The House of Representatives had seven months to consider that bill; five months of the time practically it was in Committee of Ways and Means, and always under the control of the House of Representatives. That bill was sent to us, and no Senator could know practically what that bill was to be until it came here, because under the system of the House of Representatives (which I will not characterize, but which is well known), changes and amendments were made in that bill from the time of its being reported until the day of its final passage. Nobody could tell what was there until the bill finally passed the House. I say, then, that the Senate would be derelict in its duty, as would its committee having charge of this great subject, if it undertook to bring into this body a crude and imperfect measure.

I believe that it was the duty of our subcommittee of the Committee on Finance in examining this question to give it all the care and attention that it was possible to give it. As was truly said by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], we have not conducted this business in the dark. This committee has been a committee composed of members of both political parties. The testimony that has been taken by the committee has been taken by both parties practically. It is true that there were many times when only a portion of the committee, whether Democrats or Republicans, could be present. I was not able to be present at all the hearings. Sometimes it happened that only Republican members came to the hearings; sometimes it happened that two Republicans and a Democrat were present, and I think in one or two instances two Democrats and a Republican; but whatever has been done in this regard has been done in open daylight in the presence of Democrats as well as Republicans.

The Senator from Missouri says we have examined only the manufacturers. Sir, we have examined everybody who appeared before the subcommittee at any time and asked a hearing. We have examined manufacturers, we have examined merchants, we have examined laborers and foremen of laborers when they have presented themselves. We have heard representatives of trades unions, and whoever came to our committee-room door and said he was interested in this question that was pending before us.

Are we to deal lightly with the great industries and the great interests affected? Are we to bring in here a bill which may cut down and destroy great manufacturing industries that have grown up in our country? Does the Senator from Missouri expect us to do that thing? Does he not require both of the Democrats and Republicans of that committee that whatever we bring in here shall be a just bill, not ruthlessly destroying industries that have grown up under this "infamous protective system," as he characterizes it? If it be a bad system, does the Senator from Missouri think it should be ruthlessly torn down, thus destroying industries that have grown up under it? Does he think it is a wise thing by our legislation to throw thousands or hundreds of thousands of laborers out of employment?

I do not intend to discuss the imperfections of the Mills bill, but I will say to the Senate that after an examination of that bill the Committee on Finance came to the conclusion that it was necessary to make a complete revision of the tariff. If the Senator from Missouri will go with me to the committee-room, I can submit to him a half-dozen instances where very likely he and I would differ as to the construction of the Mills bill. I will only give one illustration now, and that is respecting lumber. I do not believe there are any three lawyers in this body who can agree as to what the proper construction of the lumber schedule is under the Mills bill, whether it largely increases the duty on the great bulk of manufactured lumber or whether it makes absolutely free everything that is composed of wood and specifically enumerated. So of other things. But I can say this of the Mills bill, that when we came to examine it it was necessary for us to discard it practically in the consideration of the question; and therefore our labor has been increased because of that necessity. We have gone on, with a view of making a complete schedule of the tariff, reducing and increasing duties; we have done both; and we intend to continue that work with deliberation and care, and I promise the Senator from Missouri that as soon as that work is completed the result of it will be brought into this Chamber.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator, if he will permit me to interrupt him——

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Whether he thinks that report will be made before the next Presidential election?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. ALLISON. And if the Senator from South Carolina thinks that the Republican party or those who represent that party on this floor shrink from the responsibility in any sense of discussing in all of its details this tariff question, they make a great mistake; but we do not intend that this bill shall come into the Senate in an imperfect way. All haste possible is being made with reference to this bill. The members of the subcommittee have worked "in season and out of season." I need not go into details. I will say for myself that for the last five months I have not been out of this city, and I have been engaged constantly upon the tariff bill when I have not been engaged upon the necessary work of the Appropriations Committee. I have been compelled, as Senators well know, to absent myself from this Chamber, as have the other members of the subcommittee, for weeks at a time. There is no situation that ought to ask this sacrifice of Senators on this floor. There is no situation now that requires such sacrifice. It was because we were anxious to bring in at the earliest possible moment this bill that we have been thus engaged in its preparation during the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if he recollects the length of time that was occupied by the House of Representatives in the last entire revision of the tariff, known as the Schenck revision? My recollection is that it was some five or six months. The Senator was, I think, a member of the other House at that time.

Mr. ALLISON. My recollection is that the House of Representatives at that time undertook to make a thorough revision of the tariff and did not complete that revision until the middle of July.

Mr. HOAR. And at that time one party was dominant in the House by two-thirds majority, so that there was no difficulty of political antagonism.

Mr. ALLISON. None whatever; and I do not know of an instance—perhaps the Senator from Missouri can point to one—where the tariff has been considered and finally passed upon at any session of Congress by both Houses since the revision of 1857. The celebrated tariff act of 1861 was acted on and passed by the House of Representatives before the adjournment of the long session in 1860, and was under consideration in the Senate until near the end of the following February, and became a law on the 2d of March, 1861, just at the close of Mr. Buchanan's administration. If the Senator from Missouri can give me an instance since that time where an entire revision of the tariff has been accomplished by both Houses at one session of a Congress, I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Iowa call the tariff of 1883 a general revision or a partial revision?

Mr. ALLISON. I know what the Senator speaks of now; but the Senator will remember that the detail work of the tariff revision of 1883 was done by a tariff commission, and I will say to the Senator as respects that tariff revision of 1883 that it was not considered as tariff bills should be considered, in my judgment, though the bill which was the base of it was sent here by the House of Representatives in 1882. Why was it considered with haste as the Senator implies? It was because there was at that time believed to be a necessity for a revision of the tariff in order to reduce the surplus revenue.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask my friend a question.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. VEST. I ask whether the record does not show that in 1883, whilst the Republicans had a majority in the House of Representatives and General Keifer, of Ohio, was Speaker, they refused to allow the tariff bill to be read, much less considered. Did they not refuse to allow the Clerk to read the bill that became a law?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it is perfectly well known that the tariff bill of 1883 could not have passed without the assent of both Houses; and why should the Senator ask me a question of that kind? That tariff bill of 1883 was considered by a tariff commission appointed by President Arthur, and the necessity then seemed to be so great for the reduction of revenue that the tariff commission's report was taken in substantial detail and brought into this body and into the other House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Iowa, but I would like to ask if he will allow me to submit a question.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I was a member of the other House when that tariff-commission bill passed. It was a Republican House, as the Senator from Missouri has stated, with the gentleman from Ohio presiding over it as Speaker, and I think the records show that that revision, whether it was partial or general, of which the Senator now boasts, was brought from the dark-lantern meetings of a tariff commission into a joint committee of the two Houses, which had but one Democratic member upon it from both Houses, and passed without reading, much less without consideration, through that House.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not care to be diverted from the question I am discussing by a little incident that may have occurred in the House of Representatives. The Senator has become familiar with dark-lantern proceedings; otherwise he would not have characterized the tariff commission as such a body. That commission was composed of Democrats and Republicans, a majority being Republicans. They took more than two thousand pages of testimony, and their report, with the testimony, I believe, occupies three volumes of our public documents.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Ah, Mr. President, the Senator will do me the justice to remember that I am not speaking of the Tariff Commission; I am speaking of the joint committee of the two Houses. The Senate did not furnish a Democratic member to it, and the House of Representatives furnished but one.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kentucky for speaking of that conference committee and its report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What I have stated is the fact.

Mr. ALLISON. Here was the Senate Committee on Finance, composed then of eleven members as now, and five of those members were Democrats. That bill was considered in all its details in the Finance Committee with those Democrats present. There was no dark-lantern proceeding respecting it. Every line of it, every syllable of it, was read and gone over, discussed, and digested by Democrats and Republicans alike on that committee. The Senator's own colleague [Mr. BECK], an able member of that committee, as he knows, the present Secretary of State, Mr. Bayard, a member of it, and these gentlemen knew in detail every line of that bill, and they agreed to a great deal of it.

The bill came into this body and was discussed at great length here, and finally it became necessary for a conference committee on the part of the Senate to be appointed to consider the disagreeing votes between the two Houses. Whoever occupied the chair adopted the universal custom of this body and appointed on that committee of conference first the then Senator from Delaware, now Secretary of State, as the minority of that committee, and the present Secretary of State went into that joint conference room and sat with the conferees at several sittings, and then, through some arrangement which I never could comprehend and do not even now understand, he came into this Chamber one morning and declined to further serve upon that conference committee, a most extraordinary proceeding under the circumstances, and his declination was accepted, and the colleague of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] was put upon that conference in his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, pursuant to the order of the Senate, the Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on that bill be postponed until the Senator from Iowa concludes his remarks.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not occupy a great deal more time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. STEWART. We can take the vote after the Senator from Iowa concludes.

Mr. HOAR. I understand a vote is to be taken, which will occupy a very short time. I hope the Senator from Iowa will have unanimous consent to finish his remarks now, and then the vote can be taken on the Chinese bill, and then the matter which has been pending can be resumed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no power to enforce unanimous agreements of the Senate. It is for the Senate to decide what shall be done to-day. Unanimous consent is now asked that the Senator from Iowa may proceed with his remarks. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLATT. And that the vote be taken after the conclusion of his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If unanimous consent be given for that purpose, it can be done.

Mr. PLATT. I understood that was the proposition.

Mr. STEWART. That is the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] diverted me from my line of thought on the pending question. I wish to say one further word as respects the conference report on the tariff bill of 1883.

The colleague of the Senator [Mr. BECK], for whom I have the highest esteem, declined to serve upon that conference committee, and the Senate was either compelled to abdicate its powers or appoint three men from the Republican party, as no Democrat would serve upon that conference committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it is due to this side of the Chamber that some of us should state the reason why we declined to serve upon that conference committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator to give him the privilege of stating it.

Mr. BUTLER. I remember distinctly that the presiding officer of the Senate at that time, Judge Davis, of Illinois, did make a number of appointments of Democratic Senators to serve upon that conference committee. I was one of them. I declined to serve, and declined for the reason that the friends of that measure had packed the jury, so to speak; in other words, it was the invitation of the spider to the fly, and we declined to go upon that conference upon that ground and that ground alone, that the jury was packed.

Mr. ALLISON. They declined to serve, then, simply because the Republicans had a majority of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. And because the Republicans had a majority in the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. How else? Here was the House of Representatives, with two Republicans and a Democrat as its conferees, and here was the Senate of the United States, with two Republicans and a Democrat as conferees. Did the Democratic party want to reverse the usages of this body and of the other House to secure a majority on this conference committee in order to make a report to suit themselves? To state the proposition as stated by the Senator from South Carolina is to reverse everything that has ever been done in this Chamber.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] asked whether we can call the Mills bill a free-trade bill when it only reduces the existing duties 6 per cent. on an average. The Senator reiterated that two or three times as though there was no great alarm. Why, Mr. President, the Mills bill does not touch silk or liquors; it touches sugar very lightly and tenderly; and if you take the three schedules that I have just named, which are left untouched practically, the ad valorem rate would be about 75 per cent. So the Mills bill, where it touches, practically touches to destroy. It destroys industries. It puts upon the free-list articles produced by great industries of our country. Therefore, when the Senator says there is only an average reduction of 6 per cent., in order to make that average he takes schedules which are not touched by the Mills bill and all of which comprise duties ranging from 50 to 85 or 90 per cent. So that is no argument at all.

But I do not intend to be drawn into a discussion of the Mills bill, and I only make this statement for the purpose of showing that wherever that bill has touched our industries, it has touched them either to greatly embarrass and cripple them or to absolutely destroy them.

I want to say one word more, and then I shall have done, as respects the necessity for the bill. As I stated only a few days ago, taking the revenues of this year and the appropriations for this year and the necessary expenditures for the sinking fund, there is but twenty millions of a surplus. So the exigency, the haste for this bill is not as great as it was when we met here in December, because we have appropriated money which exhausts our revenues to the extent of leaving a surplus of only about $20,000,000.

When I say this I ought to say in connection with it that when this measure comes into the Senate Chamber it will come with a reduction of from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000 in our revenue, because I believe, and I think it is the universal opinion of the Committee on Finance, that we can reduce the revenue at least $60,000,000 without detriment to the country in any sense. When that bill will come in it is impossible for me now to say. I will only say for myself, and I think I can for my colleagues on the subcommittee, that at the earliest practicable day we shall report the bill to the Committee on Finance for its consideration, and whether it shall be considered for a longer or shorter time by the whole committee will settle the time of its being reported to this Chamber; but that it will be reported I give the Senator from from Missouri absolute assurance.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Iowa sits down I would like to ask him in regard to a matter which I do not know that I understand. He says that the surplus revenue is only about $20,000,000, and the reduction proposed by him will be about $60,000,000. How does he reconcile those statements?

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that point. I will explain it briefly. The revenues for this year are only about $20,000,000 in excess of what must be expended this year according to our appropriations, but there are included in those expenditures some thirty or forty million dollars that ought to have been expended last year and that properly belong to last year's expenditures. In addition to that, there is, according to the message of the President, $130,000,000 of accumulated surplus in the Treasury which has been accumulating there for some years. According to the Secretary of the Treasury there is an accumulated surplus of $106,000,000, and under any tariff bill that may be reported, before the exigency will arise demanding additional revenue, that needed revenue will come from the tariff by reason of additional importations. The tariff of 1883 reduced largely the revenue from what it was in 1881 and 1882, but when that tariff came into full play, as it did in 1886 and 1887, the revenues from the tariff were larger than ever before.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8752) providing for the establishment of an additional life-saving station on Nantucket Island, and agreed to the same.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House to print the President's message and the accompanying reports and the majority and minority reports of the Pacific Railway Commission.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 11388) to withdraw certain public lands in the Territory of Wyoming from sale or disposition under the laws of the United States, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. TELLER. I ask now that we may take the vote on the Chinese bill, and the discussion that has been going on can proceed afterwards.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TELLER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], but by the consent of his colleague the pair has been transferred to some one else. I will therefore vote "yea."

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey

[Mr. MCPHERSON]. If my colleague were present, I have no doubt he would vote "nay." I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. HARRIS. He was here a moment since. He was at my desk not five minutes ago.

Mr. FARWELL. I can inform the Senator from Delaware that my colleague [Mr. CULLOM] would vote "nay," if here.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from Illinois were present, I should vote "yea." As he is not here, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST]. I should vote "yea," were he present.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] is absent, and I understand without a pair. I therefore transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], and I vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], but I have transferred that pair to my colleague [Mr. BOWEN], who is absent. I do not know how the Senator from Louisiana would vote. My colleague would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired at his request on this vote with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I announce that if he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] on this question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK. I think if my colleague were here he would vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. CALL. I have a telegram addressed to my colleague [Mr. PASCO], who is absent, from the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], asking him to announce his pair. If the Senator from West Virginia were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the negative). I am informed by my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] considers himself paired with me. I think I do recall his making a request of that sort. I will take the liberty of pairing the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. The Senator from Maryland, if present, would vote for the reconsideration and the Senator from California against it. I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BLODGETT. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLAIR. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to state that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who is absent from the sessions of the Senate by reason of illness, is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I promised the Senator from Kentucky on his leaving here that I would announce from time to time his pair.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—18.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, the yeas are 18 and the nays 17. A quorum not having voted, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is manifest that a quorum is present though not voting on this question owing to pairs. I suggust that by unanimous consent the vote be postponed until Monday at 2 o'clock, standing precisely as it does now. I hope unanimous consent will be given to take the vote then without delay. There is more than a quorum here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ascertains by an enumeration that a quorum of the Senate is present, but the pairs prevented a quorum from being recorded on the roll-call. By unanimous consent the calling of the roll can be waived, and the Chair will announce that a quorum is present for the purpose of transacting further business if suggestions are to be made.

Mr. STEWART. I think we had better set the taking of the vote for an earlier hour than 2 o'clock, because Senators get through speaking before that and then go away.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to any hour on Monday that will be satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. Let us take the vote immediately after the morning business is concluded and continue with it until we get a quorum.

Mr. PLATT. Say half past 12.

Mr. STEWART. Half past 12 on Monday.

Mr. HARRIS. Immediately after the routine business is through, whether that be half past 12 or 1.

Mr. STEWART. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to say that I may not be able to be here on Monday by half past 12.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me a moment? I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it stand adjourned to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will not ask that that be done. The conferees on the sundry civil bill have agreed to a report; that report must first be made in the House of Representatives. It will probably be made this afternoon, but too late perhaps for the Senate to consider it to-day. If we adjourn over until Monday, it will be absolutely necessary for us now to pass again a joint resolution respecting the continuance of the old appropriations pending that bill, whereas if to-morrow the bill can be agreed to, the President can sign it, so as to avoid the necessity of passing a resolution to continue last year's appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. In that view of the case, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. Did I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that the conferees had agreed upon a final report?

Mr. ALLISON. They have agreed upon a final report.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator think it probable that report will be made in the other House to-day?

Mr. ALLISON. It was stated to us by the House conferees that they hoped to get it up during the day, but they feared too late for it to come to the Senate for consideration here during to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. Under that statement I have withdrawn my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Nevada to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. STEWART. That we vote at 1 o'clock on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks unanimous consent that the vote on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to reconsider the vote by which the Chinese restriction bill was passed be taken at 1 o'clock on Monday. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

THE COPPER TRUST.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PLATT, directing the Committee on Finance to inquire whether a foreign syndicate or trust controls the production of copper in the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the subject which was under discussion when the Senate proceeded to vote upon the Chinese bill.

My name has been alluded to as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance that has charge of preparing a substitute for the Mills bill. I represent, as I suppose, my party, this side of the Chamber at least, upon that subcommittee, and I may add that I represent the industries of a great State, I think the largest manufacturing State in the nation, upon that subcommittee.

The bill was referred to the subcommittee on the 23d of July. From that day to this, with the exception of two or three days when I have been necessarily absent from the city, my time has been given to work before the subcommittee, and I announce now for the benefit of Senators on this as well as the other side of the Chamber that in my judgment the bill is not so far perfected and will not be so far perfected for some time to come as to warrant its presentation either to the general committee or to the Senate. The House sent us a bill that is advertised here as not being a free-trade measure. Sixty-six protected articles of manufacture are added by it to the free-list, the effect of which would be the destruction of the industries that produce them.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has said in regard to the bill sent here that it reduces the average rate of customs duties only 6 or 7 per cent. Is he aware, sir, that, not including sugar, in respect to items considered and affected by it the Mills bill reduces the average measure of protection nearly 40 per cent.? I repeat, that the average reduction by the Mills bill of protection given to these industries which now are protected is 40 per cent. I notice it has been given out to the country that the reduction is 6 or 7 per cent. It is a 40 per cent. reduction, Mr. President; and no less.

It is very easy to juggle in respect to a bill of this character. You may put one-half of the items you touch upon the free-list, and may maintain a high enough tariff on the remaining articles, as the Mills bill does in respect to sugar and a few others, so that when you make a per cent. of average of reduction it will not be more than 6 or 7 per cent. on all the articles affected by the legislation. This is one of the peculiarities of the bill which has been sent us and referred to the Finance Committee, and for which we are preparing a substitute.

As has been said here, the bill touches all the schedules of the tariff law, unless it is the liquor schedule. I insist that the Republican party is committed to a revision of the tariff; but in that revision it is to look to it that ample protection is continued—extended, if necessary—to every American industry that can be successfully prosecuted upon American soil. In that revision the Republican party is charged to insure an American market for the products of American factories and of American labor. It is on that line and no other that a revision of the tariff would be affected or attempted even by the Republican party.

We have been, of working days, I suppose about forty days on this general revision of the tariff.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator allow me, in the line of his argument, to read a letter attributed to the Senator from Missouri? That Senator can say whether he is correctly reported—a letter read at a Democratic club in St. Louis, in which that Senator writes as follows:

Mr. Cleveland, by his message, for which I sincerely honor him, has challenged the protected industries of the country to a fight of extermination. The fight is to the death.

I read that to show that the Senator from Missouri did not contemplate the Mills bill as a simple slight reduction of the tariff, but as a destruction of the industries of the country.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the Senator from Ohio tell us the date of the letter?

Mr. SHERMAN. The letter is published in the New York Tribune of August 31.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from New York permit me to say a word?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. There happens to be, fortunately or unfortunately, a club in the city of St. Louis——

Mr. CHACE. We can not hear the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has repeatedly requested the Senate to be in order. Business will be suspended until Senators and others are seated and conversation ceases.

Mr. VEST. I am obliged to the Senator from Ohio for having had that statement read. I have received several letters in regard to it, but I did not think that my personal opinions were of enough importance to intrude them upon the Senate even in explanation of a misstatement. There is a club in St. Louis which, fortunately or unfortunately, bears my name—the "Vest Democratic Club." Some time since I wrote to an intimate friend, Mr. Charles N. Napton, who happened to be the secretary of that club, not specially on any political matter, but in regard to some matter of business about which he wrote me, in which letter he asked me generally about the campaign, as the constituents of Senators generally do. I wrote him a letter—it was written hurriedly, without any idea that it would ever be published, or that it would ever be subjected to any public criticism—but I wrote it as one confidential friend would write to another.

I used that expression that the President in discussing the issues of the campaign had challenged the protected industries to a war of extermination, or words to that effect; but if the Senator from Ohio had felt enough interest in the cause of justice, or in me personally, to have read the context of that letter, he would have seen that in the next sentence I made evident my meaning by stating that the protected manufacturers, who were accumulating their immense fortunes under the present system, would not surrender their large profits without a desperate struggle. As a matter of course I can say frankly that I am not an idiot, and that the Democratic party would not, in the teeth of its platform and of the public and private expressions of all its members, attack the industries of this country; I had no such meaning. Although the letter was addressed to Mr. Napton from the Senate, he took the liberty of tearing off the heading and read the letter in the club, and it has been a matter of public comment from that day to this.

If I had thought that that matter would be made public I should have written more carefully; but I wrote it here in the Senate, in the midst of a debate, and my meaning is perfectly clear to any one who does not wish to take partisan advantage by misconstruing.

Mr. HISCOCK. In that connection, Mr. President, if it were necessary to go beyond the Mills bill itself to discover the purpose of the President of the United States and the Democratic party, we are not compelled to look to the letter of the Senator from Missouri or to the speeches of Democratic Senators and Representatives upon the hustings; we have enough material here, and I will read in this connection a remark made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] the other day:

I will just say to the Senator—

Said he, that—if there is any one thing in this world that the average Texan would go any number of miles out of his way to kick and kill and destroy, it is a protective tariff.

But, Mr. President, I will not diverge from the line of remarks which I proposed to submit when I took the floor. I was addressing myself to the work which is being done by the subcommittee having in charge the preparation of the substitute for the House bill revising the tariff, and the work that that subcommittee proposes to do in the future in the preparation of a substitute.

A general revision of a tariff has never been accomplished by any party in two, three, four, or five months; it is too vast a labor, and when revision is to be attempted in the direction of protection the labor is much increased above what it is when it is to be revised in the direction of free trade and opening our markets to the commerce of the world.

As I said, my time has been devoted, with the exception of two or three days when I have been necessarily absent from the city, to the consideration of this subject. As I have also said, I have the honor to represent, in part, the largest manufacturing State in the nation, and it is my intention—I speak for myself here—before the bill shall be submitted to the Senate that every industry in this country, every industry in my State that is entitled to protection shall have a fair and complete hearing before that committee if it wants to be heard.

I say again for myself, and I speak for myself alone, that I do not propose to join in the report of a bill as a political exigency. There is something above party exigencies—the good of the country—that must be first looked to, and while in my opinion that can be best achieved by the administration of the Republican party, yet even for the Republican party, as a political exigency, a bill revising the tariff should not be presented to the Senate or the country before it is well considered and perfectly prepared, before the people, those interested in the question, have submitted their views and necessities.

We have been in session since December last. Republicans on this side of the Chamber owe it to themselves, to their party, and to the country to give to this bill all the attention and all the consideration necessary to insure that it shall give expression to the views and the opinions of our constituencies, to the platform and the policy of the party we represent.

For myself, sir, I am entirely willing to stay here from now until December in the preparation of the substitute; and I say that at the very earliest moment when it can be prepared I for one shall favor its report to the Senate if it shall be the will of Congress to remain here. But I am entirely unwilling to be crowded into incautious speed, into a hasty consideration which may force upon the country an ill-prepared, an ill-considered measure. We may be able to bring it before the Senate soon, but not to-day, to-morrow, nor next week.

The committee, as said by the honorable chairman of the subcommittee, has devoted itself incessantly to the responsible duty with which it is charged and to performing the great labor imposed upon it and will continue to do so; and whenever that duty is fully discharged, whenever it is ready and the labor well done, then it will report its work for the consideration and approval of the Senate and for the consideration and approval of the country.

Think of it, Mr. President, and Senators! Forty days exhausted in the preparation of a tariff bill! Forty days in considering the repeal of provisions of the internal-revenue laws, and forty days only, and the Senator, and other Senators probably growing impatient at the delay, and arraigning a committee because it has not acted speedily enough! Why, sir, we are to take into consideration the amount of revenue to be reduced; we are to take into consideration the provisions of the present law, and whether to amend or to repeal to produce that reduction. When has it ever been done or accomplished in forty days? Who are they here, in private consultation by themselves, five, six, seven, eight, nine, or ten gentlemen in the interest of the industries of our country, will undertake, within forty days, or one hundred days, to present a scheme to the country which will preserve its industries according to the policy of the Republican party and make the required reductions?

We will reduce the revenue, Mr. President, and insure protection. It is not a difficult task, but it must be a painstaking and somewhat tedious one. We agree with the gentlmen on the other side that the revenues should be reduced. More than that; the bill which will be reported to the S nate will, in my opinion, carry many millions of reduction more than is carried by the Mills bill, and it can be accomplished without disturbing the industries of the country. More than that, it will be accomplished in many instances—I speak for myself only—by increasing the protection to the industries of the country that require it, increasing it when adequate and diversified capacity for national production equal to the national demand exists and foreign commerce seems to justify it.

It would not have been necessary for me to intrude into this discussion except that I felt that for myself I should meet here and now before the country, and before the people of my own State, this question of haste to which we are urged. We can afford to do this work considerately. We can not in my opinion, sir, and we shall not, I trust, do it inconsiderately or in such haste as will not enable us to satisfactorily effect the object we have in view.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire whether a foreign syndicate, combination, or trust controls the production of copper in the United States and has thereby largely increased the price of all articles made therefrom to the consumers; and if so, whether any legislation can be devised to relieve the people of the United States from such injurious effects of the operation of such foreign combination, trust, or syndicate, and report by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the chairman of the Light-House Board recommending that the funds appropriated for Castle Hill light station may be made available without condition; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 22d ultimo, copies of correspondence, etc., with supervisors of elections appointed for the election of 1886.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would suggest the reference of that communication to the Committee on the Judiciary. I believe it properly goes to that committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I offered the resolution, and I am quite content that the correspondence be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8367) to provide in certain cases for the regulation of railway companies chartered by the United States by the several States and Territories in which the railways of such companies run and are operated, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 11388) to withdraw certain public lands in the Territory of Wyoming from sale or disposition under the laws of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CONTINUANCE OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, after a rather informal consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 221) extending the appropriations, I am instructed by such members of the Committee on Appropriations as I can consult to report that resolution back favorably and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa, from the Committee on Appropriations, reports favorably House joint resolution No. 221, and asks that it be now considered.

Mr. ALLISON. If there be no objection I desire to say one word. The last extension of the old appropriations expires to-morrow, and it would be absolutely necessary that the sundry civil bill, which is not yet acted on in the House of Representatives, should be agreed on by the two Houses, and be signed by the President to-morrow; otherwise this resolution should pass. I had hoped when the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] made his motion to adjourn over until Monday that that could be effected to-morrow. I think now it is impossible. Therefore I desire that this resolution should be passed, so that the President may sign it, and that will give us an opportunity of considering the conference report on the sundry civil bill more deliberately on Monday.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 221) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a "Joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a 'Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.'" By it the provisions of the "Joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a 'Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government,'" approved September 1, 1888, are extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 25th day of September, 1888.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BUTLER. I now move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN D. ADAMS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. A resolution was sent over from the other House a short time ago in regard to a bill which passed the Senate some time since and has been mislaid. I ask that it be laid before the Senate for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 14, 1888.

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to furnish the House of Representatives with a duplicate copy of the engrossed bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the request of the House of Representatives will be complied with.

H. R. BLAKISTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to H. R. Blakiston; and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with and the bill returned to the House of Representatives.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3554) to provide for the final settlement with the Mexican Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas in accordance with certain treaty stipulations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3555) granting a pension to Albert N. Bradley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3556) granting a pension to William H. Mays; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PROPOSED LAND OFFICE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by my colleague [Mr. STEWART] on September 5, 1888, to report the same favorably, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada reports favorably from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate the resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five members of the Senate be appointed by the Presiding Officer for the purpose of investigating—

1. Whether there has been any improper use of the moneys appropriated by Congress for the purpose of protecting timber on the public lands, investigating fraudulent claims to the public lands, or for any other purpose connected with the administration of the General Land Office.

2. Whether any fraudulent practices, whereby the public lands are illegally acquired, exist, and whether the same are knowingly tolerated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

3. Whether any discriminations have been made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or any of his subordinates, between citizens of the United States in investigating claims to the public lands or in canceling or setting aside applications to buy or enter public lands.

4. Whether there have been any discriminations between persons who have entered upon or fenced the public lands, in the recommendations, prosecutions, or the removal of fences, or any other matter connected therewith, and if all such persons have been treated alike, or whether some have been allowed to illegally occupy the public lands while others have been required to remove therefrom.

5. Whether there have been any secret compromises between the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or any of his subordinates, and influential persons or corporations, whereby the Government of the United States has been defrauded and illegal claims to lands patented.

6. Whether any prosecutions have been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office at the instance of persons, or their attorneys or agents, having or claiming an interest in the lands to be recovered adverse to the United States.

7. Whether the name of the United States has been improperly used on the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to prosecute citizens of the United States for any improper purpose.

8. Whether the mode of conducting the secret service in the General Land Office is fair and impartial, affording to citizens whose rights are affected thereby a fair and reasonable opportunity to be heard before decisions are rendered against them, and whether settlers on the public lands are prevented from obtaining pre-emptions and homesteads by secret manipulations of agents or employés of the General Land Office.

9. Whether the expenses and annoyances to settlers by the operations of the secret service in the General Land Office are retarding the growth and prosperity of the States and Territories where the lands are situated.

And that said committee or any subcommittee thereof shall have power to employ a clerk and stenographer, subpœna witnesses, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and sit during the sessions of the Senate and vacation of Congress at such places as it may deem advisable. The expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Said committee shall have power to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks for the present consideration of this resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. Let it lie over. I want to see what the resolution is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

DISTRICT ELECTRIC WIRE HEARING.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am further instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] on September 4, to report the same favorably, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to employ a stenographer to report hearings before said committee on the subject of overhead electric wires in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, the expenses therefor to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Some remarks were made in this Chamber yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] which I only read in the RECORD this morning.

The Senator from Massachusetts said:

I think, however, neither that Senator nor the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]—whom I saw in his seat a moment ago, but I do not see now—in what he said yesterday will succeed in removing from the minds of the people of this country the belief that the managers of the Standard Oil Company, the two men who notoriously control its concerns and whose vast fortunes are notoriously the result of that monopoly, contribute largely to the treasury of the Democratic party and are largely the directors of its councils.

And again the Senator from Massachusetts said further down:

I suppose Oliver Payne is the chief manager of the Standard Oil Company, a gentleman whom the Senator from Ohio, who seemed to know all about it, affirms was one of the Democratic managers of that company.

I meet that, Mr. President, simply by saying that there is not one word of truth nor an atom of foundation for that charge. I have said no such thing here or anywhere else as the Senator from Massachusetts undertakes to affirm. It was only when with a curiosity that might characterize some curious old lady the Senator insisted on knowing the names of the two Democrats that I referred to as among the stockholders, that I gave him the names. One was my son, Colonel Payne, and the other, Colonel Thompson, of New York. I did not say that they were directors. If I did I should have told an untruth. My son was treasurer of that company until three or four years since, when he resigned. Colonel Thompson, I believe, has never been a director of the company, so that there is not one particle of foundation for what was said by the Senator from Massachusetts; and there I leave it.

But, Mr. President, I want to go one step further. The Senator from Massachusetts, in a disingenuous, dishonorable, unbecoming way, has several times insinuated—it would be so much better in a manly way to make a charge—that Mr. Whitney was the representative in the Cabinet of the Standard Oil Company, and this without a particle of authority, borrowing it from his own diseased imagination and nothing else in the world, perhaps for a party or personal purpose.

Now let me read to the Senate what Mr. Whitney says on this subject, and upon a question of veracity between him and the Senator from Massachusetts, I think among all who are acquainted with both of them there will be no hesitation as to which one should be awarded credit. Mr. Whitney says:

I have never owned a dollar in it, nor ever had any relation to it. Every officer or director of the trust is, I believe, a Republican, and so are nine-tenths of its stockholders.

Now, Mr. President, whether the instincts of honor or propriety or decency will lead the honorable Senator from Massachusetts to make an apology for, and retraction of, that is for him to determine.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the style of speech in which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] has indulged belongs rather to a barroom or grogshop, to a place where ruffians and their companions congregate, than to the Senate of the United States. The attempt to mingle in the debate of the Senate this style of coarse and gross personality, to undertake to raise comparisons in regard to personal credit or qualities when political or other questions come up, and to divert the attention of the public or of the Senate from them is one which nothing in the character or history of the Senator from Ohio will enable him to carry through.

I made neither charge nor insinuation against anybody further than this: A Senator on the other side of the Chamber in an elaborate written speech the day after a public address of a distinguished gentleman of Maine, formerly a member of this body and at one time the Republican candidate for the Presidency, proceeded to discourse on the subject of trusts and to attack that gentleman for an utterance which he quoted and to attack the Republican party and its platform for being connected with great trusts and monopolies injurious to the public interests. That was followed by a very remarkable proposition on the part of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that where the President of the United States should become satisfied that any trust existed in this country that raised prices of articles he should have the power immediately to proclaim its existence, and therefore, no matter how many hundreds or thousands of honest manufacturers or honest workmen unconnected with the trusts were engaged in the occupation, suddenly to proclaim free trade in regard to the articles so manufactured.

When the Senator from Mississippi took his seat I rose and said I would like to have those Senators, either of them, tell us in regard to particular trusts, to give us the result of their information as to details, and not beat the air. I wished them to tell us what were the facts about a certain half a dozen trusts which I named, among them the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. PAYNE. But the Senator in a previous speech on a previous occasion had said that the Standard Oil Company had a representative in Congress.

Mr. HOAR. That is the occasion I speak of.

Mr. PAYNE. That was the first occasion.

Mr. HOAR. That was the first time I referred to the subject, and I inquired whether that Senator would inform the country if he knew whether that Standard Oil Company was represented in the Senate or in the Cabinet. That is the extent of what the Senator calls a distinct charge or assertion.

Undoubtedly, I alluded to what was the general public belief, what has been a newspaper charge on that subject. I alluded to what has been called to my attention by personal letters. I have one on my desk now charging that the Standard Oil Company is under Democratic management, and that those of its managers who have been Republicans in the past are gathering to the support of the Administration now, and that a great danger to the Republican vote in the city from which this man writes grows out of——

Mr. PAYNE. Will the Senator read that letter?

Mr. HOAR. I will not read that letter.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I guess you will not.

Mr. HOAR. I guess I will not. I am stating what the contents are. I do not propose to have that Senator change or transfer the issue. I will not undertake to use the words "disingenuousness" and "dishonesty," which he so flippantly used in that connection. I do not propose to permit that Senator to change my position on this subject.

I say there is a wide-spread public belief that the trusts which I alluded to are trusts which are controlled and managed and exerted in the interest of the Democratic party, and that the men who have made their money by them are the contributors to its campaign fund; but I did not make the charge; I did not indorse the charge; I did not say anything which by any fair mind can be construed into a charge, an insinuation, or a hint. I am not in the habit of insinuating or hinting.

I put the question, to be answered by gentlemen who had understood the subject, to give an opportunity for an explanation to the public in regard to the belief, and that is all, a thing which was done properly, courteously, and within my right as a Senator. If either of the distinguished gentlemen whom the Senator has named disclaims there being any foundation for this public understanding, no man will more promptly or more cheerfully or more gladly accept their explanation than myself.

The question remains unanswered in regard to five or six. These are matters of notorious public concern; they are matters upon which the price of the necessities of life, the control of the great transportation routes, and large public policies depend; and when these men are found set forth in the principal Democratic newspaper of this country as not only contributing to but heading, among the first dozen, the subscriptions to the Democratic campaign fund, I think it is an entirely proper subject, when Democratic Senators are discussing the trusts, to ask them whether there is an explanation for these matters, and let us have it. There is nothing in the proceeding which warrants the suggestion that it is an insinuation or a charge or anything but a direct demand for the explanation which the circumstances of the case require.

Mr. President, I am not very much moved to any feeling which deserves to be described as indignation or anger or anything above the feeling of contempt by the utterances which have come from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]. The history of that Senator's accession to this body is fresh in the memory of his countrymen. A Senator who, when the governor of his State, when both branches of the Legislature of his State complained to us that a seat in the United States Senate had been bought, when the other Senator from the State rose and told us that that was the belief of a very large majority of the people of Ohio without distinction of party, failed to rise in his place and ask for the investigation which would have put an end to those charges if they had been unfounded, sheltering himself behind the technicalities which were found by some gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber that the investigation ought not to be made, but who could have had it by the slightest request on his own part and then remained dumb, I think should forever after hold his peace.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, the matter last alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts I suppose he should be the last man in the world to bring to the recollection of the Senate, for taking his own challenge and expressions, they condemn the action of the very small number in the Senate who had, no doubt, reasons satisfactory to themselves. I should suppose the Senator from Massachusetts would be the last man to bring that matter up, for I am sure he is the one who suffered most in reputation by his conduct in that regard. So I shall not dwell upon that point. But upon the other point, that the Senator is too perfect a man to be disingenuous, that he is never disingenuous, that in partisan discussion he is truthful and reliable, if he has that conceit in his own brain I think it is confined pretty much to himself.

The Senator says when a matter is denied that if it shall prove to be a malicious or false charge he is willing to retract it. He was told distinctly, and he knows that he can not contradict it, that nine-tenths of the stockholders of the Standard Oil Company and all the officers of that company are Republicans and had never contributed a vote or a dollar for the election of any Democrat to office. Does he withdraw his charge? Does he acknowledge that he has made a false charge, one that any man with the instincts of honor would apologize for and recant? Not at all.

Then as to Mr. Whitney, the Senator seems desirous to avoid that for some reason, but on half a dozen occasions he has insinuated that Mr. Whitney in the Cabinet was a representative of the Standard Oil Company, and now when there is the most unequivocal denial, when he declares in his own name (and I say he is not to be questioned by anybody) that he never has had any interest in nor any connection with that company and that nine-tenths of the stockholders are Republicans and all the officers are Republicans, how does the Senator retract? Like a man of honor? That is all I need say on the matter. He can digest that, and he is welcome.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Whitney's denial of that matter never had been brought to my attention until to-day. I never heard of it before I read it in the papers this morning.

Mr. PAYNE. It was in all the papers this morning.

Mr. HOAR. There does not seem to be any occasion for the Senator's interposing to reaffirm what I said. I said just before he rose that I had read it in the papers this morning.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not believe you did. Let me ask the Senator as a question of candor, have you not read that declaration of Mr. Whitney's this morning?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think this style of behavior on the part of the Senator from Ohio had better stop. I rose and stated to the Senate, before the Senator interrupted me the first time, that I never heard of Mr. Whitney's denial until to-day, and that I read it in the papers this morning. What I said is on record unquestionably.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not question that.

Mr. HOAR. It will be found there. Now the Senator gets up and says he wants to ask me, as a matter of candor, if I did not read it in the papers this morning. I said so.

Mr. PAYNE. Have you made a retraction as you said you would if you were satisfied the charge was not true?

Mr. HOAR. When the proper time and place come to make any retraction I shall make it. I accept the disclaimer of Mr. Secretary Whitney very cheerfully——

Mr. PAYNE. Do it like a man.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio is disorderly and insolent beyond bounds in his style of interruption. If he has——

Mr. FARWELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Ohio has anything to say, let him rise in his place and in order, and when he has the floor say it.

Mr. PAYNE. I can do that without your permission, I suppose, if I want to.

Mr. HOAR. It certainly is not becoming in him to ask my indulgence and courtesy for an interruption of this kind. That style of language belongs to the grogshop rather than here.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I call the Senator from Massachusetts to order. Is this style of debate in order in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is not.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I hope the Chair will enforce the decorum which is certainly due the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. If I have said anything out of order, I withdraw it. I desire to ask the Chair whether this style of interruption is to be tolerated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole colloquy has been disorderly from the beginning.

Mr. HOAR. I shall endeavor to proceed in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no observation to make about either Senator; but the colloquy has been disorderly.

Mr. HOAR. I am willing to abide under the strictest principles of parliamentary law by my recorded language anywhere. I have been interrupted again and again when I was speaking, by taunts and insults, by demands that in the name of candor I should do something or say something which I had just said, and I thought it was within the limits of parliamentary discussion to say that that style of interruption did not belong to the Senate, but belonged to another place which I have mentioned. If that be out of order, anybody may make the most of it.

If Mr. Secretary Whitney, as he is represented by a newspaper interview, has denied a connection with the Standard Oil Company, I very cheerfully accept his denial, and if I have anywhere affirmed the contrary I will very cheerfully retract the affirmation. I do not remember ever to have affirmed it. I have put the question several times to gentlemen in debate whether that is true which is certainly believed by a large number of the people of the country; but to speak of the thing as if it were a charge against him, as if it were a matter dishonorable to Secretary Whitney, seems to me to be the entire fallacy and absurdity of the Senator from Ohio. He rose just now to state that his own son (who I have no doubt is an honorable gentleman of character and standing) had been recently the treasurer of that company.

Mr. PAYNE. Not "recently." I did not say that.

Mr. HOAR. Within a few years.

Mr. PAYNE. Several years.

Mr. HOAR. Several years. The Senator stated that his own son had been within a few years treasurer of that company, and that another gentleman, who is understood to have been one of his most intimate political friends, Colonel Thompson, was a manager or a stockholder in the company. That he said the other day. Suppose I had made that as a charge. Suppose I had made it without foundation. Suppose I had failed to retract it when I should have retracted it. What is there of a charge against those gentlemen which is in the least a charge of anything which is dishonorable or improper? Why is it that it is a gross insult to Mr. Secretary Whitney to make the mistaken charge that he sustains at this moment a character which Mr. Oliver Payne by the statement of his father does hold? What is there which is properly to be stigmatized as making a charge against a man's character who stands high in saying that he holds stock or is a director in or treasurer or manager of a certain corporation in this country, of which the Senator from Ohio admits his dearest and best friends are stockholders?

If I had made a charge, which I did not, but merely referred to the public belief under a request for an explanation from men who knew, in the presence of the Senator from Ohio himself, and if it had turned out to be a mistake, it would be no more than if I had said Mr. A B sat in one chair and not in another. The point of what I had to say had nothing to do with anything which was in the least personally disgraceful or derogatory to the gentlemen whom I mentioned. When I read from the New York World that list of ten subscribers to the campaign fund of the Democratic party, I had already said that I did not deem a contribution to a campaign fund from a Senator or from a person holding an executive office an impropriety. When I alluded to the bill and the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] the other day, I alluded to them to say that I did not agree with them. I had said already this morning in answer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that I proposed to do that exact thing myself to the extent of my ability, and beyond my ability, before this campaign is over, as I have done in the past.

We were not talking about any matter into which anything of personal dishonor entered. We were not talking about anything which it is not well known is done by persons of the highest character and standing in both political parties and in all parts of the country. I was talking about a Democratic arraignment of trusts, a charge that certain great business enterprises in this country are things which ought to be put down by law, and I asked the honorable Senators to tell us whether the popular belief was or was not true that the party to which they belong got in a large measure its campaign funds and its direction and its assistance and its counsel from men who are engaged in these things, just as when the Senator from Indiana proposed to make a contribution to a campaign fund by an executive officer a penal offense, to dismiss from office the man who did that, to make him incapable of holding public office in the future, it was perfectly legitimate in me to call attention to the fact that if the leading Democratic organ in this country were to be trusted the President of the United States and members of his Cabinet and men standing high in the councils of the Democratic party did that thing.

I accompanied it with a statement that I did not agree with the Senator from Indiana in the condemnation, but the point of my argument was that the policy of that proposed statute was erroneous and was inconsistent with the principles of true civil-service reform, just as I think the condemnation of the assistant librarian of the Senate for exercising his rights as a freeman was inconsistent with the real principles of civil-service reform. I think that officer had a perfect right to do what he did.

When I was saying that, and that is all that has happened, I held a letter in my hand charging that the members of the Standard Oil Company everywhere are active on the side of the Democratic party, a letter written to me by a well-known citizen of this country, a man signing his name, a stranger to me, the Senator from Ohio asks me with a sneer if I will read the letter. I tell him I do not choose to read it, and he guesses I will not.

Mr. President, I do not make any invitation to a comparison either as to propriety of conduct or political integrity with that Senator or anybody else, but if that Senator desires to have that comparison instituted, I certainly shall not shrink from it. I know very well that the matter to which I have alluded, the complaint of both houses of the Legislature of Ohio, the charge of the governor of that State, the charge of the Senator's own colleague, seemed to a majority of the Senate, under the constitutional arrangements which prevail in this country between State and nation, not to warrant the Senate in entering upon an investigation without the request and assent of the honorable Senator himself. I think few men ever sat in the Senate who would refrain from demanding an investigation under such circumstances, even if it were not required by the Senate itself. There were Senators who differed with a great majority of the Senate in their opinion on that question. There were Senators who thought that the admission of that Senator, the continuance of that Senator in his seat without that investigation, indicated the low-water mark of the Senate of the United States itself. I do not propose to renew that debate. I should not have alluded to it but for the honorable Senator's observation in regard to me.

REGISTERED-MAIL LOCKS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business 2011, being the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me for a moment. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and to have immediate action on the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Let the report be made, and I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SAWYER. Very well. I report favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor, and I ask that it be put on its passage now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered. Does the Senator from Kansas yield for that purpose?

Mr. PLUMB. I yield, but not to displace the Agricultural Department bill which I wish to bring before the Senate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator—I am a little ignorant on the subject—what is the necessity for this special appropriation? Is there not a general law on the subject which gives the Postmaster-General authority to purchase these locks?

Mr. SAWYER. The law now authorizes him to purchase certain locks for registered-mail matter. The Department find that they are defective. This bill was drawn at the Post-Office Department. I went there and saw the Postmaster-General this morning. He says it is very important that the Department should have these locks and have them at once for the safety of the registered-mail matter. I could give the Senator all the details, but the Department do not want to make the matter public. That is the amount of it. The bill is strongly urged by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. VEST. That is satisfactory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 576) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 3447) amendatory of "An act relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned," approved June 18, 1888, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 3, to strike out "and" before "who;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That there shall be in said Department an Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall perform such duties as may be required by law or prescribed by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 1, after "shall," to strike out "hereafter;" in line 3, before "Assistant," to strike out "First;" and in line 5, before "Assistant," to insert "First;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall receive the same salary as is paid to the Secretary of each of the Executive Departments, and the salary of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture shall be the same as that now paid to the First Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 1, to strike out "law" and insert "laws;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws relating to the Department of Agriculture now in existence, as far as the same are applicable and not in conflict with this act, and only so far, are continued in full force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 5 in the following words:

SEC. 5. That the Weather Service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture, to take effect July 1, 1888, and shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary to efficiently manage said bureau. Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau, including the second lieutenants now in service, shall continue as at present: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps. The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; and the compensation now paid to the employés and enlisted men of said service shall continue as now; and the moneys appropriated for said service and hereafter appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to appoint a board of three Army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member. The duty of said board shall be to make an inventory of all property now in the control and possession of the Signal Service Bureau, and shall separate and turn over to the Department of Agriculture such portions of the property as the said board may determine to be suitable for the work of the Signal Service Weather Bureau. The remainder of the property shall remain in the control of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas in charge of the bill why the fifth section is proposed to be stricken out? It seems to me that the Weather or Signal Service Bureau is more important to the agricultural interests of the country perhaps than to any other of the great interests, and that being true it appears to me that there is absolute propriety in putting that service under the control of the Department of Agriculture rather than to continue it under the Department of War. I should like to know why the committee recommend the Senate to strike out that section which proposes to subject the weather service to the control of the Department of Agriculture which the bill designs to create?

Mr. PLUMB. In reporting the bill in its present shape I acted simply as the organ of the committee. For myself, I agree entirely with the Senator from Tennessee. I believe that the Department of Agriculture should not only have the Signal Service because it belongs there for the reasons so cogently stated by the Senator, but I believe it ought to be there because this Department has room for it, and it would help to give to it that importance and dignity which it should have.

There are many other reasons why I think it should go there, but the committee thought otherwise, not, perhaps, as an ultimate thing, but because of certain ideas which prevail on the part of certain members of the committee to the effect that the transfer might be better postponed until there has been some more definite organization of the Signal Service Bureau provided for.

For myself I can say that I believe it ought to go there for the benefit of the Department and for the benefit of the bureau. I never have been able to reconcile myself to the idea of having a bureau which has in charge measurably at least the productive interests of this country, which relates to agricultural productions, under the control of that Department which represents destruction. Why agricultural interests, real or remote, should be under the charge of the War Department is one of those things I never could see any reason for, and that I never agreed to except under compulsion. So far as I am concerned, however, I am willing to have this bill with this much taken off, if the Senate should so vote, rather than not to have it at all.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me I will state that I quite agree with him; if we can get no more I am quite willing to take the bill with the fifth section out. But I want to ask the Senator from Kansas if he has scrutinized the various provisions of the fifth section other than the one which provides for the transfer of this bureau to the Department of Agriculture, so as to be satisfied that they are in themselves proper, because I am strongly inclined myself to vote against agreeing to the committee's amendment with the hope of retaining the fifth section as a part of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt that the fifth section if adopted would prove operative in the direction of at least maintaining the present efficiency of the Signal Service Bureau, if the effect would not be to increase its efficiency. I do not mean to say by that that I think by the adoption of this provision we should carry into the Agricultural Department as thoroughly equipped a Signal Service Bureau as we ought to have. The change will undoubtedly require other modifications in time, but these, in my judgment, will come by the experience which the new Department will have of the operations of this bureau by the illustrations which will be furnished of its relations to the agricultural productions of the country and so on under the new control.

I believe myself that the proposed transfer is proper and would conserve the efficiency of the Signal Service Bureau, that it would do no wrong to any one, and would place the bureau in proper relation to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee agreed, I believe unanimously, to strike out the fifth section, and I will state our main reason for doing so.

The bureau as now organized, with agents stationed all over the United States, is a military organization. There are lieutenants, sergeants, and privates in the organization, with duties and pay rated according to their rank. This has been its organization from the very beginning. The committee thought that upon this bill, intended mainly if not wholly to establish a new department of the Government, it would be a little dangerous to disarrange and disorganize so important a bureau.

The bureau is now well conducted, and the fact that it has relation to agriculture might be persuasive when we have full time to disorganize that which we now have organized and to erect or create a new bureau. Whilst under these circumstances we might make the experiment of disorganizing this bureau and creating it anew, yet we thought that in the initiation of this new department we had better not encumber its operations with this new problem.

Of course the agricultural interest is deeply concerned in the operations of the Weather Bureau, but it would be very difficult for any Senator to suggest that agriculture would get any more benefit from the operations of the bureau if it were transferred to the Agricultural Department than it now derives from it. The truth is that at present, owing to the insufficient number of the employés of the bureau and the inadequate methods which have been adopted to transmit the intelligence gathered by the bureau among the country people, its operations can not have a very material effect upon them. The predictions as to the weather rarely reach beyond twenty-four hours, and they are often wrong as to that period.

If the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Kansas, and other Senators will just imagine the facts to exist as they do exist, that the farmers who in the main, as they suppose, are interested in this bureau, live in the country, a large majority of them distant from telegraphic offices and where they have no means of acquiring this information within the twenty-four hours in which the predictions will either be verified or not, they will see that it will be a long time to come yet before agriculture can be made the chief recipient of the benefits of the Weather or Signal Service Bureau. Of course it gets some benefit.

I see the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. PALMER] here, who can confirm what I have said.

For these reasons, whilst the committee were very anxious, all of us, to create this new department, we thought we had better not encumber it just now with the Signal Service or Weather Bureau.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will agree to the committee's amendment, and I think I represent the view of most of the members of the Agricultural Committee. It is not that we do not desire to magnify the Department of Agriculture, the new Executive Department to be created, but we doubt very much whether it is a wise thing to ingraft this bureau upon that department in its inception.

The proposition at first struck me as very novel, for I had been educated to suppose that the Signal Service Bureau appertained mostly to commercial wants and commercial exigencies. Upon the shores of the Great Lakes, where it is much more essential to know the correct weather than it is upon the Atlantic coast, the bureau is regarded with great favor. That immense commerce is in a great measure affected by the predictions of the bureau. The bureau has been very successful, and its success might not be impaired by attaching it to the Agricultural Department, but it would be an experiment. I do not think that any one has really studied up the subject so as to be confident that it would be the proper thing for us to attach it to the Agricultural Department.

While I appreciate the animus that inspires the Senator from Kansas in desiring that the bureau shall be attached to the Agricultural Department, still I think it would be some time before the country would become reconciled to such a transfer. Even if the transfer were thought best and we had agreed upon attaching this bureau to the Department of Agriculture, I do not think it would be wise to attach it until some of us know a little more about the Signal Service Bureau.

On that account I hope the amendment of the committee will be agreed to and that this very important agent of commerce, and to be, possibly, of agriculture, will be allowed to remain where it is until we have further time to acquaint ourselves with the wants of the farmers and the views of the commercial men and the seafaring men, and also to look into its organization and see how it will be affected by a transfer.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I only want to add a few words. As a member of the committee I voted for this amendment, principally for the reason that I desired the bill should go unembarrassed by difficulties that it seemed sure to meet before it reached the statute-book unless this change was made, and in the hope that by making it a bill pure and simple for the creation of the Agricultural Department, unembarrassed by serious controversies which grow out of the attempted transfer at this time of the Signal Service Bureau, it would be such a bill as to be at least tolerably sure of its enactment into a law. I think that the amendment is decidedly in the interest of the chief purpose of the bill.

For my own part, at as early a period of time as it can well be done, with such care and consideration in the reforming and reshaping of the Weather Bureau as the importance of the subject demands, I should wish to have the bureau under purely agricultural control and devoted to agricultural uses. I should, with such precautions, desire early to see the Weather Bureau, or a weather bureau at least ample and sufficient for all agricultural uses, placed under the direct control of the Agricultural Department; but I think we shall be making haste even if we make it a little more slowly by the adoption of this amendment, and in the interest of the chief purpose of the bill I favored it in committee.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Weather Bureau, as it is called, is a bureau of very great importance throughout the agricultural portion of this country everywhere. It is also of some commercial importance upon the seashore. It is quite evident that it relates only to agricultural and commercial interests.

The committee ought either to put the Agricultural Bureau under the Secretary of War and in the War Department or they ought to transfer the Weather Bureau to the Department of Agriculture created by the bill. There is no question in regard to that point. The War Department has nothing to do with agriculture; it has nothing to do with commerce; and I do not see why it is not quite as easy in the passage of this bill establishing the Agricultural Department to make provision for the Weather Bureau or the Signal Service Bureau as for any other branch of that department.

I only wished to say this much, sir. I shall not make any motion upon the subject, but it is quite evident that those matters which concern the agricultural and commercial interests of the country ought not to be in any wise connected with the War Department.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a very important bill upon which we are passing, and it strikes me that we are acting upon it without that consideration to which it is entitled. As at present advised I shall vote against the amendment of the committee. The effect of rejecting the amendment, I understand, will be to leave the bill as it came from the other House.

The Signal Service Bureau of the Government became a part of the military establishment in time of war, when it is a very important adjunct of an army for the purpose of indicating the movements of troops. But as matters now are I can not understand what possible relation it can have to the military establishment of the Government.

It has been claimed, I believe, by those who are in favor of retaining this bureau under the War Department that it was necessary to preserve the discipline of the bureau. But there are very many other attachments or adjuncts of the various bureaus of the Departments on the civil side of the Government where the discipline I presume is kept up just as well as if they were under military government. It is obvious that the only people in this country who derive any essential material benefit from the Signal Service Bureau are the agriculturists, the farmers.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that the really great service for which the bureau was established originally was to aid commerce, as I understand, and that service continues and is becoming daily more and more important.

The probability is that so far as money, material development, and improvement are concerned, the Weather Bureau serves the country $5 in the direction of commerce where it serves it $1 in the direction of agriculture. There is use for the bureau in the War Department still.

Mr. BUTLER. Possibly I was not quite accurate in my statement that the bureau would entirely subserve the interests of the agriculturists of the country. I have no doubt in the world that it is of very great service to commercial interests also. If that be true, it is an additional argument and reason why the amendment should not be adopted, and I shall therefore feel constrained to vote against the amendment.

I think the Signal Service Bureau ought to be transferred to the Department of Agriculture, especially if we are to make a Cabinet officer of the head of that department, because if that be the case the commercial as well as the agricultural interests, I understand, will in a great measure pass under that department.

But I rose for the purpose of suggesting to the Senator from Kansas that unless he is very urgent for a vote this evening we might let this bill go over and have a little more consideration, for I agree with him entirely that the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to the bill going over until Monday if there can be unanimous consent that it shall come up then immediately after the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. BUTLER. I think that course would facilitate the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. The Chinese restriction bill is to be voted upon on Monday.

Mr. PLUMB. That will occur at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. This is a House bill, and if passed without amendment it will become a law with the signature of the President. On the contraay, if we amend it it must go back to the other House.

Mr. BLAIR. A conference committee could be asked and obtained very soon, I imagine, and the House would probably agree to the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. We know the difficulty of getting anything through the other House. There is rarely a quorum there now, and if anybody should be opposed to the bill there he would have no difficulty in defeating it. I am so anxious to have the bill become a law that, in my judgment, unless there is some very strong reason controlling otherwise, the Senate ought to pass the bill as it came from the other House. As to the matter of detail in the arrangement of the Signal Service Bureau under this new Department, I think there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. PLUMB. I think we had better have a vote anyway, and see what the temper of the Senate is in regard to the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he has examined the fifth section of the pending bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. Undoubtedly if he has examined it he sees that it involves a thorough reorganization of the Signal Service Bureau. My opinion is that it is of such vital importance that this great agency should be protected that the matter should come in as a separate bill and receive a separate discussion, detached entirely from the pending measure even if we do transfer this bureau to the Department of Agriculture. I am not prepared to say but that I should be in favor of it.

I am very anxious to have the Department of Agriculture created; and I do not think this is the proper time to transfer the Weather Bureau by a section of the pending bill where more consideration is given to the aim to be arrived at in establishing that executive department than to the methods which may be involved in the fifth section. I think it is a matter which requires very careful scrutiny and that we should have the Signal Service Bureau officers before us and get the pros and cons before we take this very decisive step.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to ask him if in creating a department he does not think it proper to assign to it the various duties which should legitimately belong to it?

Mr. PALMER. I think so, but I do not think there should be hasty or inconsiderate action on this particular matter.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator not think that this particular bureau, the Signal Service Bureau, would be more properly assigned to the Agricultural Department of the Government than to any other one of the Executive Departments of the Government?

Mr. PALMER. As to that I am not prepared to answer now. At first blush I should say no, and I have no doubt I could bring ten arguments to the gentleman's one in support of my position. I am not taking the ground that the bureau should not be attached to the Department of Agriculture, but I think that the subject should be considered separately and have mature deliberation and examination. It is better for us to go slowly and build up this department as it should be built up, without detracting from its powers by doing something irrelevant and foreign and attempting to make all the provisions which possibly will be made in the future. I do not think we should attach the Signal Service Bureau now and reorganize it, as it is reorganized in this section, without regard to the wants of commerce or of agriculture.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not understand that the fifth section proposes to reorganize the Signal Service Bureau. It simply proposes to transfer the bureau.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. Does the Senator know what the present organization of the bureau is?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, I have some information on that subject; but the fifth section proposes to transfer the organization of the Signal Service Bureau to this new executive department. I can not see why there should be any friction in that transfer, inasmuch as the second paragraph of the section provides for a reorganization of the Signal Service Bureau. It does not disturb any vested rights. If any officer of the Army, or soldier, or non-commissioned officer has a vested right, it does not disturb the vested rights of anybody in the Signal Service Bureau.

Mr. PLATT. It takes the force away and transfers it.

Mr. BUTLER. It transfers the force to this new executive department, but that is all. Then the second paragraph provides that within thirty days after the passage of this act the Secretary of War shall appoint a board of three Army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member, for the purpose of such a reorganization of the bureau under the Agricultural Department. I can not see what harm or injury or injustice can result to anybody by the transfer.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina, as he has the bill before him, if when the commission created by the second clause of the fifth section shall have investigated and shall have determined upon what it may think the best policy it will not have to report to Congress, and Congress will then take action determining upon the wisdom or unwisdom of the recommendations of that board?

Mr. BUTLER. Clearly Congress has jurisdiction and control of the whole subject, and the mere transfer to this new executive department does not disturb it, as I understand.

Mr. HARRIS. As I understand the Signal Service Bureau as now organized, that organization is simply and bodily transferred to the new department by the fifth section, and Congress will deal with it hereafter in respect to its reorganization or non-reorganization as Congress may choose.

Mr. BUTLER. That I understand to be the case. In fact, the fifth section so provides distinctly. I call attention to lines 6, 7, and 8 of section 5:

> Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau, including the second lieutenants now in service, shall continue as at present.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator if he understands that the board is composed of three Army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member?

Mr. PLUMB. What board is that?

Mr. PALMER. The board proposed to be created by this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. But that board is simply to make an inventory of the property and determine what is necessary to go with it and what is necessary and proper to remain under the custody of the War Department.

Mr. PALMER. Very true.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly, that is all of it.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the Senator in charge of this bill will permit it to go over. It is very evident that there is not a quorum here this afternoon. I think he can scarcely expect that this amendment will be voted upon without a call of the yeas and nays. I am certainly in favor of the amendment—that is to say, I am in favor of striking out that part of the bill which proposes to transfer the Signal Service Bureau to the Agricultural Department. There seems to be a very great incongruity in transferring the force which is now a part of the military establishment of the United States, second lieutenants, sergeants, and enlisted men.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the enlisted men are under the same penalties for desertion that the men in the Army regularly are.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly; and it seems to me that there is a very great incongruity in transferring that force, both the men and officers, and putting it under the control of a civil department of the Government, for that is just what it is, and nothing else.

Mr. PLUMB. There are several incongruities. The one the Senator speaks of is no greater than the one that exists now in having a bureau, which has relation to nothing of a military character whatever, entirely under the control of the military establishment. That certainly is as incongruous as it would be to have for the time being a few lieutenants and enlisted men under the command of a military officer, remember, as the Chief of the Signal Service would be until we reorganize the bureau by law, himself put under the control of a civilian head of a department, which is just what he is now, because his superior officer at present is the Secretary of War, who is a civilian. So if there is any way of measuring incongruities, the incongruity is longer and broader as it exists now than it would be if this transfer were to take place.

Mr. PLATT. There is an old maxim that it is better to—

> Bear those ills we have,
> Than fly to others that we know not of.

If it be true that there are incongruities in the present system, it seems to me to be no reason for this proposed transfer where, I submit, with all respect, the incongruity will be greater than it is now. It simply proves to my mind that if we are going to pass this bill we ought to pass it with this amendment which is proposed by a majority of the committee, and that then we should deal with this subject hereafter as an independent matter, as the chairman of the committee suggests.

It may be well to entirely reorganize the system by which the present Signal Service is carried on and disconnect it entirely from the military system, but this section does not propose to do that. It proposes to retain the military features of the service and transfer it to the control of a man who it may be expected has great knowledge of farming, the distribution of seeds, looking after cattle plague, and all that sort of thing.

While I am not prepared to say, and do not say, that there are not incongruities in the system as it now exists, I think this hasty and arbitrary, I will not say reckless method of transferring the Signal Service to the Agricultural Department to be created ought not to be pursued.

I trust the Senator from Kansas will allow the matter to go over. If he insists upon a vote now, there is another view of the subject that I should like to present at this time, but I prefer to have it go over.

Mr. PLUMB. On a consideration of the lateness of the hour and the fact that the Senate is thin, I have no objection to the bill going over, provided there can be an understanding that it shall come up immediately at the close of the morning business on Monday, not to displace, however, the existing order in regard to the Chinese restriction bill.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to such an understanding provided that if the Chinese restriction bill should be reconsidered we can go ahead with that.

Mr. BLAIR. It might be well to suggest, in connection with what has been said, that amendments have been adopted which will compel the return of the bill to the other House, and to its being sent to a conference committee, so that the objection of the Senator from South Carolina as to the adoption of this further amendment would seem to be without point for that reason.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; my attention has been called to one provision of the bill which is to go into operation the first day of July, 1888. Of course it will have to be amended in that particular.

Mr. BLAIR. Several other amendments have been adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. Several verbal amendments have been already agreed to, and are proper.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no doubt a conference committee would dispose of the bill with promptitude.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the consideration of this bill as the unfinished business will be resumed on Monday at the conclusion of the routine morning business, not to interfere with the assigned order already for the vote upon the motion to reconsider the Chinese restriction bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Is this agricultural bill the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the unfinished business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 221) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a "Joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a 'Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;'" and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ARBITRATION OF RAILROAD DIFFERENCES.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The first five sections of this bill are but transcripts of the bill that passed both Houses in the Forty-ninth Congress, but failed to be enrolled for want of time. The latter sections of the bill confer upon the President the power to appoint a commission whenever a disturbance occurs in connection with the interstate-commerce transportation, etc., to make examination and report.

Mr. CALL. I was going to ask the Senator if he did not think the Senate was rather too thin to consider so important a bill, but I will not do so, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is anxious for its passage.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is the only explanation that I deem it necessary to make at this time. The Senate has passed upon the first five sections already in the last Congress. The other sections merely provide a method of examination which may be of very great practical importance in cases of disturbance such as we have had in various States and Territories in the past few years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF HENRY VOLCKER.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2170, House bill No. 2996.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2996) to confirm the title of the heirs or legal representatives of Henry Volcker, deceased, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know what the value of this land is?

Mr. COKE rose.

Mr. STEWART. I made the report in the case. It is a very straight case and was reported upon by Mr. Benjamin some thirty-odd years ago. The certificate referred to was one of the certificates issued by the government of Texas before she was admitted into the Union. It was located in New Mexico. Afterwards by the act of 1850 the line was changed, and territory claimed by Texas was ceded to the United States and made part of New Mexico. That is the way that it happened to be left out.

Mr. HOAR. My question was, what is the present value of the land?

Mr. STEWART. It is not very valuable. I inquired into that and the surrounding land, and sent to the Department, but I could not get at the exact value.

Mr. HOAR. It is 640 acres, I suppose?

Mr. STEWART. Six hundred and forty acres. It is probably worth $16 or $17 an acre.

Mr. HOAR. If it was a large and valuable tract of land, I think the bill should not pass without a full Senate and without a full explanation, but if it be but a few thousand dollars only, I do not suppose there is any reason for delay.

Mr. COKE. The land is of very little value.

Mr. STEWART. I inquired into that. It is not of great value.

Mr. COKE. It is in that part of New Mexico that was ceded by the State of Texas to the United States, and this party had acquired an equitable title to the location of his certificate issued under the laws of the republic of Texas upon the land before it was ceded to the United States.

Mr. STEWART. It was located before the cession.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATTHEW W. BERRYMAN.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 925, Order of Business 2009, for the relief of Matthew W. Berryman, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] without amendment. The report is in very few words. The bill is simply a provision for the payment to Mr. Berryman of compensation for his service as a major in the Army of the United States during the war of the rebellion, to give him the emoluments of major for services rendered as major of the Tenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers from the 13th day of October, 1861, to the 23d day of November of the same year.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Matthew W. Berryman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to pay to Matthew W. Berryman, of Newark, N. J., a major in the Army of the United States during the war of the rebellion, the emoluments of a major, for services rendered as major of the Tenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, from the 13th of October, 1861, to the 23d of November of the same year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES L. BRADWELL.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2021, House bill 5092.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5092) for the relief of Charles L. Bradwell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, which were, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "three" and insert "one;" in line 7, after the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "five;" and in the same line, after the word "and," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-two;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles L. Bradwell, late of the county of Chatham and State of Georgia, and now a resident of the county of Bartow, in said State, the sum of $1,532, the value of cotton belonging to said Bradwell and delivered by him to the Federal authorities in the winter of 1864 and 1865, under orders issued by General W. T. Sherman; and the amount of money necessary to pay said claim is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said sum to be in full settlement and payment of said claim.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask a conference on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HOAR, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. BROWN were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WATERTOWN, N. Y.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 2148, being the bill (H. R. 5059) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Watertown, in the State of New York.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINING-DÉBRIS QUESTION IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 1987, House bill 1216.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1216) for the investigation of the mining-débris question in the State of California was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, in line 8, after the words "can be," to strike out "derived" and insert "devised;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to detail three officers from the Engineer Corps of the United States Army as a commission for the purpose of making a thorough examination and investigation of the mining-débris question in the State of California, for the purpose of ascertaining whether some plan can be devised whereby the present conflict between the mining and farming sections may be adjusted and the mining industry rehabilitated, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. STEWART. The amendment is immaterial. It is a mistake in the engrossing. The two words are pretty nearly synonymous, "derived" and "devised," and so I will withdraw the amendment. The bill will have the same meaning with either word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can not withdraw the amendment, it having been reported by a committee.

Mr. STEWART. Then I ask that it be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. It is possible that the engrossed copy is right. It had better be compared.

Mr. STEWART. Both words really mean the same thing, and I ask that the amendment be voted down anyhow.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to proceed at this time to the consideration of Order of Business 2203, being the bill (S. 3467) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the substitute reported by the committee be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment reported by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the President that cholera, yellow fever, small-pox, or plague exists in any State or Territory or in the District of Columbia, and that there is danger of the spread of such disease into other States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, he is hereby authorized to cause the Secretary of the Treasury to make or promulgate such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent the spread of such disease from one State or Territory into another, or from any State or Territory into the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia into any State or Territory, and to employ such inspectors and other persons as may be necessary to execute such regulations to prevent the spread of such disease. And any person who shall willfully violate any rule or regulation so made and promulgated shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That any officer, or person acting as an officer, or agent of the United States at any quarantine station, or other person employed to aid in preventing the spread of such disease, who shall willfully violate any of the quarantine laws of the United States, or any of the rules and regulations made and promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury as provided for in section 1 of this act, or any lawful order of his superior officer or officers, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That when any common carrier or officer, agent, or employé of any common carrier, shall willfully violate any of the quarantine laws of the United States, or the rules and regulations made and promulgated as provided for in section 1 of this act, such common carrier, officer, agent, or employé shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORFEITURE OF MICHIGAN RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. PALMER. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2259, being the bill (S. 947) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, etc.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 9, after the word "Provided," to strike out the words:

That this act shall not be construed as forfeiting lands lying opposite to and coterminous with the completed portion of any railroad heretofore constructed under authority of said act of Congress.

And insert:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as forfeiting any lands heretofore earned by the location and construction of any portion of said road, nor as forfeiting the right of way or depot grounds of any railroad company heretofore granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. That in all cases when any of the lands forfeited by the first section of this act, or when any lands relinquished to, or for any cause resumed by, the United States from the grant mentioned in the first section of this act, have heretofore been disposed of by the proper officers of the United States or under State selections in Michigan confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, under color of the public-land laws, where the consideration received therefor is still retained by the Government, and the right and title of all persons holding or claiming under such disposals shall be, and is hereby, confirmed: Provided, however, That where the original cash purchasers are the present owners this act shall be operative to confirm the title only of such said cash purchasers as the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied have purchased without fraud and in the belief that they were thereby obtaining valid title from the United States. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to confirm any sales or entries of lands, or any tract in any such State selection, upon which there were bona fide pre-emption or homestead claims on the 1st day of May, 1888, arising or asserted under color of the laws of the United States, and all such pre-emption and homestead claims are hereby confirmed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senate will remember that when a general forfeiture bill came up some time ago there was a very earnest controversy between several Senators on one side and on the other, in which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]—the Senator from Arkansas as representing the committee and the Senator from Michigan as representing so far as possible important interests among his own constituents—took part on one side and I took some part on the other in the interest of some constituents of mine. The bill was subsequently passed by the Senate in a shape not entirely conforming to the original proposition of either side, passing, I believe, by the consent of both sides.

Now, I understand—and I make this statement so that my constituents who are interested will understand the matter—the Senator from Michigan proposes the passage of this special bill relating to Michigan alone, but which as he assures me (of course, I am quite sure he has examined it carefully) contains substantially, I do not know but in words, the provisions which existed in the bill that passed.

Mr. SAWYER. The same.

Mr. HOAR. With that understanding I do not feel it my duty to oppose the bill.

Mr. PALMER. I will state the only object I have in asking for the passage of this bill, although it is included in the omnibus bill reported by the Public Lands Committee, in which there were many railroads North and South involved. There is no prospect of that bill getting through the other House, or of the conferees agreeing very soon, and this is deprived of many of the objections to the former bill, because it relates to one set of interests which can be discussed on their merits.

Section 2 in this bill is the section corresponding to section 9 of the bill that was passed, over which the contest was had between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on the one side, and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and myself on the other. It is taken verbatim from that bill as it was passed. The only difference in section 1 is that whereas the Plumb bill forfeited all lands not opposite completed portions of the road, in this there occurs this proviso, which effects the same thing:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as forfeiting any lands heretofore earned by the location and construction of any portion of said road, nor as forfeiting the right of way or depot-grounds of any railroad company heretofore granted.

It is identical essentially with that part of the bill which pertains to this interest.

Mr. PLATT. Is section 2 the same as in the bill passed?

Mr. PALMER. I think it is identical. If not I will move a reconsideration on Monday.

Mr. PLATT. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER ON PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill 2877, Calendar No. 2173.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to give notice that when this bill is considered I shall move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. TELLER. It is a very important bill, but a local one.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 2877) authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "Idaho," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in the same line, after the word "Montana," to strike out "and all other mineral districts of the United States;" so as to read:

That all citizens of the United States, and all persons who have declared their intention to become such, and who are bona fide residents of the States of Colorado or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, shall be, and are hereby, authorized and permitted to fell and remove for mining, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 9, after the word "mining," to strike out "milling, manufacturing," and insert "quartz-milling."

Mr. STEWART. I think we had better insert "reducing ores." I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "and ore-reducing," if that be agreeable to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection. Let those words be inserted after the word "quartz-milling" in line 10.

Mr. STEWART. I do not care about "quartz-milling" at all.

Mr. TELLER. Let that stay in.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; let it stay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is in section 1, line 10, after the word "quartz-milling," to insert "ore-reducing."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, line 14, before the word "citizens," to strike out "said" and insert "such;" in line 17, after the word "be," to strike out "exported" and insert "used;" in line 21, after the words "who are," to insert "such citizens or have so declared their intention and are bona fide;" and in line 26, after the word "for," to strike out "mining, milling, manufacturing," and insert "mining, quartz-milling;" so as to read:

That all citizens of the United States, and all persons who have declared their intention to become such, and who are bona fide residents of the States of Colorado or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, shall be, and are hereby, authorized and permited to fell and remove for mining, quartz-milling, ore-reducing, building, or other domestic purposes, any timber or other trees growing or being on the public lands, said lands being mineral, and not subject to entry under the existing laws of the United States except for mineral entry, in either of said States, Territories, or districts of which such citizens or persons may be at the time bona fide residents. No timber felled or removed under the provisions of this act shall be used out of the State or Territory in which it was felled or removed without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior first had and obtained. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to impose any penalty on any person or persons who are such citizens or have so declared their intention and are bona fide residents of the States or Territories who may fell and take timber from any of the mineral lands in any of the States and Territories enumerated in this act for the manufacturing of lumber or fuel for sale for mining, quartz-milling, etc.

Mr. STEWART. In line 26, after the word "quartz-milling," I move to add "ore-reducing."

Mr. TELLER. Those words should be inserted in order to harmonize with the amendment previously made on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, line 29, after the word "removed," to insert "such felling and removal under this section to be;" and in line 32, before the word "other," to strike out "such" and insert "any;" so as to read:

Such felling and removal under this section to be subject to such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of any other timber and the undergrowth growing upon such lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the disposal of timber on non-mineral lands for domestic purposes shall be made by means of licenses as follows, namely: First, a settler's license shall be granted to any bona fide settler not having sufficent timber on his claim for his use thereon, on the payment of a fee of $1. Such license shall confer the right, for one year, to cut, for the licensee's own use only and for domestic purposes, timber, fuel, and fence material, without waste and under the general regulations of the Secretary of the Interior upon any of the public lands which the licensee may designate near his settlement, but such license shall not give the licensee exclusive right to cut timber on the land so designated, nor prevent settlement under the laws of the United States. Second, a timber license shall be granted to any bona fide settler or mine operator, manufacturer, or other person, for the purpose of allowing him to supply himself or others with timber, fence material, or fuel, upon the payment of a license fee of $5 and a sum equal to $1 for each and every acre embraced in his license, to be paid on the issuing of such license. Such license shall be granted for one year and shall confer the exclusive right to cut the timber on not more than 40 acres, the same to be selected by the applicant and the selection to be approved by the register or receiver of the land office of the district within which the lands are situated.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 3. That any citizen of the United States, or any person who has declared his intention to become such, and who is a bona fide resident of any of the States or Territories herein named, who is a bona fide settler under existing land laws upon any public land which has not sufficient timber thereon for his use for domestic purposes, shall, on application to the register and receiver of his land district, describing his claim, and on payment of a fee of $1, be granted a settler's license, conferring on him the right, for one year thereafter, to fell and remove from any of the public lands near his settlement, for his own use only, and for domestic purposes, any timber, fuel, and fence material thereon, without waste, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; but such license shall not confer on him the exclusive right to fell and remove such timber nor prevent settlements under the laws of the United States. And any such citizen, or person who has declared his intention to become such, and who is a bona fide resident of any of the said States or Territories herein named, who is a bona fide settler on any public land, or a mine operator or manufacturer, who desires to supply himself or others with timber, fuel, or fence material from any public lands, shall, on application to the register and receiver of the land district, describing the quarter quarter-section of public land, and on payment of a fee of $5, and $50, being $1.25 per acre, be granted a license conferring on him for one year thereafter the exclusive right to fell and remove from such quarter quarter-section of public land timber, fuel, or fence material for his own use or the use of others residing in such State or Territory.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to move to strike out, in line 27 of section 3, the words "one year" and insert "two years." That was an oversight.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 27 of the proposed section 3, before the word "thereafter," strike out "one year" and insert "two years;" so as to read:

Be granted a license conferring on him for two years thereafter the exclusive right, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committte on Public Lands was to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That all licenses provided for in the preceding section shall be in printed forms, and shall be issued by the register and receiver of public money of the land district where such lands are situated, upon the payment of the license fee. Licenses shall be numbered in succession, as applications for them are made, and priority of application shall determine the order in which they are granted. The register and receiver shall keep open books, in which shall be recorded, in proper order, applications for license and the action taken upon them, with the names and residence or post-office address of the applicants and description of the lands applied for. No licenses of any kind shall be transferred from one company or person to another unless the transfer of the same is authorized by the Secretary of the Interior.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 4. That the registers and receivers of each land office in any of the States or Territories herein named shall keep open books and record therein in consecutive order the name, residence, and post-office address of each applicant for license under this act, the date of his application, the description of the lands applied for, the action had thereon and the date of such action, the number of each license and its date, and shall grant and issue such licenses to bona fide settlers, and to bona fide settlers, mine operators, or manufacturers applying for a quarter quarter-section according to priority of application, and shall number such licenses in successive order. The said licenses shall be in such printed forms or partly printed and partly written forms as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall not be transferable unless such transfer is authorized by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That all applications for "lumberman's license" are to be made to the register and receiver of the proper land office and must be accompanied by a statement of the location and the proximate amount of the timber sought by the applicant. Such applications for a "lumberman's license" shall be considered in the months of May, July, August, September, and October only, and no license shall be granted before at least three months have expired from the date of application and the same has been advertised three times in a local paper of the district in which the licensee intends to locate. If the same location is sought by more than one applicant, priority of application shall not rule as to applications made in the same month, but the application for the smallest location shall, in such case, receive first consideration. And wherever a survey of the location is necessary, the applicant shall pay the expense of such survey; and whenever the licensee begins operations upon his location he must notify the register and receiver, and all cutting and disposal of the timber and other forest products shall be done under the supervision of the register or receiver and in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to change the numbering of sections 8, 9, and 10 to sections 6, 7, and 8, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend, on page 2, section 1, at the end of line 32, by adding the words "of timber trees" after the word "undergrowth;" so that it shall read, "the undergrowth of timber trees growing upon such lands."

Mr. TELLER. There is no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 32, after the word "undergrowth," it is proposed to insert "of timber trees;" so as to read:

For the protection of any other timber and the undergrowth of timber trees growing upon such lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAMPTON and Mr. PLATT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HAMPTON. I was very anxious to call up a bill of great importance to South Carolina, but as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is anxious to adjourn, and I know that he wants the Senate full so that he can have all his friends to vote for my bill, I will not call it up this evening.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, September 17, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 14, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

VETO MESSAGE—JESSE M. STILWELL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 6371, entitled "An act granting a pension to Jesse M. Stilwell."

On the 6th day of May, 1885—twenty years after this beneficiary was discharged from the Army—he filed an application in the Pension Bureau for a pension, alleging that in December, 1863, one year and eight months before his discharge, a comrade assaulted him with a stick while he was sitting in front of his tent preparing for bed and injured his back. He alleged that the assault was unprovoked and unexpected.

The claim was rejected upon the facts stated upon the ground that any injury incurred was not the result of military duty.

Unless the Government is to be held as an insurer against injuries suffered by any one in the military service, no matter how incurred, and also as guarantor of the good and peaceable behavior toward each other of the soldiers at all times and under all circumstances, this is not a proper case for the allowance of a pension.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, September 13, 1888.

POLYGAMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General in reply to the resolution of the House in relation to polygamy in Utah and Idaho; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT OF PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House providing for the printing of 10,000 copies of the message of the President, together with the reports of the majority and minority of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the House agree to the Senate amendment. It simply provides for the printing of 5,000 copies of these documents for the use of the Senate. The House resolution provided for only 10,000 copies for the House. This simply adds an additional number of copies for the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate amendment was concurred in.

JOHN D. ADAMS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] asks that an order be made requesting the Senate to supply the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams, that sent to the House having been lost or mislaid.

There was no objection, and the order was made as requested.

H. R. BLAKISTON.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] requests that an order be made asking the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to H. R. Blakiston, the object being to correct the name of the beneficiary.

There being no objection, the order was made as requested.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCSHANE indefinitely, on account of important business, and to Mr. HATCH for two weeks, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 212) for the relief of Patrick H. Winston, jr.;

A bill (S. 2252) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company;

A bill (S. 2913) granting a pension to Mary Sturgess;

A bill (S. 3186) granting a pension to Christian Winkel;

A bill (S. 2750) to increase the pension of Samuel A. Tate;

A bill (S. 2576) granting a pension to Richard Hudson; and

A bill (S. 1506) for the relief of Addie Bell.

Mr. LANHAM. I demand the regular order.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, NANTUCKET ISLAND.

Mr. CRISP. I wish to submit a privileged report from a conference committee.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8752) providing for the establishment of additional life-saving stations on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
A. R. ANDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
T. W. PALMER,
J. N. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House submit the following statement:

The House committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 8752 submit the following explanation of the report herewith submitted:

The bill as it passed the House limited the cost of the life-saving station on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts, to the sum of $5,000. The Senate amendment strikes out this limitation, the report agrees to the Senate amendment, and no limit of cost is now fixed in the bill.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
A. R. ANDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent also, in this connection, that a letter from the superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, showing the reason for the action of the House conferees in agreeing to the amendment of the Senate, be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
UNITED STATES LIFE-SAVING SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., September 11, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your request of the 6th instant for a statement of reasons why the cost of the establishment of life-saving stations should not be limited in the acts authorizing such establishments.

In reply I would say that I entertain this opinion because:

First. It is impracticable to name a sum which would be a reasonable limitation for the cost of stations authorized for various localities upon the 10,000 miles of coast in the United States where the prices of material and labor greatly differ, the cost of transportation depends largely upon the accessibility of the locality, and where the amount of engineering skill and labor requisite must be determined by the peculiar local features of each site selected.

Second. On account of the large difference in the cost of stations in different localities the maximum amount which would have to be named as a limit would encourage the owners of property upon which stations were to be built to demand excessive prices for sites which otherwise the Government would be able, as now, to obtain at low rates or by donation.

Third. It would encourage communities where stations were to be erected, actuated by the desire for local aggrandizement, to press for the expenditure of the entire sum fixed as the limit.

In this connection I would state that the sum of $5,000, which was named in the amendment to certain bills providing for the establishment of stations, which passed the House in July last, is entirely inadequate. The accounting officers hold that the cost of establishing a station includes the expense of selecting the site; its purchase; the ascertainment of the validity of the title; advertising for proposals for the construction of the buildings; the cost of the buildings; the cost of supervising their construction, and of final inspection; the cost of equipment with apparatus, furniture, and outfits of every kind, and, in fine, all other expenses connected therewith. The average cost of the buildings alone in the last sixteen stations which have been constructed is $4,831.59; and the average cost of boats, apparatus, furniture, and other outfits has averaged $2,581.48. The smallest cost of any of these buildings are those erected at South Haven, Mich., for $3,814.63, and the largest those now being completed at Galveston, Tex., for $9,615. In all cases the lowest bids have been accepted upon plans and specifications after advertisement.

These facts, I presume, will satisfy the committee and Congress that the proposed limitation of $5,000 is insufficient, and that it would be inexpedient to establish any limitation.

Respectfully, yours,

S. I. KIMBALL,
General Superintendent.

Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP,
Chairman pro tempore Committee on Commerce,
House of Representatives.

The report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. LANHAM. I withdraw the demand for the regular order for the present.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

WITHDRAWING PUBLIC LANDS FROM SALE.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I ask to make a privileged report, and I ask present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11388) to withdraw certain public lands in the Territory of Wyoming from sale or disposition under the laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I am directed by the committee to ask consideration of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all public lands in townships 20, 21, and 22 north, of range 116, and in townships 19, 20, 21, and 22

north, of range 117, in the Territory of Wyoming, be, and the same hereby are, withdrawn and reserved from sale or disposition under the laws of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect any right heretofore acquired in good faith and in pursuance of existing law: And provided further, That any lands included in any of said townships which may be hereafter restored to the public domain shall become and be subject to the provisions of this act.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the first proviso, beginning with the word "Provided," at the end of line 9, down to and including the word "law" in line 12, and in lieu thereof insert: "Provided, however, That any part of said lands exclusively valuable for agriculture shall remain subject to entry under existing law."

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that the report be printed in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report of the committee (by Mr. STONE, of Missouri) is as follows:

Your committee having had under consideration H. R. 11388, report the same back to the House with an amendment. The committee propose to strike out the first proviso, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 9, and ending with the word "law," in line 12, as being unnecessary, and in lieu thereof to insert the following: "Provided, however, That any part of said lands exclusively valuable for agriculture shall remain subject to entry under existing law."

The lands sought to be withdrawn by this bill are in Southwestern Wyoming. In parts of the several townships described in the bill are located coal fields containing deposits phenomenal in extent and of rare value. Indeed, the facts brought before your committee have led to the conviction that in the small area described in the bill are contained the most remarkable and in some sense the most valuable coal deposits on the American continent. The existence of these coal fields have but recently come to the public knowledge. Combinations and syndicates have been formed to obtain possession and control of them under the law authorizing the purchase of coal lands. The lands are within 15 miles of the Union Pacific Railroad, and the law fixes the price at $20 per acre. The contest between opposing interests has brought the matter to public attention. Various schemes have been devised to obtain title and to monopolize the lands. Different experts have been sent out to examine them. In 1863 Mr. P. W. Sheafer, of Pottsville, Pa., geologist and engineer of mines, and a practical and experienced operator on a large scale in the coal regions of Pennsylvania, was sent out by one of the combinations endeavoring to get control of these lands, or a large part and the most valuable part of them, for the purpose of examining and reporting the extent and value of the deposits. He concluded his report as follows:

"In concluding I would say that it has never been my privilege to look upon so vast and magnificent a deposit of coal as you have in Coal Ridge, and while it is a cretaceous deposit, inferior to anthracite and bituminous coals in calorific power, it has here, where it is the only coal, and where wood is scarce and costly, a value second to none, and however rich other regions may prove in coal-bearing strata, I question whether yours will not exceed them in possible output and outrank them in convenience of access. Taking into consideration the pertinent facts in relation to your lands, the great number, thickness, and extent of the coal beds, the character of the coal, the millions of tons above water level capable of being easily and cheaply mined, their location in reference to markets, and remembering that the coal areas of the West are comparatively small and isolated, one then can only fairly estimate the value of this great coal deposit which as yet stands without an equal."

The actual cash value of these lands is evidently very great, and their value to the people and to the industries of a vast region where fuel is scarce and high is inestimable if a monopoly of the lands can be prevented. At present the fight for the possession of them by opposing interests is fast and furious, and among the foremost in this desperate struggle are capitalists from abroad. Declaratory statements have been filed upon nearly all the lands certainly known to contain coal. Contests have been made and others are pending in many instances. A corporation was organized in the city of New York especially for the purpose of obtaining these lands. An agent was sent out and located on the ground, to whom the company furnished names of persons to be used in the location of entries and money with which to make the entries. This scramble for the possession of these lands is still in progress. It is a long history, and it would require much time to give all the details.

The Commissioner of the Land Office is now prosecuting inquiries and using what powers he has to get at all the facts. The entries made, or the declaratory statements filed, may be denied and canceled. And it is in anticipation of that result that this proposed legislation becomes important. If the present schemes for monopolizing these lands should be thwarted by official scrutiny and prompt action, very little would be accomplished, so far as the public interest is concerned, as long as the law now applicable to them remains as it is. New schemes for their acquisition would be started at once, and the lands would sooner or later pass into the hands of a monopoly, or else the Land Department would be harassed continually with every species of vexatious and expensive annoyance incident to the situation.

Your committee agree unanimously in the opinion that the public welfare will be best subserved, and deem it the part of prudence and wisdom to withdraw the lands from sale to await future legislation by Congress.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move to suspend the regular call of committees for reports, and ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make be allowed to present them to the Clerk for reference to the appropriate Calendars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas to dispense with the morning hour?

YELLOW FEVER IN FLOBIDA.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I would ask the gentleman to yield to me to have read a telegram which has been sent by Surgeon-General Hamilton to Hon. S. V. WHITE, of New York, in reference to the yellow fever in Florida.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] asks unanimous consent to have the telegram read. Is there objection?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAMP PERRY, FLORIDA, September 13, 1888.

Hon. S. V. WHITE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

This camp is getting in splendid condition, and a safe and sure outlet is now provided from Florida infected points to North. No sickness among refugees here, but five cases yellow fever in hospital. Tents half mile away. Have in place twenty-eight pine buildings and one hundred and fifty A tents. Baker County as well as Duval now danger points. Weather wet and favors development. Demand for aid from frightened Florida and Georgia towns entirely beyond appropriation.

HAMILTON.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I was authorized by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States, Report No. 3407.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas did not yield for that purpose. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw the demand for the regular order?

Mr. LANHAM. I withdraw the demand for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in addition to the unexpended balance of the fund heretofore appropriated, the sum of $200,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise, by such means as he shall deem best, to prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory from another, or into the District of Columbia from any State or Territory, or into any State or Territory from said District.

The report (by Mr. FORNEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States, having considered the same, beg leave to report it back herewith with the recommendation that it do pass.

Herewith is submitted certain correspondence had by the committee with the Treasury Department touching the subject-matter of the joint resolution.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., August 25, 1888.

SIR: By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, I hand you herewith a copy of the Senate joint resolution 102, making an appropriation to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States, and to request that you will, as early as may be practicable, advise them whether you deem it necessary and important that the same shall become a law.

The committee further request that you will inform them what balance of the appropriation made by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1887, is now available for preventing the spread of epidemic diseases, and whether, under the provisions of that appropriation, the President has sufficient power to take all known and needful steps to prevent the spread of yellow fever, now prevalent in portions of the State of Florida.

Very respectfully,

JAMES C. COURTS,
Clerk Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Hon. C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 27, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the committee's letter of the 25th instant, making inquiry—

1. What is the amount of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the prevention of the spread of epidemic diseases, and in answer to inform you that there is now an available balance of about $149,000; the exact amount can not be definitely stated owing to the fact that certain authorized expenditures have not yet been reported. You ask the opinion of the Department whether the proposed joint resolution 102 should become a law, and I have to say that it is at this time impossible to forecast the expenses that may become necessary in case of the further spread of the epidemic, and that in my opinion the passage of the resolution would be expedient.

2. The committee further inquire whether under the provisions of the appropriation the President has sufficient power to take all known and needful steps to prevent the spread of yellow fever, and in relation thereto I submit a copy of a letter written to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Epidemic Diseases, as containing the views of the Department on the further measures necessary to make the appropriation acts more effective in the fulfillment of the legislative intention.

Respectfully, yours,

I. H. MAYNARD, Acting Secretary.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 20, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose the draught of a bill to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State into another, and to provide for the punishment of certain offenses.

It has long been evident to the Department having charge of the matter that while the maritime quarantine is fully up to the present requirements, a general law making definite provisions for the framing of regulations for the conduct of operations to prevent the spread of epidemic diseases from one State to another was wholly lacking in vital force and statutory sanction. An appropriation act originally passed to tide over a public exigency then existing has been continued down to this time, and many instances have arisen showing the inadequacy of the power to frame satisfactory regulations.

In regard to the proposed penalty, it is the opinion of the Department that no penalty can be too severe for such a violation of the regulations as would introduce a virulent epidemic from one locality to another, and experience in the conduct of the service has shown conclusively the difficulty of executing by Federal machinery the local ordinances of a State or municipality.

It is therefore hoped that an act in some such form as the inclosed draught may be passed as speedily as practicable.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Chairman Committee on Epidemic Diseases, United States Senate.

A bill to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That when, in pursuance of the request of the governor of a State, the President shall by order direct the employment of any portion of the appropriation for the prevention of the spread of epidemic diseases within the boundaries of the said State in the maintenance of quarantine at points of danger or otherwise, in his discretion, any officer, or person acting as an officer or agent of the United States, who shall knowingly and willfully violate any lawful order of his superior officers shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and when any such officer or person acting as an officer or agent of the United States shall so violate, disobey, or willfully neglect to obey the order of a superior officer, as to cause the extension of cholera, small-pox, yellow fever, plague, or other disease prevailing as an epidemic, such officer or person acting as an officer or agent of the United States shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

SEC. 2. Whenever any common carrier, through its officers, agents, or employés, shall violate any quarantine order or regulations made in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of this act, such officer, agent, or employé shall be deemed guilty of offense in the same degree as that defined in section 1, and shall suffer the same penalty as that provided in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 3. Any person convicted of a misdemeanor under the provisions of this act shall forfeit and pay a fine of not less than $300, and any person convicted of a felony shall forfeit and pay a fine of not less than $3,000, and suffer imprisonment at hard labor for a period of not less than one nor more than three years; and when any person in the service of the United States shall be convicted of a misdemeanor or of a felony under the provisions of this act he shall, in addition to the penalty aforesaid, be dismissed the service forthwith.

SEC. 4. Whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that any of the diseases specified in section 1 of this act exist in any State, and that there is danger of the spread of such disease by the usual channels of transportation to other States, he is authorized to adopt such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be necessary in order to prevent the spread thereof from one State to another, and to employ such inspectors and other persons as may be necessary for the purpose aforesaid; and any person who shall knowingly disobey or violate any order, rule, or regulation made by the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to the authority herein conferred shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $500 and by imprisonment for a period of not less than one year.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida how large an amount of the appropriation that has been made is still on hand?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Very little. The telegram states that the demand exceeds the amount on hand.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOUGHERTY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I had any idea that there would be a quorum in the House to-morrow I would oppose this motion; but believing that there will not be a quorum present I hope it will be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas, dispensing with the morning hour. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

JOHN SWEENEY.

Mr. CHIPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10947) for the relief of John Sweeney; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TALLMOND GRAY.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8223) granting a pension to Tallmond Gray; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. LOUISA HUMPHREY.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11333) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Humphrey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JESSE J. CLARK.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9654) granting an increase of pension to Jesse J. Clark; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY K. RICHARDS.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3306) granting a pension to Mary K. Richards; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN M'COOL.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5807) granting a pension to John McCool; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLOTTE AYRES.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 11316) granting a pension to Charlotte Ayres; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES E. SCOTT.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4867) granting a pension to Charles E. Scott; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEMUEL A. WHEELER.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8911) granting a pension to Lemuel A. Wheeler; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELI J. YAMGHEIM.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2236) granting a pension to Eli J. Yamgheim; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ANNA LEACH.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10109) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Leach; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY J. FOSTER.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3030) granting a pension to Mary J. Foster; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

KATE C. VAN ARNUM.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3422) granting a pension to Kate C. Van Arnum; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. HERMANN, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back favorably the following cases; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 2823) for the relief of Hardy Elliff;
A bill (H. R. 655) for the relief of P. C. Davis;
A bill (H. R. 2831) for the relief of I. B. Nichols;

A bill (H. R. 4012) to pay Green Arnold, of La Grande, Oregon, $7,596.80 for Indian depredations committed.

THERESA HERBST.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 8078) granting a pension to Theresa Herbst, widow of John Herbst, late private Company G, One hundred and fortieth Regiment of New York Volunteers, with the recommendation that it be passed notwithstanding the objection of the President; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES A. COOK.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11304) for the relief of James A. Cook; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

E. J. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11351) for the relief of E. J. Shackleford; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS UNDER BOWMAN ACT.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 11431) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the Army of the United States as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NICOLLET ISLAND.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6286) granting to the city of Minneapolis, Minn., certain described tracts of land bordering on Nicollet Island; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 221) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a "Joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a 'Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.'"

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The House has resolved to go into Committee of the Whole.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the roll of members may be called, and that gentlemen present, as their names are reached on the roll, may be allowed to call up each one bill. There are a great many private bills on the Calendar that will provoke but little discussion, and I think that by adopting this order of proceeding we shall be enabled to dispose of a considerable amount of business. On the other hand, if we take up the Calendar in its regular order we shall be confronted at the outset with some bills that are very strongly opposed, and the probability is that the day will be consumed without much business being dispatched.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] asks unanimous consent that the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar be had to-day in the order usually observed at the Friday evening sessions for the consideration of pension business—that is, that the roll be called in the regular order, and that each member present as his name is called shall have the right to call up one bill for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, if that rule is to be adopted it will relegate all members whose names come toward the end of the roll to a later day, and probably they will get no hearing at this session of Congress. There is a bill at the top of the Calendar to which there can be no objection, and which I have endeavored for a long time to bring before the House, but objections were made, and finally the bill was passed over——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

Mr. WHEELER. I will not object, Mr. Chairman.

There was no objection to the request of Mr. LANHAM, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there was some confusion in the Hall when the Chair stated the order, and I ask that it be again stated for the information of members.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state the order as it was adopted by the committee. The names on the rolls are to be called in their regular order, and when the name of a member is called he is to have the right to present for consideration one bill which is upon the Private Calendar, but no other business, and if any member fails to respond or to call up a bill the next name will be called, and so on.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Does that relate to pension bills also?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not. It relates only to bills upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I understand that the order includes pension bills.

The CHAIRMAN. They are to be considered at the Friday evening session.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. But they stand on the Calendar and they are private bills, and the habit has been to call them up when we have had a private bill day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that the order included pension bills, because they are assigned for consideration on Friday evenings. The Chair did not understand the request of the gentleman from Texas to include pension bills.

Mr. LANHAM. It did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The order is as it has been stated by the Chair

MRS. SALLIE H. CARROW.

Mr. ATKINSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 8979) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie H. Carrow, executrix of Samuel T. Carrow, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Mrs. Sallie H. Carrow, the widow and sole executrix of the last will and testament of Samuel T. Carrow, deceased, the sum of $3,596, on account of property taken from said deceased for the use of the armies of the United States, the same being the amount awarded to said deceased by the Commissioners of Claims, as by reference to the third annual report of said commissioners, bearing date December 8, 1873, will more fully appear.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BROWER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred House bill No. 8979, after careful consideration and painstaking investigation of the claim of Mrs. Sallie H. Carrow, the widow and sole executrix of Samuel T. Carrow, deceased, submit the following statement of facts and conclusions:

This claim is based upon a claim filed in 1872 by Samuel T. Carrow (now deceased) before the Commissioners of Claims, under act of March 3, 1871, which claim is numbered 11427 upon the registry of said commissioners, and is for the sum of $10,870, on account of property taken from him by and for the armies of the United States. The Commissioners of Claims took under consideration this claim, and reported to Congress an allowance of $3,596, as appears in the summary report made by said commissioners, also on page 20 of their third annual report, bearing date December 8, 1873, which report established the loyalty of said Samuel T. Carrow, and fixes his claim as above stated.

Early in 1874 an anonymous letter was received by the Commissioners of Claims, purporting to have been written from Washington, N. C., calling into question the loyalty of said Carrow and the justice of his claim.

This letter, written in a scrawling and disguised hand, reads thus:

"WASHINGTON, N. C.

"SIR: I perceive from the list of claims that Col. Samuel T. Carrow, late marshal of North Carolina, recorded as No. 11427, and as from Wake County, North Carolina, but a native and resident of Beaufort County, has been awarded by your commission $10,870. You have certainly been imposed upon in more respects than one. Colonel Carrow's entire property of every description previous to 1861 never exceeded in valuation over $2,500, including slaves. He did aid and abet the Confederates by furnishing provisions, encouraging men to enlist, and in other ways, as will be readily proven to your satisfaction by applying to the following persons for information, who are the most prominent in the county: Satterthite & Brown, Sparrow & Shepard, lawyers; Dr. John McDonald, Dr. David Taylor, Dr. Jesse Bryan, and Dr. William Blount; or to the following merchants: John Myers & Sons, George Brown & Co., Benjamin F. Havens, John Blount, William Shaw, Edmund S. Hoyt, John Arthur, J. G. Brogon, John Smallwood, or to his neighbors, William Branch, William Blount, Burton Stilley, William Patrick, Joseph Stickney, Bryan Grimes, Joseph Laughinghouse, Churchill Bright, Thomas Wingfield. Or, if you send some one down to Washington to take evidence, you can convict him of falsehood by one-half of the people in Beaufort County."

(It will be observed that this letter is without date as well as without signature.)

A communication without paternity, of a character always dangerous and pernicious, wholly at variance with fair and honorable dealing, in violation of every principle of manly, moral courage fortified by the truth, coming from a hand only fitted to wield the assassin's stiletto, ignobly bent upon the gratification of personal malice, resorts to measures altogether contemptible and reprehensible, accomplishes its nefarious design in causing the Commissioners of Claims to recall the papers touching the claim of said Carrow from the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, which papers were referred to Special Agent Nelson, who, it appears, visited Washington, N. C., commenced to take and did take testimony without notice to the claimant, contrary to the universal rule of taking evidence.

While questioning the propriety of considering testimony so taken (covering the dates between February 4, 1874, and February 19, 1874), yet this testimony, fairly weighed, detracts nothing from Samuel T. Carrow's claim, but rather substantiates the justness thereof and establishes his loyalty. The loyalty of Samuel T. Carrow can not be questioned after an impartial review of the testimony (taken in the informal manner), for it appears that of the twenty-four names of individuals and firms given in the anonymous letter, eighteen were examined. Of that number twelve witnesses, among them political and war adversaries, testify that claimant Carrow was loyal and true to the Government of the United States during the late civil war; two of these witnesses are in doubt as to what were Carrow's sentiments, and only four openly and directly charge him with disloyalty. Of those who maintain that Carrow was loyal—

George Brown says "that he (Carrow) was loyal to the United States."

R. D. Myers says his (Carrow's) sympathies were with the Union," and that he "was thoroughly loyal to the United States Government, as shown by letters written by him to friends and captured during said war."

Thomas Sparrow says that Carrow's "sympathies and feelings during the entire war, from beginn ng to end, were in favor of the Union and against the war."

W. H. Patrick says "he (Carrow) sympathized with the United States Government and denounced secession."

John W. Blount says "he (Carrow) was regarded as a Union man."

Churchill Bright says Carrow "was in favor of the Union against the Confederacy, and believes his Union feelings grew stronger all the while after the State went out."

Edmund S. Hoyt says Carrow "was opposed to the secession movement and was looked upon as being disaffected toward the South."

John McDonald says that Carrow's "general reputation was that of a decidedly loyal man to the United States Government."

W. A. Blount says that Carrow's general reputation "was that of a very loyal man to the United States Government during the war."

Dr. David T. Taylor says that Carrow's "general reputation was that of a truly loyal man to the United States Government during the war."

John C. Bragonier "regarded him (Carrow) as disloyal to the Confederate government."

John Albert says he "was intimate with him (Carrow) during the war, and knows he was opposed to secession."

It also appears when it came to the knowledge of the said Carrow that Special Agent Nelson was proceeding to take testimony or would take testimony, Carrow, through counsel, asked opportunity to cross-examine witnesses, the clerk of the Commissioner of Claims replied to Carrow's counsel, saying:

"We also sent an agent to Washington, N. C., to see the persons named in the anonymous letters and find out how much truth there is in the charges. Meantime we have not touched our report and the papers in the case before the War Claims Committee. If it becomes necessary to go into an investigation, of course you are to have every opportunity of rebuttal; but if this preliminary investigation ends in sustaining the findings already made, what is the use of troubling Carrow or yourself?

"Signed, yours, Chas. F. Benjamin."

It demonstrates that the Claims Commission treated this investigation as preliminary, and the evidence taken of no greater weight than any other ex parte testimony. Afterward, on March 31, 1874, Carrow, by counsel, asked the special agent, H. E. Nelson, to recall certain witnesses examined by him during preliminary investigation, which special agent did; and in addition thereto examined some ten or twelve other persons, and the examination of the testimony given is substantially as elicited in the preliminary examination, and of the eleven persons who testified at the subsequent or second and more regular taking of testimony, all testify to the undoubted loyalty of Samuel T. Carrow (now deceased) to the Government of the United States, with but a single exception, and that person was simply unable to state whether or not said Carrow was a loyal citizen.

After this additional testimony had been taken and submitted to the Commissioner of Claims they returned their original report to the House of Representatives without modification, thereby ratifying and reconfirming the same, the award and allowance of $3,596 to Samuel T. Carrow (now deceased), on account of his claim as hereinbefore set forth; which report was referred again to the Committee on War Claims, January 9, 1880, where it failed to receive consideration, and all papers in relation thereto at the expiration of the Forty-third Congress found their way into the files of the House of Representatives.

Your committee deem this a case of peculiar merit which has been subjected to singular hardship, and as in some measure repairing the injustice occasioned by tardy recognition of the rights of a loyal citizen's claim, who has passed away, leaving this claim as a legacy to his family, believing that an honest and just Government will discharge its valid obligations to the widow and orphan, submits herewith the bill (H. R. 8979) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie H. Carrow, executrix of Samuel T. Carrow, deceased, without amendment, with the recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make one inquiry of the gentleman reporting this bill. If the Southern Claims Commission, after the supplemental examination, reported favorably upon this claim, how did it happen that it was not paid? I have no recollection of any claims reported by the Southern Claims Commission not having been provided for by the current appropriation bills.

Mr. ATKINSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE], the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, who will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The explanation may be made very briefly; in fact it is all set forth in the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. My inquiry was as to the reason of the failure to allow this claim heretofore. These claims came in at each session of Congress and were reported in one bill in the same way as the 4th of July claims; and if this claim was favorably acted on, how did it happen that it did not go into the general bill, as those general bills were passed from year to year, up to 1880?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. This claim, as is stated in the report, was originally passed at $10,870; the court allowed $3,596. After that allowance, and after the bill had been reported to the House, this anonymous letter was received undertaking to impeach the loyalty of this man Carrow. Hence this claim was omitted from the general bill. Before further testimony upon the question of loyalty had been received the 1st of January, 1880, had passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand from the report as read that this supplemental proof was taken in 1874 or 1875, which would be five years before the last report on these claims.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The supplemental proof was taken at that time, and was filed with the papers in the case; but, as the papers themselves show, the matter was left untouched and nothing done with it. The claim was not included in the general bills subsequently reported. In 1880 some one representing this claimant secured the introduction of a bill for the payment of this claim, and the bill was referred to the Committee on War Claims. In the various vicissitudes which attend claims before Congress, this claim has slumbered there until the present time. The Committee on War Claims found this state of facts existing, found nothing had been done by Mr. Carrow or Mrs. Carrow which should deprive them of their right to this money; hence the committee could do nothing else than report that the claim ought to be paid.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman tell us what the claim is for? The report does not state that.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The papers show it. I do not remember the circumstances. The papers show clearly the nature of the claim. It was for such supplies as were furnished to the armies of the United States, and claims for which were considered and allowed by the Southern Claims Commission, this claim having been filed before that commission and allowed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object to this bill; yet I am apprehensive that the whole facts have not been ascertained by the Committee on War Claims. I had the honor to be a member of that committee for a portion of the time when this matter was pending before the committee. I remember that this claim was withdrawn on account of some question having arisen; but how it happened (the claim having been reported back in 1875) that no appropriation was made for it in any general bill is what I can not understand. I apprehend something has transpired which is not now before the House; but not being able to recall all the facts, I do not feel justified in raising objection to the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

W. W. WELCH.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BACON.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I was present in the House and did not hear my name called.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of that statement the gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of W. W. Welch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. W. Welch, of Meridian, Miss., the sum of $103.86, on account of services rendered from February 10, 1872, to April 12, 1872, both dates inclusive, as local mail agent at Meridian, Miss.; and the said sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That this act take effect from the date of its passage.

The report (by Mr. SHAW) is as follows:

Your committee find from the records of the Post-Office Department that the claimant was duly appointed local mail agent at Meridian, Miss., on February 10, 1872, at $600 per annum, and served in that capacity until April 12 following, when his services were discontinued upon the recommendation of Robert E. Leachman, then postmaster at Meridian, as no longer needed. Although the service was rendered, the claimant received no pay therefor, the postmaster at Meridian not being authorized to pay for such service. There is due him, therefore, according to the auditor of the Post-Office Department, the sum of $103.58, and your committee would recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "eighty-six," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty-eight," and as so amended the bill do pass.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.
Washington, D. C., March 27, 1888.

SIR: I return herewith a letter personally handed to me by you from Hon. FRANK T. SHAW, making inquiry regarding the nature of the services performed by W. W. Welch, appointed local mail agent at Meridian, Miss., February 10, 1872, salary $600 per annum, and discontinued April 12, 1872, and asking further why his services were discontinued, why he was not paid for services performed, and who was the postmaster at Meridian, Miss., at that time.

In reply I would state that the records of this office, so far as the date of appointment and date of discontinuance of Mr. Welch, agree with those given by Hon. Mr. SHAW, namely, appointed February 10, 1872, at $600 per annum, and his services discontinued April 12, 1872, upon the recommendation of the postmaster at Meridian, Miss., stating that his services were not necessary.

Local agents are usually appointed at important railroad junctions, and their duties are to see that the mails are properly transferred from one road to another, keep a record of the arrival and departure of trains, and attend to any other business assigned them by the Superintendent of Railway Mail Service in whose division they may be located.

The name of the postmaster at Meridian during 1872 was Robert E. Leachman.

I inclose herewith a copy of a letter from the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, dated June 19, 1880, upon the same subject, which may have a bearing on the case.

Very respectfully,

T. E. NASH, General Superintendent.

Hon. A. E. STEVENSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

JUNE 19, 1880.

SIR: In reply to your letter dated April 22, 1880, in regard to the claim of W.

W. Welch, local mail agent at Meridian, Miss., in 1872, I have the honor to inform you that the following facts have been ascertained:

Mr. Welch performed service as local mail agent through substitute from February 10 to April 12, 1872, and received no pay for the same, the postmaster at Meridian not having been authorized to pay for such service.

Mr. Welch having been appointed at $600 per annum, he is entitled to $163.58 for this service, but can not be paid until Congress makes an appropriation for that purpose.

Very respectfully,

J. M. McGREW, Auditor.

Hon. SAMUEL L. SAWYER,
House of Representatives.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims, striking out, in line 6, "86 cents" and inserting "58 cents," was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NEHEMIAH OSBURN.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I call up the bill (H. R. 464) for the relief of Nehemiah Osburn. I ask unanimous consent that a bill granting the same relief, which was reported favorably by the Committee on Claims in the Forty-ninth Congress, be considered in lieu of this bill. The bill of the Forty-ninth Congress was reported with the preamble struck out. My object is to avoid the necessity of reading that long preamble.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not understand the gentleman's request.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. It is simply to substitute for the bill I have called up from the Calendar a bill of the Forty-ninth Congress granting the same relief, but which does not contain the long preamble embraced in the bill of the present Congress. I desire to save the necessity of reading that long preamble.

Mr. KILGORE. Is not this the same bill which was beaten here one night?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. It is a bill which was considered in the House at an evening session.

Mr. KILGORE. Was it not beaten?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. No, sir; its consideration was withdrawn under an arrangement then made.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the bill ought to be read as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] objects to the request of the gentleman from New York. Does the gentleman from New York desire to call up the bill he first indicated?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir; let its consideration proceed.

The bill (H. R. 464) for the relief of Nehemiah Osburn was read.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, the bill which has just been read is likely to provoke a great deal of discussion and opposition. My object in asking the order which has been made in regard to business to-day was that we might get through with as many bills as possible not involving large appropriations. I ask now to modify my request, so that only bills to the consideration of which no objection is made may be considered to-day. By the adoption of this order we shall be enabled to dispose of some business.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to amend that order so as to provide that bills not objected to by three members may be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment can be entertained; the order can only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. LANHAM. I make this request with a view to dispatching as much business as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] asks unanimous consent to modify the order already made, so as to consider only bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. McCREARY. Is it understood that if a member calls up a bill which is objected to he shall have the right to call up another bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be the ruling of the Chair. Is there objection to the order requested?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I object.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent that no bill be considered which is objected to by three persons.

Mr. PERKINS. Say five persons.

Mr. BLAND. Yes, that would be better; that is in accordance with the old rule.

Mr. WHEELER. I accept the suggestion. I ask unanimous consent that no bill be considered to-day which is objected to by five persons.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] asks, by unanimous consent, to modify the order so that no bills shall be considered to which five members may object.

Mr. STRUBLE. That is after an explanation of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, after the reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That request is made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I wish to make a remark or two before I pass upon that point. [Laughter.] I wish to make a remark reserving the right to object, and what I wish to say is this: This same bill was considered during an evening session. A number of friends objected to it on account of its length, and also on account of the length of the accompanying report. I wish, now, to say that it simply authorizes this party, Nehemiah Osburn, to go to the Court of Claims, and that after the finding of the court the amount of damage shall be such as Congress may see fit to make for breach of contract in the construction of a building at Baltimore in 1860–'61.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CHIPMAN. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. It is to modify the order so that no bill shall be called up if five members shall object. Is there objection?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw the bill he has called up, as the point of no quorum will be made against it. If he will do that, then other bills may be passed during the day.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I am requested to get out of the way and let other bills have a chance. This bill has precedence. It has been reported favorably more than once. The pending report is a unanimous one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will suspend.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. My objection was made under a misapprehension, and I now withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that the order be modified. Is there further objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. What is the order now?

The CHAIRMAN. It is that no bill shall be considered if five members object. The bill and report, if requested, will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That does not apply to the pending bill which I have called up?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I want to have fair play.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; but it requires five members to object to its consideration.

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to say to my friend from New York that for one I will not consent to the passage of this bill without the presence of a quorum.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. In view of the kindness of my friend from Texas, and in order not to obstruct the bills to be called up by other members, and especially in view of the fact that the point of no quorum will be raised against the bill (and we all know that a quorum is not present), I am compelled to withdraw the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, and if the gentleman withdraws the bill he can call up another.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I feel constrained to withdraw it, but I have another bill to call up, which I ask the Clerk to read.

CHARLES F. SWAIN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill and accompanying report now called up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6404) for the relief of Charles F. Swain, master of bark Philena.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles F. Swain, late master of the bark Philena, of New York, $8,000 for going with the said bark after and rescuing shipwrecked seamen from an uninhabited island near Cape Horn, at the request of Gorham Parks, then United States consul at Rio de Janeiro, the same having been declared due said Charles F. Swain by recent findings of the Court of Claims.

The report (by Mr. LAIDLAW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6404) for the relief of Charles F. Swain, master of bark Philena, having considered the same, report as follows:

This claim embraced in the present bill was duly referred to Court of Claims to find the facts and report to Congress. It appears that a hearing was had in that court of all the matters relating to the claimant's demand; that the United States was upon said hearing represented by counsel, and that after the hearing and due deliberation said court made a report, which was filed November 7, 1887, as follows, to wit:

[Court of Claims. Congressional Case No. 220. Charles F. Swain vs. The United States.]

FINDING OF FACTS. FILED NOVEMBER 7, 1887.

The claim or matter in the above-entitled case was transmitted to the court by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives on the 9th day of January, 1885.

R. D. Mussey, esq., appeared for claimant, and the Attorney-General by Lewis Cochran, esq., his assistant, and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interest of the United States.

The case having been brought to a hearing on the 2d day of June, 1887, the court, upon the evidence and after considering briefs of counsel on both sides, finds the facts to be as follows:

I.

The petitioner was in 1849 the master of the American bark Philena, which sailed from New York for San Francisco with passengers and a general cargo.

II.

Arriving at Rio Janeiro in September, 1849, he was requested by Mr. Gorham Parks, then consul of the United States at that port, to undertake to rescue from an uninhabited island near Cape Horn the passengers and crew of wrecked Robert Fulton, an American vessel of New York.

The said consul had made application to other vessels to attempt the said rescue; but up to said time the vessels had refused.

III.

Captain Swain undertook the rescue and effected it, at a cost of some sixteen days' detention to his vessel and deviation from his regular course, as hereinafter stated.

V.

On his arrival at his port, San Francisco, the detention and deviation caused by this rescue resulted in litigation, including an attachment of the vessel and a detention of three months, which caused losses on the cargo, freight, and employment of the vessel.

VI.

Litigation between Captain Swain and the owners followed, growing out of the detention and deviation incident to the rescue, that did not end until 1882. Said litigation was pending in the city of New York. The case remained on the docket twenty-nine years. No payment has been made by the United States on account of the services of the Philena.

VII.

After the rescue was made by the Philena, as aforesaid, claimant made on the 28th day of November, 1849, a declaration before the United States consul at Valparaiso, in which he claimed the sum of $5,000, which included his compensation for said rescue and damages to his vessel.

The said declaration, made as aforesaid, was sent to the Department of State and filed in said Department.

VIII.

After the consul requested the said petitioner to make the said rescue, the said ship left Rio Janeiro early in October, 1849, for the East Falkland Islands, where it anchored.

The captain visited a settlement, as he supposed, on one of the said islands, in a whale-boat; but found the settlement had been removed; he there procured a small sealing vessel, and with that boat went to the place where the ship had been wrecked, where he found five men, with nothing to sustain them except what they saved from the ship, and with no means of escape. The rest of the crew of the Fulton had been rescued.

He rescued the men and returned to the Philena at the end of nine days. The ship was eleven days at anchor at said islands.

The distance sailed by said petitioner from said ship to where he rescued the men is about 50 miles.

It does not appear what detained him for the space of nine days. It does not appear what the expense of the litigation at San Francisco was. The petitioner owned one-tenth of the vessel.

The suit in the city of New York was commenced by the petitioner in the name of a third party against the owners of the vessel Philena, for wages as master and supplies. The defense was that the petitioner had deviated from his course with the ship, whereby the owners had suffered injury to the vessel and cargo.

The suit was discontinued in 1882, the plaintiff for the claimant herein releasing the defendants from all claim for wages, and the defendants releasing to claimant all their interest in the claim against the United States because of the rescue and detention.

In January, 1851, the petitioner terminated his connection with the Philena, and at that time the owners owed him $3,000 for wages and supplies.

IX.

The ship Philena was held at San Francisco until the 18th of May, 1850. The captain had arranged to go to Panama after a load of passengers, and after the release did so, but in consequence of the delay at San Francisco he was compelled to return to said place with only five passengers, when he could have carried two hundred.

When the ship arrived at Panama the passengers, except as above, had left.

It does not appear that he had any arrangement as to a specified number of passengers from Panama, nor does it appear what number he would have received if he had been at Panama, as he contemplated at the time of detention at San Francisco.

The expense of the said ship while detained by said attachment as aforesaid were $3,000.

The services in making said rescue, including time and damages to said Philena, were reasonably worth the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000.)

By the Court.

A true copy.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the Court of Claims this 16th day of November, 1887.

[SEAL.] JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk of Court of Claims.

Your committee have also looked through the evidence in the case before the Court of Claims, and they are of the opinion that the findings of fact by said court are fully sustained by the evidence, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. At the moment my name was called I was temporarily out of my seat, and I ask now consent to call up the bill I send to the desk.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to have some understanding about this matter. I do not like to object exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa states that he was temporarily out of his seat, and asks consent to call up a bill.

Mr. BLAND. Is it the gentleman's own bill?

Mr. MACDONALD. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I shall have to object to this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has stated that at the moment his name was called he was absent from his seat.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I have been in the Hall all the morning, but did not hear my name called.

Mr. FARQUHAR. When that rule was adopted it was the understanding that we would live up to it and make no exceptions. I do not object in the present instance, but I do object to these 2 and 3 o'clock members who may come in here after the A, B, and C list has been passed over and ask to go back to their names. It is unfair to those of us whose names are lower down on the list.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I have been here for ten months, and I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I am not a 3 o'clock arrival.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The same case here, exactly; but I know there are members who will come in later in the day and ask the same thing.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if this is his own bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. It is not.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then I do not think it is fair to those of us who are lower down on the list to have bills taken up in this manner, and I object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I wish to submit a question to the Chair. There are some bills on the Calendar which embrace a number of claims, represented by as many different members of the House, what may be called "omnibus" bills. I would like to know if under this order these bills may be called up?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has heretofore stated that any member, when his name is called, has the right to call up any bill on the Calendar except pension bills, which are excluded, the evening session being set apart for their consideration. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to recognition.

DAVID RYAN.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. I call up the bill (H. R. 8356) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of David Ryan against the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of David Ryan, of Alton, Ill., against the United States, for extra work, if any, done by him for the United States upon the national cemetery road at Springfield, Mo., and to render judgment thereon as in other cases, with right of appeal to each party to the Supreme Court.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to inquire if this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois himself?

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. It was.

Mr. STRUBLE. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that any gentleman has the right to call up any bill he desires on the Calendar, and the order does not confine him to bills introduced by himself.

There being no objection, this bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. During the last Congress I reported this bill from the Committee on Claims, and unless gentlemen desire a further explanation, I will say briefly that it involves a small amount and only allows this gentleman to go to the Court of Claims to have it adjudicated.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois the same question that was asked by the gentleman from Minnesota a few moments ago. Is this your bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. No; it belongs to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. JACKSON. Does it repeal the statute of limitations?

Mr. SPRINGER. No; it does not. It relates to work done by this gentleman in constructing a road to one of the national cemeteries.

Mr. JACKSON. But does it come within the terms of the statute?

Mr. SPRINGER. The statute has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. JACKSON. Would the statute bar the claim without the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. No. The court has no jurisdiction of the claim. This simply gives it jurisdiction.

Mr. COBB. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama demands the reading of the report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes; what is it?

Mr. SPRINGER. It simply allows him to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. COBB. I am informed as to the contents of the report by the gentleman from Illinois, and shall not insist upon the reading.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have been in the Hall all morning, but did not happen to hear my name when it was called. I now ask unanimous consent that I may have the right to call up a bill for consideration.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman the same question which has been propounded to other gentlemen this morning, if this bill he now desires to call up is one from his own district? If it is not, and belongs to somebody else, I shall object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. It is not my bill.

Mr. BLAND. Then I do not think it is fair to other members.

Mr. STRUBLE. I object.

WILLIAM B. PAYNE.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Then I offer a bill of my own. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7634) for the relief of William B. Payne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $7,805 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to pay the account of William B. Payne, of Virginia, Cass County, Illinois.

for merchandise and mules furnished in July, September, October, and December, 1861, and November, 1862, to the Tenth Regiment Kansas Volunteers, and other United States soldiers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report in that case be read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7634) for the relief of William B. Bayne, submit the following report:

In the spring of 1861 Mr. Payne began merchandising at Harrisonville, Cass County, Missouri. The original cost of his stock was $9,800. About the 25th of July of that year Federal troops under command of Col. William Weir, consisting of two regiments of Reserve Corps, or Home Guards, under R. T. Vanhorn and A. H. Deane, respectively, two companies of the Fifth Kansas Volunteers, and one independent company, under the command of Capt. C. R. Jemison, were in camp near Harrisonville. A portion of these troops had never been supplied with clothing, shoes, blankets, or anything, by United States.

These troops went into the town and took from the store of Mr. Payne several wagon loads of clothing, boots, shoes, hats, and blankets, and hauled them to camp, when they were distributed among the needy soldiers.

Mr. Payne was recognized as a loyal man then, and his store was protected by a guard of Union soldiers, and he was informed that the Government would pay him for these goods.

In September of the same year Federal soldiers, under the command of Col. John T. Burris, of the Tenth Kansas Volunteers, took from the pasture three valuable mules for the use of the company.

In October of the same year Federal soldiers, under the command of Col. A. Newgent, took a large supply of boots, shoes, clothing, blankets, hats, and caps.

In December, Federal troops, under the command of Col. C. R. Jamison, but acting under the immediate authority of Lieut. Col. D. R. Anthony, took about all that remained of the stock of goods of Mr. Payne, and, in addition, one horse, three cows, and a lot of hay and corn.

The above facts are well established by documentary evidence from quite a number of people, including that of other merchants at the same place, who were there and personally knew the facts; by citizens who were living at Harrisonville at the time, and by some of the soldiers and officers, including Col. A. G. Newgent, one of the officers in command, and E. F. Rogers, who was quartermaster of one of the regiments above mentioned that took the goods. Mr. Rogers was detailed to guard Payne's store while the troops were stationed at Harrisonville. Mr. Payne, by his itemized bill, values the property taken at $7,805, while the other witnesses estimate the value variously from $6,000 to $9,000.

All the witnesses positively assert that Mr. Payne was loyal to the United States at all times.

Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amount named in the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Seven thousand eight hundred and five dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. A single word——

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is whether there is objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention to the fact that the claim was cognizable, under what is known as the 4th of July law, by the Quartermaster-General, and I would like to inquire whether this party sought to have the claim adjudicated under that law?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. He did not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose, then, it was a case of spoliation rather than the appropriation of property for the use of the Army.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. The officers were there at the time in charge, and it was taken in regular order and made a note of. They made a note of what they did take at the time.

Mr. ROGERS. What do you mean by regular order in that connection?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. They simply went and took the goods. It was not stray soldiers, but a squad that was sent there for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. COBB. I believe I will not object; but I will oppose it when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. We will take a vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask all gentlemen who object to this bill to rise.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I did not understand that the rule that five objections would be necessary to prevent consideration was really adopted. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] objected at the time it was offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] objected to the adoption of the rule and afterwards withdrew his objection.

Mr. BLAND. And the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] also objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule adopted, it requires five objections to prevent the consideration of a bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If no objection be made, the bill is still before the House for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. COBB. Right there I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COBB. If I fail to object to the consideration of this bill, is it not still debatable on the merits?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly it is debatable on the merits, but not on the objection. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. CRISP. I object for one.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). Seven gentlemen have risen to object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask to withdraw that bill and present the bill (H. R. 8469) for the relief of Michael Pigott, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw this bill and requests consideration of another bill.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if it is his own bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that without contrary direction by the committee hereafter he will not recognize gentlemen to call up two bills.

Mr. LANHAM. I think gentlemen ought to elect what bill they will bring up, and if that fails they ought not to be permitted to call up another.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that would be but fair.

MICHAEL PIGOTT.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 8469) for the relief of Michael Pigott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Michael Pigott, late postmaster at Quincy, Ill., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18, paid by said Pigott for use of telephone for year ending June 30, 1873.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $17,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Dr. John B. Read his compensation as royalty on all rifle projectiles with iron sabots furnished by R. P. Parrott to the United States during the war of 1861 to 1865; said sum of $17,000 to be received by said John B. Read as royalty upon all such projectiles so furnished to the United States and in full satisfaction of his claim.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. ROGERS. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] asks that the report be read, subject to the right of objection.

The report (by Mr. SIMMONS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10491) for the relief of John B. Read, submit the following report:

In the year 1856, when rifled ordnance of large caliber did not exist in the United States or in any country, Dr. John B. Read secured a patent, dated October 28, 1856, for an elongated rifle projectile, with a wrought-iron cup or sabot at the base, for expansion into rifle grooves, so as to secure rotation. Early in the same year he had experimented, at Fortress Monroe, with a two-grooved 24-pounder rifle gun, with such favorable results as to secure a contract with the Secretary of War that, on condition of his assigning the free use forever of such projectiles to the United States, he should receive such compensation, in case of adoption, as a board of Army officers, to be appointed for the purpose, might decide to be just. A joint resolution was passed the present session of Congress, authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint such a board; which, after careful investigation of the case, made its report to the Secretary of War, and was by him transmitted to Congress on the 4th instant.

These projectiles were extensively used at the outset of the war, and were furnished the United States by R. P. Parrott from West Point Foundry, with iron sabots, according to Dr. Read's patent.

The board of officers decides that Dr. Read "has a just claim for a reasonable royalty upon those projectiles furnished to the United States by R. P. Parrott, which were covered by his (Read's) patent of October 28, 1856; and that the sum of $17,000 is the proper amount to be paid by the United States to Dr. Read, in full satisfaction of his claim."

Your committee therefore recommend that the substitute for the original bill herewith submitted do pass.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. ROGERS said: I understand two Army boards have reported on this matter, and I withdraw the request for the reading of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report had better be read, and I will renew the request.

The reading of the report was concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

S. E. SCARBOROUGH.

Mr. BARNES. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 2059) for the relief of S. E. Scarborough.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we ought to have a quorum on that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to S. E. Scarborough, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $91.08, that being the amount of money illegally collected of him by the United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $91.08 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated from the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Treasury to pay said claim.

Mr. SPRINGER. In view of the fact that this bill is for less than $100, and that it would cost less than the expense of getting a quorum, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BARNES. I am obliged to the gentleman for his wit.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NICHOLAS J. BIGLEY.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask consideration of Senate bill 3074 for the relief of Nicholas J. Bigley. It is a substitute for the one on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done by the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman can call up the House bill and when we get into the House he can ask to substitute it; but it is impossible to take up in committee a bill that is on the Speaker's table.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Nicholas J. Bigley, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $42,611.50, being for four barges sunk and destroyed, worth $1,600 each, and 70,638 bushels of coal of the value of $21,211.50, and the value of the tow-boat Hercules, $15,000, as found by the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. COBB. Let us have the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would state that this bill was reported on adversely in the Forty-fourth Congress, and I object to the consideration of the bill. The reports are very lengthy.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like unanimous consent to make a brief statement. The Committee on War Claims of the House reported a bill for the relief of Captain Bigley, putting the amount somewhere in the neighborhood of $40,000, for coal delivered and accepted by the United States, and also for the value of the steamer which was burned at Memphis, where this coal was delivered. The Senate cut this down to $21,000, eliminating the value of the steamer Hercules, but allowed for the value of the coal. That coal was delivered by Mr. Bigley to the Government of the United States, and he is entitled to be paid for it. The bill was reported unanimously, I believe, from the Committee on War Claims of the House for the entire amount, but the Senate, as I have said, cut it down.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the announcement of the result of the vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a correction in my own statement. I think this matter was reported adversely in the Forty-fourth Congress. It may be that the adverse report was a minority report; I will not be positive about that; but I know the subject was fully discussed, and I examined every paper in the case over and over again.

Mr. BAYNE. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on War Claims whether this bill was not reported unanimously?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It was a unanimous report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am speaking about the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. BAYNE. We have nothing to do with the Forty-fourth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Eleven gentlemen have objected to the consideration of this bill, and it is not before the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. Eleven gentlemen have objected to paying this honest debt of the Government! I hope they pay their own debts. [Laughter.]

SEMON BACHE & CO.

Mr. BELDEN. I call up the bill (S. 576) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Semon Bache & Co., of New York, the sum of $3,562.56, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of refunding the duty paid by said firm upon glass from imported stock furnished to the National Museum and the New Orleans, Louisville, and Cincinnati expositions for exhibition cases.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, during the last Congress I had the honor to report this bill from the Committee on Claims. The claimants are citizens of the State of New York, and the claim is for a refund of the duty paid upon glass which was imported for the use of the Smithsonian Institution and for the New Orleans, Cincinnati, and Louisville expositions. The glass was used by the Government for making show-cases in the Smithsonian and for those expositions. Professor Baird certified the claim to the Treasury Department for a refund, and the Department put it in the estimates and sent it to Congress. The Committee on Appropriations, however, had the matter referred to the Committee on Claims, under the new rule requiring such reference, and I reported the bill from that committee. The Treasury Department regards the claim as a proper one to be paid, and, as I have said, Professor Baird certified that the importation was made by his order for the use of the Government, and with the expectation that the duties were to be refunded.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. PRESTON BECK, JR.

Mr. BLAND. I call up the bill (H. R. 4554) for the relief of the heirs of Preston Beck, jr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $6,565 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the estate of Preston Beck, jr.; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to pay the same to the heirs of said Preston Beck, jr., in conformity to the last will and testament of said Preston Beck, jr., executed at Santa Fé, N. Mex., on the 1st day of April, A. D. 1864.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read. My object in calling for the reading of the report is to ascertain when the judgment was rendered, for it seems to me almost incredible that a judgment of the Court of Claims should have remained unpaid all these years.

Mr. BLAND. No doubt it ought to have been paid years ago. A bill for the payment of it passed this House in the Forty-third Congress. Most of the claimants are in the gentleman's own State; there is only one of them in my district. This claim passed the House once; it has been reported here unanimously, and there is no question that it ought to be paid.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I investigated this case fully myself. It was originally referred to the Committee on Claims, but, for want of jurisdiction in that committee, it was afterwards referred to another, I believe to the Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not account for the fact that this judgment has remained unpaid all these years, when every year for the last twenty years we have been appropriating to pay judgments of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLAND. In this case the administrator of the estate died and another was appointed——

Mr. HOLMAN. Was not the judgment rendered before the war?

Mr. BLAND. I think not.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman from Indiana think that if this judgment has been paid the Treasury Department will pay it again?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not assuming that it was paid, but I am raising the question whether there was a judgment of the Court of Claims. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, to whom was referred House bill No. 4554, beg leave to report the same favorably and to recommend its passage.

This claim is based on the following opinion and judgment of the Court of Claims, to wit:

"IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

"J. Preston Beck, administrator, vs. The United States.

"LORING, J.:

"The petitioner is administrator de bonis non of Preston Beck, who was surviving partner of Brent & Beck, merchants, of Santa Fé, in the Territory of New Mexico. The petitioner claims indemnification by the United States for a herd of mules, etc., of which Brent & Beck were plundered by the Navajo Indians on the 12th of September, 1849, and the claim is made upon the statute of 30th June, 1834, as that is explained by the joint resolution of June 25, 1860.

"The facts shown are, that about the 12th of September, 1849, a band or herd of mules, mares, etc., belonging to Brent & Beck, were pastured by them under the charge of herdsmen on the plains or mesa in the county of Santa Fé, and about 12 miles from the city of Santa Fé; that a body of Navajo Indians seized them and drove them off into the Navajo country. That on the 29th of November, 1851, Brent & Beck made application to the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and filed with him their claim for indemnification for the animals stolen and the proofs of their loss, under and according to the seventeenth section of the statutes of 1834. The claim was not paid or allowed, and since it accrued no annuity has been granted to the Navajo Indians. The petitioner claims to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $8,710, with interest thereon from one year after filing his proof.

"The act of June 30, 1834 (4 U. S. L., 729, sec. 1), defines the Indian country, and the seventeenth section provides that if any Indians in amity with the United States shall pass from the Indian country into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there steal horses or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States, such citizen or inhabitant, or his representatives, may make application to the proper superintendent, who, being furnished with the necessary documents and proof, shall, under the direction of the President, make application to the nation or tribe to which the Indians shall belong for satisfaction; and on refusal or neglect of the Indians to make satisfaction for a reasonable time, not exceeding twelve months, the superintendent is to make return to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that such further steps may be taken as shall be proper, in the opinion of the President, to obtain satisfaction for the injury. 'And in the mean time, in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed, the United States guaranty to the party so injured an eventual indemnification.'

"The section then provides that the injured party shall not seek private satisfaction or revenge, and that his claim shall be deducted from the next annuity, if any, payable to the Indians; and, if none, then be paid from the United States Treasury.

"We think the claim of the petitioner is within this section.

"It is true that New Mexico was not comprehended within the Indian country, as was defined in the act of 1834, for New Mexico was not acquired by the United States until the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1849, when it became the property of the United States and subject to its jurisdiction.

"But after that, and on the 9th of September, 1849, a treaty was made between the United States and the nation of Navajoes, in which it was recited that by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo those Indians were placed under the exclusive jurisdiction and protection of the United States, and then provided that the laws regulating the trade and intercourse with the Indians should be extended over the Navajo country.

"We think the purpose and effect of this was to make the Navajo country Indian country.

"Then the treaty declares that 'perpetual peace and friendship' shall exist between the contracting parties, and we think this placed the Navajoes 'in amity' with the United States, and that this relation thus created between the nations could not be altered by the depredations of individuals of either of them, for which indeed the treaty provides.

"Thus the Navajoes committed the depredation when their tribe was in amity with the United States, and passed from the Indian country into a territory inhabited by the citizens of the United States, and this brings the claim of the petitioner within the seventeenth section of the act of 1834.

"That the mules and animals taken belonged to Brent & Beck is admitted in the brief of the solicitor, and we think, is shown by the evidence, pages 7, 8, 9. As to the number of animals taken at Montalla, says page 8, 'I think there was a hundred head;' Duval, who had charge of the herd, says, page 9, 'there were about eighty mules, sixteen mares, and a few horses, colts, and jackasses.' He thus enumerates ninety-eight animals, and a phrase, 'a few horses and colts,' taken, as it should be, at its least extent, adds three to the enumeration, making one hundred and one animals in all.

"Then, as to the average value of the animals. Duval and Estes state it at $75 per head. J. L. Collins, a deponent for the petitioner, says the general range of prices for mules that year was about $60 to $80, and the petitioners, in proof filed by them before the superintendent in support of their claim, and which they produce here, stated the value of the animals to be $65 per head, which we think the fair conclusion as to their value from the evidence; and one hundred and one animals, at $65 per head, give a total of $6,565.

"The petitioner claims interest on the ground that the seventeenth section of the act of 1834 provides for the party injured 'an eventual indemnification;' but by the express terms of the statute such eventual indemnification is to be 'in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed.'

"These words must have some meaning, or they would not have been used; and if any effect is allowed them, it must be restrictive, and then the whole sentence does not of its own force indicate more than the value of the property taken, etc., or create an obligation on the part of the United States to pay interest for the default or delay of the Indians in satisfying, or of the officers of the Government in enforcing, the claims of the parties injured.

"On the whole case we are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief in the sum of $6,565, for which a bill will be reported to Congress."

It will be observed that all the facts are alluded to in the opinion of the court, hence the committee has been relieved of the necessity of recapitulating them here.

A copy of the last will and testament of Preston Beck, jr., is hereto attached. The testator died soon after executing this will, and the estate has been administered upon and all debts paid, so that the allowance of the Court of Claims is due to the heirs in the manner provided by the will.

This committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT OF PRESTON BECK, JR.

Know all men by these presents, that I, Preston Beck, jr., a resident of the city and county of Santa Fé and Territory of New Mexico, having in view the uncertainty of life and the liability to sudden death, do judge it best to make, and accordingly do hereby make and declare this to be my last will and testament.

It is my will that all my just debts be paid and discharged as soon as conveniently my executor can pay and discharge them after my death, and I leave all the charge and manner of so doing to my executor hereinafter named.

My interests in business of the firm of S. and P. Beck, lately conducted at Boonville, Mo., and Lexington, Mo., is that of one-third only, and my interest in the business of S. and P. Beck, in the Territory of New Mexico, is that of two-thirds; and the said firm of S. and P. Beck, both in Missouri and New Mexico, was composed solely of my brother, Simpson Beck, deceased, and myself.

Before any division of the profits of the firm of S. and P. Beck, in the Territory of New Mexico, are made, as above stated in third parts, the estate of Simpson Beck is to have $5,000, and I am to have $5,000, which said sums of $5,000 are to be drawn out of each of us immediately after the debts of said firm are paid and before any division of the profits.

I give, devise, and dispose of my estate, real, personal, and of whatever description it may consist (except what shall be necessary to pay my just debts) in the following manner:

I will and devise that all my estate, real, personal, and of whatever description, shall be given to, received, and enjoyed by the following-named persons, share and share alike, that is to say, to my nephew, James P. Beck, and my niece, Elizabeth C. Beck (children of my brother, Lewis Beck), and my nephew, William P. Beck, and my nieces, Anna D. Beck and Elizabeth Beck (children of my brother, Simpson Beck), and my brother, John Jeffrey Beck, and my cousin, Preston H. Lee, and my nieces, Mary Ann Cracraft and Elizabeth Cracraft (children of my sister, Martha Beck), all taking share and share alike and enjoying the same without any dispute or difference after my just debts shall be paid.

I hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint John Jeffrey Beck to be sole executor of this my last will and testament, reposing in him every trust and confidence that he will execute it according to my intention and desire as herein expressed.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, and publish and declare this writing to be my last will and testament, at the city of Santa Fé, this 1s day of April, 1854.

PRESTON BECK, JR. [SEAL.]

Signed, sealed, published, and declared by the said Preston Beck as his last will and testament in presence of us, who have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses thereof, at the request of the testator and in the presence of the testator and in the presence of each other; and the testator acts with freeness of will, soundness of mind, and entire judgment.

Recorded by me in accordance with an order of the probate court given on the 9th day of April, A. D. 1858.

C. P. CLEVER, Probate Clerk.

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO,
County of Santa Fé:

I, the undersigned, clerk of the probate court and ex officio recorder in and for the county and Territory aforesaid, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the last will and testament of Preston Beck, jr., as appears of record in book "C" of wills and testaments, pages 59 and 60.

Witness my hand and official seal at Santa Fé, N. Mex., this 11th day of November, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.]

MARCELINO GARCIA,
Probate Clerk and Recorder, Santa Fé County, New Mexico.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be seen that the judgment is not a judgment against the United States. It is simply a judgment under the act of 1834, and it is a claim against the funds of the Navajo Indians, the annuities that may hereafter accrue to them; but no such annuities have accrued, and therefore this claim has not been paid. Now it is proposed to pay this claim for an Indian depredation out of the public Treasury. Gentlemen are aware that under the act of 1834, where moneys were held by the United States for the benefit of any Indian tribe, and that tribe committed depredations, the amount of the damage sustained by the citizen might be deducted from the annuity coming to the Indians; but I do not understand that it has ever been held that in such a case the Government of the United States is liable to pay the damage out of the public Treasury.

Why is not the Government of the United States a guarantor of the protection of citizens everywhere against unlawful depredations, if there is such a guaranty with reference to Indian depredations? I do not think the principle involved here is a sound one. I can not myself vote for the payment of this money out of the public Treasury. If the Navajoes have lands or money the Government should see to it that their lands or money shall be applied to the payment of this claim; but I see no principle by which we can take the money out of the public Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know whether the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] admits the facts as claimed by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLAND. I have always understood that this was a judgment against the United States. The gentleman from Indiana has stopped the reading of the opinion; I hope the reading may be concluded, so that the effect of the opinion may be understood.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. BLAND. As I understand, there were at that time funds to pay these claims, and the judgment was rendered for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will continue the reading of the report, at the conclusion of which the Chair will again ask if there is objection to the consideration of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

Mr. BLAND. That is the unanimous report of a committee of this House which investigated the whole question as to the liability of the Government. A committee of the Forty-third Congress, which also investigated the matter, made a unanimous report in favor of paying this claim, and a bill for that purpose passed the House. The gentleman from Indiana gets up here and makes his statement as to the effect of the law of the United States, and all that; but there is nothing in his statement which should weigh against the unanimous report of two committees and the favorable action heretofore of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. In answer to the gentleman, I desire to say that if this opinion was delivered, it must have been delivered prior to 1862, because since that time it would have been simply a judgment against the United States and would have been appropriated for in the regular way. The Court of Claims as originally organized, I believe in 1852 or 1853, had the same jurisdiction substantially with reference to the ascertainment of facts that the court now has under what is called the Bowman act; and under that state of the law the court simply reported the facts to Congress. I shall have to examine that opinion much more closely than I can do from the mere reading if I come to the conclusion that this is in any sense a judgment against the United States. As I understand, it is simply a judgment that out of the funds which may become due by annuities or otherwise to the Navajoes this sum of money shall be paid. I do not believe that the Court of Claims or any other tribunal has held that the Government of the United States is liable in money for depredations committed by the Indians.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Indiana will allow me to call his attention to this passage from the report:

The section—

That is, the section of the act of 1834—

then provides that the injured party shall not seek private satisfaction or revenge, and that his claim shall be deducted from the next annuity, if any, payable to the Indians; and if none, then be paid from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLAND. There is no question that this claim is legitimate, and that the Government is liable for it. The gentleman from Indiana is wholly mistaken as to the theory on which the claim is based.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to look at the act of 1834. If the gentleman thinks proper to allow this case, by unanimous consent, to be passed over——

Mr. BLAND. I will not do that, Mr. Chairman; it would be unfair to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I object for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. All who object to the consideration of this bill will rise. [A pause.] Two gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number. The bill is before the Committee of the Whole for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a vote.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House,

The CHAIRMAN said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The question being again taken; there were—ayes 46, noes 1.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not make that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a single word. I have not seen the act of 1834; but if that act sustains the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and this report, I will withdraw opposition to the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BLAND. I have this to say to the gentleman from Indiana. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"] If this bill goes to the Senate and the gentleman can establish there the facts which he claims, all right; but to let this bill be held back for days and days——

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not asking that; I am simply asking that it be passed over until the next bill shall be considered.

Mr. BLAND. I object to that. The gentleman is not acting justly toward this bill, or toward the parties interested, or toward my self. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I hope this matter will be compromised in some way. I understand the gentleman from Indiana is entirely willing to let this bill go to the House with the understanding that if the act of 1834 is as he claims it to be a quorum shall be required to pass the bill in the House. With this understanding business can go on.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have only asked that the next bill be called up and disposed of; and I say that in the mean time I will look into this law, and if it is as stated by the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman can have time for that examination until the bill is reported to the House to-day. When the bill comes up in the House he will have the right to object and make his point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Indiana that if the bill be now laid aside to be favorably reported, the gentleman will have the right to oppose the bill in the House and demand the vote of a quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that; but the proposition I have made is a fair one, and I ask that it may be complied with.

Mr. BLAND. I prefer that the bill shall go into the House, and then the gentleman will have plenty of time to fight it there if he desires to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. My request is that this bill be passed over informally until another bill is considered, and in the mean time I will look into the law.

Mr. BLAND. I object. The gentleman can have a vote in the House if he wants it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have made a very reasonable proposition, which I think ought to be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places, the point of no quorum being made.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to make a suggestion to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. To save time I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection being withdrawn, this bill will be laid aside informally until the next case is disposed of.

W. S. BRANTLY.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3469) providing for the payment of $450 to W. S. Brantly, executor of J. H. Brantly, for damages to property by United States troops in 1865.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $450 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to pay William S. Brantly, executor of J. H. Brantly, for property of J. H. Brantly destroyed by the Second Brigade, First Division Cavalry, and the corps wagon train, the value of which was ascertained by a board of survey, in pursuance of special order.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BURNES having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 10679) to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate returned to the House, at its request, the bill (S. 1983) granting a pension to H. R. Blakiston; and also returned to the House a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. HARRIS managers on the part of the Senate.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

JOHN M. HIGGINS.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 520) for the relief of John M. Higgins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and hereby are, directed to audit and pay to John M. Higgins, late a lieutenant of Company A, Thirty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, his accounts against the Government the same as if he had never been court-martialed and dismissed the service but had been honorably discharged therefrom.

Mr. COBB. Let the report in that case be read.

The report (by Mr. CROUSE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 520) for the relief of John M. Higgins, report the same back, after due consideration thereof, with the recommendation that it do pass; and in support of this action hereby adopt and make part hereof, as containing the facts in the case, the report of the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress, which is as follows:

"[House Report No. 1131, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

"That the bill authorizes and directs the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to audit and pay to John M. Higgins, late a lieutenant of Company A, Thirty-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, his accounts against the Government, the same as if he had never been court-martialed and dismissed the service, but had been honorably discharged therefrom.

"It appears from the proof submitted that this officer was mustered into service as second lieutenant, Company A, Thirty-third Ohio Volunteers, August 27, 1861, and is reported promoted to first lieutenant, same company and regiment, May 6, 1862, that he was tried by general court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed the service for absence without leave, with loss of all pay and allowances, which sentence was promulgated in General Orders, No. 86, April 20, 1863, Department of the Cumberland; that application was made to the War Department in 1871 for such relief as could be granted in the case, and thereupon, by direction of the President, the disability resulting from the dismissal was removed January 25, 1871.

"The removal of the disability consequent upon the sentence did not operate to restore to Lieutenant Higgins the pay forfeited by the dismissal, but simply declared him qualified to re-enter the service in the future.

"In speaking of the case of Lieutenant Higgins, his colonel, Col. Oscar F. Moore, of the Thirty-third Ohio Volunteers, in a letter now on file in the War Department, says:

"'Lieutenant Higgins, prior to the battle of Perryville, had been a gallant, faithful officer, and in that fight was wounded and came home. While at home he kept up a correspondence with the second lieutenant of his company, with whom he had been on friendly and very intimate terms. This correspondence was not very chaste. * * * Lieutenant Higgins was quite young and thoughtless, and having confidence in the party with whom he was corresponding that his letters would not be exhibited, he wrote, as he says, with the utmost freedom, and in such style as to make him ashamed of himself now. The party, desiring to secure his place, betrayed him, and upon the strength of these letters charges were preferred and the trial and conviction followed. The party who thus betrayed his companion and availed himself of the letters written in confidence to obtain the dismissal of Higgins in order to secure his place turned out badly, and in the battle of Mission Ridge acted so cowardly that he was put under arrest and would have been dismissed in disgrace, but was permitted by General Carlin to resign and go home. The letters written by Lieutenant Higgins, and on account of which he was dismissed the service, were no doubt in very bad taste, * * * and very unbecoming an officer; but his youth and the fact that they were written in confidence, and that confidence was betrayed from selfish motives, afford at least some excuse for the act. He served the Government faithfully up to the time he was wounded at Perryville, and is, I think, at least entitled to his pay.'"

"This letter was written February 11, 1867. Lieutenant Higgins was not twenty years old when the occurrences upon which the charges against him were based took place.

"The disabilities imposed by his sentence—the substantial part—having been removed, it seems to your committee that the Government ought not to retain the pay earned by faithful and gallant services. It is submitted that the nature of the offense and the severity of the sentence are such as appeal, certainly after this lapse of time, to the sense of justice in any impartial tribunal.

"Your committee, therefore, in view of the foregoing statement of facts, report in favor of the passage of the bill."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to inquire up to what time this pay is to be allowed?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Up to the time of his dismissal.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILGORE. I give notice to the friends of this measure on the other side that I will appeal from the objection here to the point of no quorum on this bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion in this connection?

Mr. KILGORE. It is simply a waste of time.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I think if the gentleman would hear a short explanation of the case he would not object.

Mr. KILGORE. I listened to the reading of the report and listened carefully, and made up my mind upon the facts therein alleged.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. This is a case with which I am thoroughly familiar. This young man lives in my town, and I am convinced that the gentleman when he knows the facts, which are but briefly stated in the report, will not insist on his objection.

Mr. KILGORE. I take the report on its face and must conclude that there is not sufficient merit to put the case through this House without a quorum.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. The gentleman, perhaps, has not observed that every disability incurred by this officer was removed, but that the removal did not restore to him the money which he had earned by faithful and gallant services, which money is still held by the Government. This bill simply restores him that money. The Government is placed in the attitude of holding on to a little sum earned by the gallant and faithful services of this man, services which are certified to by his colonel, who states that he served gallantly and was wounded in battle, but afterwards, unfortunately, he fell into bad company, and the result of some imprudences on his part was the court-martial which dismissed him from the service and withheld from him the pay that he had earned up to that time. I repeat that every single disqualification and disability has been removed by President Grant. This was a mere boy, not exceeding twenty years of age, and I hope we will not insist on holding on to the little bit of money earned by his services in battle. The disabilities and the substantial part of the sentence were removed after a full hearing of the case by President Grant years ago when the matters were fresh in the minds of the witnesses.

Mr. PERKINS. I would ask unanimous consent, in view of the objection of the gentleman from Texas, that this bill be laid aside temporarily, to be called up again some time during the course of the day, if the gentleman from Texas, on an examination, is willing to withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

NORFOLK COUNTY FERRY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BOWDEN. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5517) for the relief of the Norfolk County Ferry Committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Norfolk County Ferry Committee, of Norfolk, Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $42,300, that being the amount collected by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army as tolls and ferriages for the transportation of civilians, their animals and freights, for three years and eleven months, excepting eight days, beyond the current expenses and repairs of said ferry as found by the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROWELL. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I wish to state that if this bill comes up I shall desire to be heard to discuss it. I would not object to the consideration of the bill except that it is going to stand in the way of others, as I do not object to consideration as a rule.

Mr. ROWELL. I object because the report in the Department shows that the Government spent more money than it got.

Mr. BOWDEN. If the gentleman will permit the report to be read it will show no such state of facts, but will show, on the contrary, that during a part of this time the Government collected a larger rate than that allowed by the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. The bill that I called up was passed over informally to be taken up again. Now, I would like to know if the gentleman from Indiana has made an examination which will satisfy him, as it is unfair to me and to the bill to defeat it in any indirect way.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is to determine the disposition to be made of the bill called up by the gentleman from Virginia. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Objection was made.

ALBEMARLE AND CHESAPEAKE CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. BOWDEN. I believe, Mr. Chairman, it is my privilege to call up another bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The present occupant of the chair does not know whether the gentleman would be entitled to do so or not.

Mr. BOWDEN. I asked the Chair at the beginning, when I asked the consideration of this other bill, if there was objection, whether a member would be entitled to call up another bill; and it was conceded that he would.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the Chair will carry out that agreement.

Mr. BOWDEN. Then I call up the bill (H. R. 7799) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the claim of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company, it being for tolls on vessels transporting naval supplies, and to award such sum as he may find equitably due, not to exceed the sum of $3,742.20; said award being in full payment of all claims of said company against the Government, and for the payment of whatever sum the Secretary may award, as aforesaid, appropriation is hereby made, out of the Treasury, payable out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KILGORE. Do I understand that bill refers the matter to the Secretary of the Navy to be adjudicated?

Mr. BOWDEN. It refers it to the Secretary of the Navy for investigation and award of an appropriate amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PRESTON BECK, JR.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to dispose of the bill (H. R. 4554) for the relief of the heirs of Preston Beck, jr., which was laid aside informally.

Mr. HOLMAN. The court passed upon that under the old system, which only authorized them to find the facts. I find on an examination that the act of 1834 is somewhat modified by the act of 1860. If the act of 1834 alone stood, I should still insist on my objection, but under the present law as I find it I shall only ask for a vote.

Mr. BLAND. We have had a vote upon it already.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is now properly before the committee.

Mr. BLAND. It was before the committee and a vote taken, and then it was laid aside informally.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was laid over informally, and is now before the House properly.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

A. J. M'CREARY.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 7924) for the relief of A. J. McCreary, administrator of the estate of J. M. Hiatt, deceased, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas in the year 1878 the Osage Indians were in a state of destitution and suffering for the actual necessaries of life owing to the inadequacy of the appropriation for them by Congress out of their fund, and said tribe, by nearly if not quite all the chief councilors and headmen of said Osage tribe of Indians, appealed to the then Indian traders, J. M. Hiatt & Co., at the Osage agency (Pahuskey), Indian Territory, to extend to the Osages a credit of from eight to ten dollars per capita, promising payment out of their next annuity, which it was supposed would be ample for that purpose, which appeal was supported and the credit approved by Cyrus Beede, the then United States agent for the Osage Indians, as a matter of actual necessity; and

Whereas the said firm of J. M. Hiatt & Co., pursuant to said appeal, and relying thereon, did extend to said Osage Indians a credit, aggregating the sum of $16,759.99, keeping a careful, just, and true itemized account of all goods sold to each head of a family and individual, said goods being sold under supervision and advice of Paul Akin, United States interpreter, Governor Joe, Sam Bevenue, chief of the half-breeds, and other chiefs and headmen, who were fully and freely consulted as to who were proper persons to receive credit and the amount thereof; and every precaution was taken to have the credit fairly distributed to all the members of the tribe. But the next annuity, instead of being $15 per capita, as had been expected, was reduced to little over $3 per capita, so that the payment of said amount of credit so extended was rendered impossible, and before the subsequent annuities were made sufficient for its payment, the Indian agent, Cyrus Beede, was superseded by an agent who, for unknown reason, resisted and defeated the payment of said credit out of the same; and

Whereas, afterward, in the summer of 1880, said account was settled and adjusted as to items and amount, after a long and careful examination thereof by the governor and head chiefs constituting the business committee of said tribe of Osage Indians, and there was thereby found to be due the said firm of J. M. Hiatt & Co. the sum of $16,759.99, and said governor and head chief requested the Secretary of the Interior to pay the same; and

Whereas by an act of the Forty-ninth Congress, approved July 14, 1886, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to pay to J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of said J. M. Hiatt & Co., late traders for the Osage tribe of Indians, out of any money in the Treasury accruing to the Osage tribe of Indians under an act of Congress approved June 16, 1880, the said sum of $16,759.99, or so much thereof as may be found actually due the claimant; and after an investigation of the facts the Secretary of the Interior, without having any valid evidence affecting or impairing the justness or correctness of said accounts and the amount due thereon, declined to certify any greater sum than $8,380, leaving still justly due the sum of $8,380, and said J. M. Hiatt has since died and A. J. McCreary has been appointed his administrator: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to said A. J. McCreary, administrator of the estate of said J. M. Hiatt, survivor of said J. M. Hiatt & Co., late traders for the Osage tribe of Indians, out of any money in the Treasury accruing to said tribe of Indians by act of Congress, approved June 16, 1880, the balance of said account, namely, the sum of $8,380, in full satisfaction of said demand against the said Osage tribe of Indians, on said credit extended to them as aforesaid.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. PERKINS. The report is very voluminous. The matter has been very carefully considered by the committee.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Have the committee reported in favor of the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. The committee have unanimously reported in favor of the bill, and I ask, for the information of the gentleman from Indiana and the House generally, that a single statement from the chief of the Indians be read, which is incorporated in the report, as the report is very voluminous.

The Clerk read as follows:

OSAGE AGENCY, INDIAN TERRITORY, August 20, 1880.

Hon. COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS:

SIR: The governor of the Osages and a number of the chiefs have directed or petitioned the honorable Secretary of the Interior to pay a claim of $16,759.99, due to Hiatt & Co. from said tribe.

As chief of the half-breed band, and having a better knowledge, perhaps, of the origin and character of said claim than any other chief, I unite with them in earnestly asking that the claim be promptly paid, as requested. The Indians and others were led to believe that the payment of about $15 per head in January, 1878, would be continued at substantially that sum. In that belief I advised H. & Co. to give the Osages a credit for half the sum, knowing that it would greatly accommodate the Indians, and believing it would be entirely safe; but the consequent payment and later ones, instead of $15, have been but little over $3 per head. Their present needs absorbed this small sum at once, so there has been no time at which it was possible to pay a debt made in good faith, and of which they reaped the full benefit. Knowing their ability to pay their debts, and grateful for the accommodation, the honor and self-respect of the Osages is concerned in the quick and full discharge of the debt.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL BEIVNEW,
Head Chief of Half-Breed Band.

Witness:
J. H. TISDALE.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BENJAMIN F. RICHARDSON.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 8276) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin F. Richardson.

Mr. CRAIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether that bill is one that he has introduced or whether it was submitted to him by some gentleman whose name comes lower in the list.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I introduced the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Quartermaster-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to examine the claim of the estate of Benjamin F. Richardson, deceased, late of Jefferson County, Arkansas, for stores and supplies belonging to said Richardson alleged to have been taken by the United States, or the armies thereof, in Jefferson County in the State of Arkansas during the war of the rebellion; and he may consider the evidence heretofore taken on said claim, so far as applicable, and such other legal evidence as may be adduced before him in behalf of the claimant or in behalf of the United States, and shall report the facts to Congress, to be considered with other claims reported by the Quartermaster-General.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY IN CYNTHIANA, KY.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 8640) to direct the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to ascertain and report the facts concerning the destruction of property at Cynthiana, Ky., on July 17, 1862.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a commission, to consist of three officers of the Army, to ascertain and report the facts concerning the destruction of property at the battle at Cynthiana, Ky., on July 17, 1862, between the forces of the United States under the command of Colonel Landrum and the Confederate forces under General John H. Morgan, and the value of the property there destroyed, ascertaining the names of the owners thereof, the value, and description thereof, which report the said Secretary of War will transmit to Congress as early as practicable.

Mr. McCULLOGH. I would ask the gentleman from Kentucky the object of the bill; and reserve the right to object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The object of the bill is simply to enable the Secretary of War to appoint a commission who shall ascertain the facts.

Mr. McCULLOGH. Was it for destruction of property caused by two forces at war? The ultimate object is what I ask.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The ultimate object is that if the commission reports there ought to be any award the amount would be reported for appropriation by Congress.

Mr. McCULLOGH. Was the destruction caused by two opposing forces in a state of war?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The facts, so far as I understand them, are that in the town of Cynthiana, in the State of Kentucky, during a battle in the streets of the town, there was a destruction of property——

Mr. McCULLOGH. The object that I have in rising is to inquire whether this damage was done in an act of war, between two opposing forces at the time at war. We have the same case at Gettysburgh, in Pennsylvania, where opposing forces were in actual war, which the House has refused to recognize.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This is for the purpose of having the facts ascertained, so that if it does not come within any proper rule nothing further is heard of it. I desire to amend the bill by changing the names and the date. I desire to strike out lines 6 to 9, "July 17, 1862, between the forces of the United States under the command of Colonel Landrum," and insert "on July 11, 1864, between the forces of the United States under the command of Col. Conrad Jervis."

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire to oppose this bill, but ask how is the expense to be incurred in this matter provided for?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There will be no expense, because the officers of the Army are employed now.

Mr. SPRINGER. Unless there be an appropriation the bill can not be executed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The Secretary of War says it can, and that is the form of bill recommended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN F. ALSUP.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I call up the bill (H. R. 3494) for the relief of John F. Alsup.

Mr. CRAIN. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana whether that bill was introduced by himself?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. No, sir; it was not.

Mr. CRAIN. Was it handed to you by a member lower down on the list, to be called up when your name should be reached?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask to have read the order of the House in regard to the presentation of bills for consideration to-day.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The present occupant was not in the chair when the order was made, but he can state his understanding of the order, which was that when the name of a member was called by the Clerk he should have the right to call up any bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CRAIN. I will ask whether it was not the intention that that should apply only to bills in which the member himself was interested?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAIN. I am asking for information from the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the Chair can not say what was the intention of the House, but the present occupant of the chair would not hold——

Mr. CRAIN. I had not finished my inquiry, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that it is unjust to members of this committee that gentlemen whose names happen to be far down on the list should therefore have the opportunity to present two bills for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I, too, think that would be unfair, and it will not be done in this case.

Mr. CRAIN. What is done in this case, however, gives precedence to this bill over others, for example over a bill which I may desire to call up for consideration but which may not be considered at all to-day owing to want of time, and therefore it is unjust. I understand the spirit of this order to be that each member as his name is called shall have an opportunity to present a bill in which he is interested, and if he has no bill it is just and right that he should not respond; because if the rule of procedure adopted by the gentleman from Indiana is to be followed by every gentleman whose name is called, then some members will have an opportunity to present two bills each for consideration in case their names are called to-day; or, if that does not result, at least gentlemen whose names precede them, and who have priority on the list by reason of their names happening to commence with letters earlier in the alphabet will fail to be reached and their bills will be left behind.

I do not think it is the intention of the House, or of the committee, as the case may be, that gentlemen should be permitted to take bills from members whose names come later than theirs in the list and present them to the committee for consideration to the disadvantage of other bills. I give notice now that in every case I shall object to the consideration of bills brought up in that way, and I begin by objecting to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Well, that is something that may be done by one gentleman as well as by another.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. CRAIN alone objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Not a sufficient number, and the bill is before the House for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John F. Alsup, late first sergeant of Company B, Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, of Leroy, Ill., be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the full pay and allowances of the captain of said Company B for the period of five months, he having acted as captain of the company for that length of time, less any pay received by him as sergeant.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

H. L. NEWMAN.

Mr. BUNNELL. I call up the bill (H. R. 766) for the relief of H. L. Newman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money that may hereafter be appropriated for the use and benefit of the Arapaho and Kiowa Indians, to H. L. Newman the sum of $3,450, which sum shall be in full satisfaction for claims against said Indians for property destroyed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ST. JOSEPH COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Mr. BURNES. I call up House bill 5426.

Mr. CRAIN. I will ask the gentleman the same question that I asked the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURNES. The answer is that this is my own bill. It is a St. Jo. bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid to the trustees of St. Joseph Commercial College, in the city of St. Joseph, State of Missouri, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000, in full compensation for the use and occupation of said college and the land thereunto appurtenant during the late war by the United States troops and for damage to the same by said troops.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred House bill 5426, being a bill for the relief of St. Joseph Commercial College, of St. Joseph, Mo., respectfully report as follows:

In the year 1861 the Christian Brothers College of St. Joseph, now known by the name of the St. Joseph Commercial College, was erected and completed at a cost of $15,000 for school and educational purposes. From the year 1861 until near the close of the war, in 1865, said college and its grounds were under the control and in the occupancy and possession of various commands of United States troops.

The actual occupancy was not continuous during the whole time, but was at intervals, having the effect necessarily of preventing the owners of the property from using or enjoying it for the purposes for which it was constructed or held by them. Sometimes it was occupied by infantry and sometimes by cavalry, and when occupied by the latter class of troops their horses were stabled in the college basement. The floors (except a part of the floor in the fourth story), the doors, windows, and window-sashes, and glass were wholly, or nearly wholly, destroyed.

At one time during the war when the college buildings were for a few months unoccupied by soldiers, the owners, hoping such occupancy was at an end, proceeded, with the aid of the community, and repaired the buildings and grounds with a view to the opening of the college for the reception of students; but such repairs were but little more than finished when other troops of the United States needing quarters came and retook possession of said buildings so repaired, and occupied them until the condition of the property was made worse by such occupancy than it was before the repairs. The owners of the property could do nothing but quietly abandon it and all thought of a school, until after the complete close of the war.

In 1866 and 1867 the college buildings and grounds were again repaired and improved, and its occupancy for college purposes began six or seven years after its first completion as a college.

The testimony shows that the repairs made, as before stated, cost between $6,000 and $7,000, and that a fair rental value of the property was from $1,500 to $1,800 per annum. Although the owners of the property were deprived of the use of their property for six years, the committee have not been disposed to allow them for any time after the close of the war—say four years, at $1,500 per year, and for the actual cost of the repairs made, say $6,000.

Wherefore your committee recommend the allowance of $12,000, and that the bill do pass, with an amendment striking out in the sixth line of the printed bill the word "twenty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CLAIMS UNDER THE BOWMAN ACT.

Mr. BUTLER. I call up House bill (H. R. 6047) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; and I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill Senate bill 97.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman can not be entertained, because the Senate bill is not on the Private Calendar, but is still on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that it be taken from the Speaker's table.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTLER. Not by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The House bill can now be considered by the Committee of the Whole and reported to the House, and when the bill is in the House then the gentleman can ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I will take that course.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this bill comes within the spirit of the agreement, which was that each member when his named was reached might call up a single measure?

Mr. BUTLER. This House bill is an "omnibus bill," embracing, with many other items, one paragraph which is the same substantially as a Senate bill, which is all that I desire to pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. You are proposing to pass a bill of one item.

Mr. BUTLER. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to call up this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This is a bill containing many different appropriations. The question is whether it comes within the spirit of the order made by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it comes within the terms of the order, which was to consider, when called up by a member, any business on the Private Calendar except pension bills. This bill appears on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I think I can explain what my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER] desires. The Senate has passed a bill for the payment of a certain claim in accordance with the finding of the Court of Claims. The House committee has reported a bill which embraces that claim with a number of others. The gentleman from Tennessee wants such action of the Committee of the Whole as will indorse the particular claim in regard to which he is interested, so that when this bill comes up in the House he may have the Senate bill substituted.

Mr. CRAIN. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether this bill which he calls up is one introduced by himself, or whether he calls it up at the request of a gentleman below him in the alphabetical list.

Mr. BUTLER. This is a claim which concerns parties in my district.

Mr. CRAIN. If the bill comes from the gentleman's own district, all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill (H. R. 6047) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act, was read.

Mr. MCCULLOGH (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a request for the purpose of saving time. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER] desires to have passed but one of the claims mentioned in this lengthy bill. I ask that pro forma, and without prejudice to the other claimants mentioned in the bill, all after the enacting clause, except the part in which the gentleman from Tennessee is interested, be laid on the table——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair takes the liberty of suggesting that the action proposed would very materially damage the interests of the other claimants in this bill.

Mr. MCCULLOGH. I think not; the action I propose is only pro forma.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair could not, at any rate, entertain the proposition until the reading of the bill is concluded.

Mr. MCCULLOGH. It will take a long time to read it.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read, reserving the right to object.

The report was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of the consideration of the bill must first be determined.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for us to consider during this day a bill involving so many different accounts and so large an amount of money. If this bill be taken up, it will not be finished to-day.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. This House could not do justice to itself by permitting such a bill to pass without consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call attention to the fact that a Senate bill which the gentleman from Tennessee desires to substitute for this bill in the House is now on the Speaker's table. If this bill should be reported, and the Senate bill substituted, the effect would be to cut out all the claims not included in the Senate bill. The Chair suggests this for the consideration of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want to prejudice anybody's claim or to consume time unnecessarily. All I desired was to pass the Senate bill, which embraces only the claims about which I am interested.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I suggest that if the gentleman desires specially to pass the Senate bill, there is a way to accomplish the purpose; that is to withdraw this bill now, informing the committee that he will not call up another bill here, but will in the House ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the Senate bill which embraces one of these claims.

Mr. BUTLER. That will meet my approbation.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I submit that this committee, acting under the constitution fixed by the House, can not do what is now suggested.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I am as well aware of the conditions under which we are acting as is the gentleman giving us this information. The House can, by unanimous consent, consider any bill which it pleases. The gentleman from Tennessee can now simply give notice that in the House he will ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the Senate bill; and I do not think the House will refuse it. I am not suggesting any unusual proceeding or anything out of order.

Mr. BUTLER. With that understanding, I withdraw the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the bill, and announces that he will in the House ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the Senate bill which he has indicated.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mere silence here in committee gives no consent to anything which may be proposed hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly not; the gentleman simply announces that he will make the request.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] desires to submit a conference report on an appropriation bill, and I move that the committee rise for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY submitted the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 106, 107, 118, 222, 223, 233, 236, 238, 239, 243, 244, 248, 254, 255, 256, and 257.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 240, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For continuing the construction of the building for the Library of Congress, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including the cost of all professional and other personal services that the Chief of Engineers of the Army may deem necessary for the prosecution of the work, and shall specially order to carry into effect the appropriation of money made for the construction of the said Library building, and to be paid from such appropriation for the construction of the western front of the building and reading-room, and the book repositories connected therewith, as shown by sketch termed 'Plan No. 1' on file in the office of the Librarian of Congress, $500,000. This appropriation and all appropriations hereafter made, and all sums available from appropriations heretofore made for this purpose shall be expended under the direction and supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall have the control and management of all of said work and the employment of all persons connected therewith. And all contracts for the construction of said building, or any part thereof, shall be made by the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and so much of the first section as provides for a commission, together with the eighth section of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library,' approved April 15, 1886, are hereby repealed, and the duties of said commission under said act are hereby devolved upon the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall annually report to Congress at the commencement of each session a detailed statement of all the proceedings under the provisions of this act, and hereafter, until otherwise ordered by Congress, no work shall be done in the construction of said Library except such as is contemplated on the sketch or 'Plan No. 1' herein referred to, and all contracts for work or materials outside of the space covered by said plan are hereby rescinded. And all loss or damage occasioned thereby or arising under said contracts, together with the value of the plan of said Library building submitted to the joint select committee on additional accommodations for the Library of Congress by John L. Smithmeyer in the Italian renaissance style of architecture, may be adjusted and determined by the Secretary of the Interior, to be paid out of the sums heretofore or hereby appropriated. All sketches, plans, and computations heretofore made under the commission created by the act of April 15, 1886, or hereafter made respecting said Library building, or any part of the same, shall be the property of the United States.

"And so much of said act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, approved April 15, 1886,' as authorizes the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library and as provides for plans for the same, excepting only so much of said building as is shown by the sketch termed 'Plan No. 1,' on file in the office of the Librarian of Congress, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the Senate recede from its disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment numbered 4 the following:

"Provided, That the President may at any time in his discretion by a proclamation open any portion or all of the lands reserved by this provision to settlement under the homestead laws."

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$502,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add, after the word "industrial," the word "primary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 221: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 221, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 234: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 234, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

"Catalogue of the Congressional Library: To enable the Librarian of Congress to continue the work upon the catalogue of the Congressional Library, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 242: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 242, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,067,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The following statement, under the rules, accompanied the report:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government submit the following written statement in explanation of the action which has been agreed upon by the conferees on said amendments:

On amendment numbered 105: Appropriates $25,000 for payment to the widow of the late Spencer F. Baird, in full compensation for the services and expenses of the said Spencer F. Baird during his administration of the office of Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

On amendments numbered 106 and 107: Strikes out proposed appropriation of $100,000 for international boundary survey between the United States and Mexico.

On amendment numbered 110: Appropriates $500,000 for continuing the construction of the building for the Library of Congress substantially in the terms proposed by the Senate, except that so much of section 1 of the act authorizing the construction of the building as provides for a commission, together with section 8 thereof, and all that portion of said act which authorizes the construction of said building and the preparation of plans therefor, except as is shown by the sketch termed "Plan No. 1," is repealed.

On amendment numbered 118: Strikes out the provision inserted by the Senate forbidding the use of money appropriated for expenses of depositing public moneys in investigating any case or prosecuting any person in the mining regions of the United States for cutting, for mining or domestic purposes, dwarfed or scrubby timber unfit to be sawed or hewed into lumber of commercial value.

On the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, reducing the appropriation of the Senate from $250,000 to $100,000 for investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation, the committee agree to recommend that the Senate accept the proposition of the House, adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That the President may at any time, in his discretion, by proclamation, open any portion or all of the lands reserved by this provision to settlement under the homestead laws."

On amendment numbered 121: Corrects a total.

On amendments numbered 127 and 128: Appropriates $40,000 instead of $50,000 for industrial and primary education in Alaska.

On amendment numbered 221: Appropriates $20,000 instead of $40,000 for special counsel to be employed by the Attorney-General.

On amendments numbered 222 and 223: Restores the provisions proposed to be stricken out by the Senate prescribing how certain prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws shall be commenced.

On amendment numbered 233: Strikes out appropriation of $10,000 for purchase of works of art by the Joint Committee on the Library.

On amendment numbered 234: Appropriates $5,000 instead of $18,000 to enable the Librarian of Congress to continue the work upon the catalogue of the Congressional Library.

On amendment numbered 236: Strikes out the appropriation of $15,000 to purchase from B. F. Stevens the transcripts from certain state and historical papers.

On amendment numbered 238: Strikes out appropriation of $4,500 to purchase the library of Professor Guyot.

On amendment numbered 239: Strikes out appropriation of $1,500 for purchase of the unfinished painting by Benjamin West of the peace commissioners of the treaty of Paris.

On amendment numbered 240: Appropriates $3,000 to pay for the work done in preparing the index to Congressional documents.

On amendments numbered 242, 243, 244, and 248: Requires the Public Printer to do printing and binding up to the sums allotted to each of the Departments, and strikes out the proposed increase of the sum for printing of Congress from $802,000 to $952,000.

On amendment numbered 254: Strikes out the indefinite appropriation to purchase the square of ground between E and F and Eighth and Ninth streets, on which to erect a public building for the city post-office and other Government purposes.

On amendment numbered 255: Strikes out the proposed indefinite appropriation to purchase additional ground for the use of the Government Printing Office.

On amendment numbered 256: Strikes out the proposed appropriation of $200,000 for the establishment of a zoological park in Washington.

On amendment numbered 257: Strikes out proposed appropriation of $15,000 to purchase that part of Battery Island at the mouth of the Susquehanna River now occupied by the Fish Commissioner as a fish-hatching station.

The bill as agreed upon appropriates $26,245,454.82, being $2,261,544.72 less than as it passed the Senate, $2,913,048.52 more than as it passed the House, $3,858,913.86 more than the law of last year, and $2,497,240.44 less than the estimates submitted for 1889.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 221) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a "Joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a 'Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.'"

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I now move the adoption of the conference report which has just been read. If any gentleman desires any further information other than that covered by the statement of the House conferees, I shall be glad to furnish it.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad, Mr. Speaker, to be recognized at this time.

Mr. FORNEY. I will yield to the gentleman, if he desires it, a part of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I would prefer to be recognized in my own time.

Mr. FORNEY. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

[Mr. CANNON withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. FORNEY. I now ask a vote, Mr. Speaker, on the adoption of the report of the conference committee.

Mr. PAYSON. Before that I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to suggest to the gentleman that I would be glad to hear from him, and at some length, as to why, after the vote taken in the House with reference to the proposition in regard to the construction of the Congressional Library building a few days ago, the House conferees have seen proper to submit the report they have submitted and in its present shape; and to supplement that suggestion with another, that I hope in some way the question may be presented to the House as to whether or not it desires to commit itself to the completion of the building under the Smithmeyer plan.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana to ask a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. FORNEY. I will hear the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that as there are a large number of amendments involved in the report, and as I understand it there is no objection to any of them except in respect to the Congressional Library building, that the gentleman from Alabama move a concurrence in all the rest, and leave this one for the separate action of the House.

Mr. RYAN. Oh, no; that can not be done.

Mr. PAYSON. I should be very glad if that could be done. I am quite willing, as far as I am concerned, that that action shall be taken.

Mr. FORNEY. The report is an entirety, and must be received or rejected as such.

Mr. HOLMAN. I concede that it can not be done; but I should be glad if that course could have been adopted by some means.

Mr. RYAN. It could not be done, even by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYSON. Then, before the question is put to the House, I desire to submit to the gentleman from Alabama that the proposition in regard to the construction of the Congressional Library ought to be debated, and there ought to be some understanding as to what the House proposes to do in regard to it. I submit the propriety of agreeing to all the items in the report except that, as a matter of unanimous consent, and let some suggestion be made upon it and a separate vote taken later on the single proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unfortunately, that can not be done.

Mr. PAYSON. It can by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; not even by unanimous consent.

Mr. FORNEY. This report was before the House the other day and discussed fully, and the House committee of conference carried out what they presumed to be the wishes of the House on the subject of the Congressional Library building. They have, as far as they could understand the wishes of the House, carried out its instructions. This bill simply proposes that the work shall be suspended except as regards the west wing, and we appropriate $500,000 to continue that. It is all placed under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, who has full control, with the right to make the necessary contracts and appoint all the officers required. He can get clear of any one of them that is desirable to be removed. The Senate asked $1,000,000, but $500,000 was finally agreed upon. This work is confined alone, as I have said, to this one wing.

Mr. PAYSON. But that is a part of the Smithmeyer plan.

Mr. FORNEY. Yes.

Mr. PAYSON. And in order that there may be no doubt upon the subject, I wish it to be understood that the construction of the west wing and the central dome, being integral parts of the Smithmeyer plan, is a continuation of the work on that plan and a committal of the House to the construction of the building thereunder.

Mr. RYAN. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman.

Mr. PAYSON. With pleasure.

Mr. RYAN. His view is entirely negatived by the proposition which repeals so much of the law of 1886 as authorizes this building beyond that which is provided for here.

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly, but you are proceeding with the part which is authorized on the old plan, and that is a recognition of the old plan.

Mr. RYAN. This absolutely repeals all other provisions in regard to it and all plans.

Mr. FORNEY. And it will cost about $4,000,000 to finish the building.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the prediction of the gentleman from Alabama will be verified, and that the House is of the same mind still that it was a few days ago when the subject was being acted upon, and when the House with a great deal of unanimity determined that it was proper to rebuke the extraordinary agencies through which the House was induced to pass the bill of 1886 to leave matters in a state of suspense for the time being, continuing only contracts already made until next December. I am inclined to think that the judgment of the House was clearly in favor of that proposition, that no appropriation should be made except the $10,000 proposed to induce the presentation of new plans, and then let the matter go over in a state of suspense until the meeting of Congress next winter. Now, I hope the House will agree to do this, not being able to concur in a part of this report, but to agree to non-concur in all the report—and I understand there is no objection except to this particular provision—and at least adopt this safeguard if they go no further, though I hope the House will adhere to the original determination to suspend the work for the time being as a proper emphasis of the disapproval of the methods which were adopted to secure the passage of the original bill.

But I hope the committee of conference will be called upon to ask the Senate to agree to the following proposition, as they have failed to fix some limit.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the cost of the building as authorized to be constructed by this provision shall not exceed $4,000,000; and if in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers the building so authorized to be erected can not be completed by an expenditure of $4,000,000, he shall suspend the work thereon and make full report to Congress of the facts in relation to said building.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I only wish to ask the committee of conference to insist on this.

Mr. PAYSON. Do you propose to offer that as a proposition?

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose to ask the House to instruct the committee of conference to ask the Senate to consent to that. It seems to me that the House owes something to itself in this matter. We entered upon this enterprise with an understanding brought before the House that the structure was to cost about $3,200,000. I do not believe the House was at any time willing to go beyond that sum in the construction of this building. Indeed, so long as it was a proposition for the construction of a building costing $8,000,000, or anything beyond $3,000,000, it was opposed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What is the estimate of the Smithmeyer plan?

Mr. HOLMAN. The reduced plan—Plan No. 1?

Mr. MAISH. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. The lowest estimate is $4,000,000.

Mr. RYAN. What is the highest?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what I wish to avoid. It would depend altogether upon the plan of construction, but I think $4,000,000 will be the ultimate cost of the construction of the partial plans. It has been estimated that it would cost $4,000,000. There is plenty of time to act on this matter, inasmuch as the appropriations for last year have extended still further and there is no necessity for any extraordinary haste. This subject can be acted on next Monday or Tuesday as well as to-day. I ask the House to non-concur in this conference report, and let the committee of conference, if it can accomplish nothing else, at least fix some limit. The gentleman to have the construction of the building in charge as indicated by this amendment is the Chief of Engineers, a gentleman in whom Congress has entire faith. We have no doubt of his integrity, but in the present proposition we direct him to go right on with this structure no matter at what the cost in the future, whether it be four, five, six, or more millions; and if the proposition should prevail his duty would be to proceed at once without limit.

If the building to be constructed on this reduced plan would cost more than four millions, he would suspend operations and report the matter to the House. Under this proposition we would be proceeding with some degree of caution; but we have displayed no caution whatever up to this time.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Suppose you do agree that it shall cost $4,000,000, and you carry on the work under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, but when you get about half or three-fourths of the building constructed your four millions are gone. What are you then going to do?

Mr. HOLMAN. We will guard against that by the proposition I have submitted. We have a competent officer, whom we instruct. If this building can not be constructed under his supervision for $4,000,000, he is to suspend the work until the meeting of Congress in December, and report the facts to Congress.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Where do you suppose the money is going to that goes into this building?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think a large amount has been thrown away already.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. It is better than where it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would my friend appropriate ten or fifteen million dollars for that work and construct a building approaching this Capitol in cost?

Mr. PAYSON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama controls the time.

Mr. FORNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] fifteen minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. I would like to be recognized in my own right.

Mr. FORNEY. I do not concede that; but I will yield you a reasonable time. If you want ten or fifteen minutes you can take that, and if you are not through I can yield you more.

Mr. HOLMAN (to Mr. PAYSON). You can get your own time eventually.

Mr. PAYSON. I know that very well. I can be heard; but I do not want to make any threat; it is unnecessary. When this excitement over undue haste shall subside I will be heard, I think.

Mr. FORNEY. This is a very important matter. The Senate is now in session for the purpose of receiving this report and taking action.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, the Senate will wait then till next week. This measure will not pass without debate by unanimous consent, because it ought not to. I believe, sir, there are not ten members of this House who understand the proposition that has been presented, and I do not think that there will be any material time lost in having the matter debated as it should be.

Mr. FORNEY. I believe every gentleman understands it. The matter is to be left with the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me say further that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] entirely misapprehends my point, if he thinks that I am making a question as to an honest accounting for the expenditure of the money for the proposed building. That is a secondary matter altogether at this time. I propose to address myself now to the fundamental question whether or not the House intends to adopt this Smithmeyer plan or any integral portion of it at all. It goes to the foundation.

Mr. FORNEY. The report proposes to adopt the plan which is now on file, and which embraces the west wing.

Mr. PAYSON. And which is only a portion of the whole plan, as I will explain. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope to be recognized in my own right, and I agree in advance to take no more time than is necessary to express the ideas I have on this subject. I do not hope to speak connectedly, as I had not a moment's notice that the report was to be called up; but I will, I trust, be understood. This scheme, the proposed action of the House this afternoon, may involve an expenditure of from twelve to fifteen million of dollars.

Mr. FORNEY. Oh, no. It will not go beyond four millions.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, I will explain to the House why it may, and the gentleman will agree with me when he shall have heard me.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is open to the same objection as the report made by the committee. I hold in my hand the plan which has been agreed upon for the erection of this entire building. At the outset, I disagree entirely with the observation made by the gentleman from Indiana that when this plan was adopted it was adopted inconsiderately or without due investigation or discussion on the part of members of the House. There never has been a proposition submitted to Congress since I have been in it that has had a more earnest, sturdy, and vehement opposition than the erection of this public Library building.

It began as long ago as the Forty-sixth Congress, and the measure was reported time and time again. Various plans were submitted, the principal ones among them being for a proposed enlargement of this Capitol building so as to afford room for the accommodation of the rapidly accumulating mass of books, maps and manuscripts, etc., in the Congressional Library. One plan was to extend it eastwardly; another was to extend it westwardly and make it five or six stories high, and the result of them all was that in the Forty-sixth Congress a committee was appointed, consisting of the Architect of the Capitol, a gentleman named Esty (if I recall the name rightly), and Mr. Smithmeyer, to examine, as scientific men and as experts in this business, these various schemes and report to Congress some plan to meet the necessities for the growth of the Congressional Library.

These gentlemen submitted individual reports, which I have upon my desk, but which are too long for me to take time to read now. It is enough to say that all three of these architects agreed that the enlargement of the Capitol building was impracticable; that it would interfere with the architectural beauty of the building; that it would injure the stability and security of the dome, and all that sort of thing, and they all concurred in saying that the proposed enlargement would involve an expenditure, upon a minimum estimate, of over $4,000,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Four million two hundred thousand dollars was Mr. Clark's estimate.

Mr. PAYSON. Four millions of dollars, in round numbers, was the lowest estimate made for the enlargement of this building for the purposes of the Library, and all three of these gentlemen agreed that the way out of the difficulty was to erect a separate and independent building. Then controversy arose as to what site should be selected in case Congress should decide to erect a separate building, and that matter was discussed in the House here, the general idea being that Judiciary Square was the best place. A point was made as to the stability of the foundation there, it being alleged, as I remember very well, that a large portion of that territory was "made" ground; and a detail of engineers was sent from the War Department to investigate the matter, and their report was that Judiciary Square was not objectionable so far as the stability of the soil was concerned and its suitableness to carry the weight of this great building.

But an important factor in connection with the proposition to enlarge the Capitol building was the item of expense. Mr. Clarke submitted a plan and estimates for the erection of a building for a public library, the cost of which, in round numbers, was to be about $5,000,000. Mr. Esty's plan would cost nearly $4,000,000. Mr. Smithmeyer did submit a plan, which, as to the ground plan, was substantially the same as this which I have in my hand. However, the style of architecture was Gothic, covered with expensive turrets and towers and ornamentations of that kind, and because of the expense that plan and style was regarded as not suitable to be adopted. The question was discussed and statements were made here as to the enormous expense of that kind of a building, in Gothic, and finally a detailed statement was made with reference to the cost of a building of the present adopted plan, modified as to ornamentation and style, exclusive of some iron shelving to be put in the numerous alcoves, as in the future they might be required, and for which shelving the estimate was about $700,000, and which, in the plan of Mr. Smithmeyer, was distributed over fifty years, and the total cost of the proposed building, as stated by him, was to be two million three hundred and some odd thousand dollars, completing the entire structure ready for shelving one million books, all complete, except a portion of iron shelving, etc., to be supplied in later years as needed, as I have said.

Mr. ROGERS. Where is the evidence of that statement?

Mr. PAYSON. I am coming to that. The statement has been made here time after time. Mr. Smithmeyer undertakes to deny that he ever made any such statement, and has said so under oath. He has so stated to members on this floor. I knew that I had seen such a statement in print, and so said when this matter was up two weeks ago. I knew such a statement had been made by Mr. Smithmeyer and I now appeal to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to confirm my recollection and statement that a pamphlet, with reference to the cost of this building, was published over the signature of Mr. Smithmeyer, and headed, "For the information of Congress"—a pamphlet printed at the Government Printing Office and distributed among members of the House, stating the cost of this building to be what I said.

A copy of that pamphlet was, within the last week or ten days, in the possession of the gentleman from Indiana as chairman of this investigating committee, which we appointed with reference to the troubles growing out of the foundation of the building. The gentleman from Indiana and I have both made diligent search for the pamphlet in the committee-room to-day, and it could not be found. I do not like to say that it has been taken away in any mysterious manner; but such a document was in existence; it was printed as a public document at the Government Printing Office, and was headed, "For the information of Congress;" and it contained the statement I have cited as to the cost of this building over Mr. Smithmeyer's signature. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to verify my statement with reference to this matter.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman state when the pamphlet was published?

Mr. PAYSON. During the Forty-eighth Congress, I believe, just prior to the time when this report was adopted. In corroboration of that statement, I refer to the fact that Mr. Singleton, the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, made in this House the official statement that this was to be the cost of the building; and when the bill was pending in the Senate, Mr. MORRILL, who was chairman of the Senate committee, made the statement which I will read:

The estimate of the architect, for the building constructed with limestone or sandstone with three hundred alcoves, or sufficient for 800,000 or 1,000,000 volumes, with the heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and other fixtures, is $2,323,600. When fully completed there will be seven hundred additional alcoves which will cost $700,000 more—

Those are the iron shelving to which I referred a few minutes ago—alcoves made of iron on which the books are to be placed—and the entire completion of the whole interior, including the basement, will require a further sum of $239,000. This is a carefully revised estimate, and shows that the building may be put into a condition of readiness to be occupied with very large accommodations, at an expense already mentioned—

That is the sum of $3,323,600—

and when it shall be hereafter completely finished, with a capacity to hold over 3,000,000 books, with facilities for even largely increasing even this vast stock when absolutely necessary, in addition to all of its other extensive and important accommodations, its ultimate cost will be $3,262,600.

There is the statement which was made by the committee based on Mr. Smithmeyer's formal paper.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Is that Mr. Smithmeyer's estimate?

Mr. PAYSON. It is Mr. Smithmeyer's estimate; it was also embodied in the statement of Senator MORRILL, who was chairman of the Senate Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Congressional Library.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Has Mr. Smithmeyer changed that estimate since?

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Smithmeyer now concedes, at least he does not deny, that the entire building will cost upward of $10,000,000, and that to build simply one wing, which is a kind of ten-pin alley structure, will cost $4,000,000.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana, rose.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not desire to be interrupted further.

Now, that this matter was not inconsiderately acted upon by the House, that the House did not act without full information is evident from another fact. The report which was made by Mr. Singleton, chairman of the House committee, proposed that the appropriation to pay for this building should be divided into three installments, the first of which, if I recollect aright, was about $800,000——

Mr. HOLMAN. Five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. PAYSON. Five hundred thousand dollars the first year; a larger amount the second year; and then the third year enough to make up the balance of the $2,323,600, which would complete the building, except part of the shelving.

Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that during all the time when this matter was pending in the Forty-eighth Congress and in prior years running back to 1880, in the Forty-sixth Congress, Mr. Smithmeyer was an official of this Government, drawing pay from the public Treasury for his connection with the preparation of these plans. During the preparation of the plan which I hold in my hand, on which this estimate of $2,323,600 was based, he made a trip to Europe to study the subject of library accommodations, the best methods of book handling, storing, preserving, etc.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the auspices of the Senate.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, I was going to mention that he made this visit to Europe under the auspices of the Senate Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library. Every gentleman here who was a member of the Forty-ninth Congress well understands that Congress acted with distinct and explicit information on this subject.

As I stated the other day, I was opposed at the beginning and down to the time of the passage of the bill to the adoption of this scheme in any way. I knew, as a matter of fact, the information coming to me from men in whose statements I had the utmost confidence, that a large frontage of the land which was afterwards condemned for the purpose of this Library had been bought up by a syndicate of gentlemen (some of whom had lately been in public life) for the purpose of unloading it on the Government. That did not tend to convince me that the project was a good thing to enter upon. But that is all past now. My opposition to the present measure is not based upon anything of that kind. I was opposed to the plan, believing that another plan was better; but this House did not agree with my ideas, and reluctantly I ceased my opposition to the bill upon the personal assurance of General Singleton, with whom I had served on the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, in the Forty-seventh Congress, a gentleman than whom I do not believe a more conscientious legislator ever sat under this roof, that these estimates were carefully guarded, and that the building in its entirety, from the grout that covered the cellar of the basement to the vane upon the topmost spire of the building, would not exceed the amount of money named. Everybody else so understood.

Now, what have we? We have a proposition to construct a building which, in the observations I made the other day, I pronounced an architectural monstrosity; and if there is any way of emphasizing that language, I would be glad to do so. Here [exhibiting a diagram] is what is proposed—to erect a part of the building as shown by that long line, 459 feet long, 60 feet in width across there [illustrating] at its widest place at the corner, and only 44 feet wide most of the distance; and then there is to be this central tower. Here is the building that this committee proposes to construct for the accommodation of our public library, as a piece of architecture in reference to which you and I are expected to feel proud that we had something to do with it; and this is to cost not exceeding $4,000,000. Are members of this House prepared to embark on that proposition? In its proportions this structure is, as I have suggested, an exaggerated ten-pin alley in appearance. I am not an architect, but since this matter was up the other day I have talked with some half dozen architects of this city with reference to this matter, and I am convinced their criticism is not the result of any professional jealousy as between themselves and Mr. Smithmeyer. They all agree that it would be a disgrace architecturally to attempt the erection of any such building. An inspection of this plan is enough to satisfy any one upon this question.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Where are they going to put the tower—behind?

Mr. PAYSON. The tower is to be behind.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. So I thought.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope this plan which I hold in my hand is within the view of every member. Here is a building 459 feet long; there [illustrating] is the width of it—44 feet—and it is to be 70 feet high. The chairman of the conference committee [Mr. FORNEY] does not know himself whether these connecting corridors are contemplated by the plan, but doubtless this is one [illustrating]. All the rest of the original plan is abandoned; the law originally authorizing the construction of the building is to be repealed and is to be as though it had never existed. This plan comes to us now to put $4,000,000 in that building and that tower; and everything else in connection with the original plan is to be repealed.

Mr. RYAN. Here is the plan that is proposed.

Mr. PAYSON. Those corridors are omitted from his plan. Is it pretended that is proportionately accurate? [Referring to plan handed to him by Mr. RYAN.]

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. It does not look like the plan Mr. Smithmeyer circulates to us.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is not proportionate. That is clearly erroneous.

Mr. PAYSON. Was this drawn by Mr. Smithmeyer?

Mr. RYAN. I think so.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me ask the gentleman whether there is anything on this plan indicating that it is not true to scale?

Mr. RYAN. I think it is true to scale.

Mr. PAYSON. Let us see. There is the whole building, and the red represents what is to be constructed now. In this one sent to us there is some reduction in it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to go on.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope we will not be hurried along in this matter. We are all deeply interested and it is very important.

Mr. FORNEY. I wish to get a vote on it to-day. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes longer.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope gentlemen will give me their continued attention. Now, we have made an excavation, and we have in this hole over here $40,000 or $50,000. It is a mere bagatelle. It does not amount to anything. But the question is whether now, as an original proposition of erecting a library building, we will put up a building like that [illustrating] with that tower behind it? Because it is agreed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] these connecting corridors are themselves not to be built. It is this part of a building with a tower behind it that we are to vote to put four millions in.

Mr. HERBERT. It ought to be discontinued.

Mr. PAYSON. Excepting a little corridor there. That is the proposition. I say if the proposition had been submitted to this House in the Forty-ninth Congress as in this plan that that building in its entirety would cost $4,000,000, it would not have received the approval of this House. The expense of the building was an important one, and was thoroughly canvassed and talked about; and now we come here and within the limit of five minutes we are expected to take a new departure and to adopt and build that part of the building, a small but substantial portion of the whole building, a building which will be a monstrosity to look at.

But what does it matter if the result is to keep in office, in connection with the reduced building, Mr. Smithmeyer? I do not know him. I know what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] says, that it is in the power of the Chief of Engineers, who will have charge and spend the money, to employ whom he pleases and discharge whom he pleases, and we will hold him to a rigid accountability for the expenditure of this money.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the question. Every dollar of this money would have been honestly expended under William F. Vilas as under any member of the Engineer Corps of the Army. Under the Library Commission, composed of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Vilas, the Librarian of Congress, Mr. Spofford, and the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. Clark, this money would have been honestly expended by these gentlemen as a question of personal integrity or a question of personal confidence, for in the expenditure of money each one of these gentlemen stands as fair as any gentleman connected with the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Gentlemen ought not to be diverted by that suggestion from the main question here. I am in favor of some kind of a building. I am in favor of a building that will cost, if necessary, millions of dollars for that purpose.

What have these great buildings cost in foreign lands? Take the great building referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], the great library building of Munich. The total cost of that library building, which will accommodate 1,400,000 volumes, was less than $750,000. Reference has also been made to the British Museum by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], who grew eloquent, as he always does, when he described the feeling of awe which came over him when he approached that building.

I have taken occasion since that date to look into the history of this building a little. It contains not only the British Library proper, but a great collection of all sorts of curiosities and works of art and antiquities congregated there from foreign lands to enrich it. The building covers some 6 or 8 acres of ground in extent; but that portion of it which is devoted exclusively to the public library, and accommodates the great metropolis of London sufficiently not only for the present day but for generations to come, cost £160,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is cheap labor.

Mr. PAYSON. Or but little over $800,000 for a public library in the city of London, over which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] became so eloquent the other day, which he pointed out as an example to us, and argued that this young Republic, so rich and prosperous, should not be outdone by foreign governments.

Mr. Speaker, this matter will not be disposed of to-day. Gentlemen may rest assured that it will be thoroughly discussed; and on Monday I will be prepared to submit some observations, more connectedly than now and fortified by the record.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FORNEY. I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that we could get this report adopted to-night, but as there is a disposition manifested on the part of many to discuss the question, and that this time be extended, and as it seems to be the desire of those around me to proceed with the matter on Monday (as I understand we adjourn over to-morrow) I shall not press the consideration to-night.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it and let it go over, as he suggests. Let the consideration of it be resumed on Monday when the House again meets.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama has fifteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. FORNEY. I think the matter had better go over, then, until Monday, as I understand gentlemen want to resume the consideration of the Private Calendar to-day.

Mr. WEAVER. Let us understand this matter first. This is not to interfere with a suspension of the rules?

Mr. FORNEY. It will have to interfere with everything until it gets through.

Mr. WEAVER. Then it is still subject to the right of objection. Now, we are not ready to accede to the suggestion of the gentleman that it shall go over until Monday if it is to interfere with other matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But this is a privileged report, and the gentleman can call it up at any time.

Mr. RYAN. I should dislike to have this interfere with some business which I understand is to be called up on Monday, the Oklahoma bill; but I suppose, being a conference report, it is a question of privilege, which can be taken up at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WEAVER. Then let us agree upon some time to be taken up on Monday.

Mr. RYAN. Yes, we might limit the debate on it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest an hour and a half, after the reading of the Journal on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. PAYSON objected.

Mr. RYAN. Then how much time do you want?

Mr. BLOUNT. I may not want any time at all, but this is a matter of too much importance to be pressed through in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, say two hours, to be equally divided.

Mr. RYAN. Will two hours be satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not think there should be a limit fixed to it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the House. Is there objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana that two hours be devoted to the consideration of this report on Monday?

Mr. PAYSON. There is objection.

Mr. RYAN. It seems to me that an hour and a half ought to be sufficient, and certainly two hours is ample.

Mr. ROGERS. Why fix the limit to it now? We have plenty of time.

Mr. PAYSON. I shall be entirely unwilling to agree to any limit at present.

Mr. WEAVER. There should be a limit fixed to it because there are other matters pressing.

Mr. ROGERS. They will have plenty of time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest, then, that the hour for the recess to-day be extended, say for an hour, and let us dispose of this to-night. If this bill is disposed of to-night, it can become a law so as to render it unnecessary to put in operation the joint resolution just passed extending the appropriations.

Mr. PAYSON. It can not be done to-night.

Mr. FORNEY. Suppose we extend the session of the House this evening for an hour?

Mr. SPRINGER. If that is done, we can dispose of this bill to-night.

Mr. PAYSON. You can not dispose of it to-night.

Mr. SPRINGER. We can extend the time this evening.

Mr. CANNON. But we have a pension night. Why not take it up to-morrow morning?

Mr. SPRINGER. This will not interfere with the pension night, and besides we have adjourned over to-morrow. However, that order may be rescinded.

Mr. RYAN. It ought to be rescinded.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the order by which the House agreed to adjourn over from to-day until Monday be rescinded.

Mr. PAYSON, Mr. BLOUNT, and others objected.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I submit a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion has already been made and laid on the table.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I give notice that if they intend to crowd out Oklahoma by this agreement I will require a quorum to pass this bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. FORNEY. I withdraw the report for the present.

H. R. BLAKISTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to H. R. Blakiston, returned from the Senate.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which this bill was passed, for the purpose of correcting the name of the beneficiary.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Now I move to insert the name "Henry" in place of the first initial, "H.;" so that it will read: "Henry R. Blakiston."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED.

Mr. LANHAM. A number of bills were favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole House to-day, and I ask that they be now put upon their passage.

Mr. GEAR. Is not the regular order to go on with the call of the roll?

The SPEAKER. The House is in session now, and not the Committee of the Whole.

Bills of the House of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 8979) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie H. Carrow, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 6404) for the relief of Charles F. Swain, master of the bark Philena;

A bill (H. R. 8356) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of David Ryan against the United States;

A bill (H. R. 8469) for the relief of Michael Pigott;

A bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. J. B. Read;

A bill (H. R. 2059) for the relief of S. E. Scarborough;

A bill (H. R. 3469) providing for the payment of $450 to pay W. S. Brantly, executor of J. H. Brantly, for damages to property by United States troops in 1865;

A bill (H. R. 7799) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company;

A bill (H. R. 4554) for the relief of the heirs of Preston Beck, jr.;

A bill (H. R. 9724) for the relief of A. J. McCreary, administrator of J. M. Hiatt, deceased, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8276) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin F. Richardson;

A bill (H. R. 3494) for the relief of John L. Alsup; and

A bill (H. R. 766) for the relief of H. L. Newman.

Bills of the House of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were severally taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of W. W. Welch;

A bill (H. R. 5426) for the relief of the St. Joseph Commercial College, of St. Joseph, Mo.;

The bill (S. 576) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co., reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LANHAM moved to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY AT CYNTHIANA, KY.

The SPEAKER. The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House is the bill (H. R. 8640) to direct the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to ascertain and report the facts concerning the destruction of property at Cynthiana, Ky., on July 17, 1862.

The bill and amendments were reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think that bill ought to pass. I take it for granted that when the House is in possession of all the facts they will not lay the foundation for a claim against the Government. It is for spoliation in the midst of war.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] who called up this bill is not present, and I suggest that the bill lie over until next Friday, when he can be heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed over informally and not lose its place on the Calendar.

BILLS ON CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there are a number of bills on the Calendar heretofore reported from the Committee of the Whole House which, unless disposed of in some way, must lie over until next Friday. There are some pension bills on which a quorum has been demanded, with perhaps one exception.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that they be passed over informally.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, they will be passed over informally.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

FAIRPORT HARBOR, OHIO.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope before that is done the gentleman from Texas will allow me to call up for consideration at this time joint resolution (S. R. 109) declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor bill of August 11, 1888. I send it to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. It will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor bill of August 11, 1888.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the phrase "present low-water mark" in the river and harbor bill of August 11, 1888, in the paragraph referring to Fairport Harbor, Ohio, is intended to mean the inner shore-line represented on map in the report of Chief of Engineers of 1881.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This joint resolution is sent here by the Chief of Engineers in order to make plain certain rather indefinite language in regard to the line in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had this under consideration?

Mr. GROSVENOR. All members of the committee present have been consulted and have given their consent. It changes nothing except that it defines the line.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GROSVENOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 3147) amendatory of an act relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned, approved June 18, 1888, and for other purposes.

Joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SENEY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print remarks in the RECORD upon the bill (H. R. 8190) to define and regulate the jurisdiction of the United States courts.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GEAR, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WILKINSON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOWDEN, for one week from the 17th instant, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHAW. I request the gentleman to withdraw that motion in order that I may ask consent for the consideration of a bill to refund the duty paid upon a clock and a chime of bells for a church.

Mr. LANHAM. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COBB. Pending that I move that the House, under the special order, take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 34, noes 26; and the House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes) took a recess until 8 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by Mr. STONE, of Missouri, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
September 14, 1888.

Hon. W. J. STONE, of Missouri, is hereby designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at this evening's session.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1139) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor;

A bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences arising between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers, and their employés;

A bill (H. R. 5059) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Watertown, in the State of New York;

A bill (H. R. 2996) to confirm the title of the heirs or legal representatives of Henry Volcker, deceased, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. 1216) for the investigation of the mining-débris question in the State of California; and

A bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Matthew W. Berryman.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 346) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5092) for the relief of Charles L. Bradwell; requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HOAR, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. BROWN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] to withdraw for a moment his motion to enter into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I will withdraw the motion for the present.

MRS. ADELINE COUZINS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill No. 2356, to provide a pension for Mrs. Adeline Couzins. Let the bill be read, and then, with the permission of the House, I will make a brief statement in regard to it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Adeline Couzins, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. When my name was called in its regular alphabetical order on the roll at the last pension session I asked to have the committee rise for the purpose of considering this bill. The committee rose, but after we got back into the House, there being other bills that had priority, this one was not reached. The bill is to pay to Mrs. Adeline Couzins a pension of $50 a month. In regard to the amount I am willing to be governed by the judgment of the committee. The grounds for the pension are these: During the war Mrs. Couzins organized a board of nurses and went to the various battle-fields and hospitals, and, I believe, did more for the suffering, sick, and wounded soldiers, Confederate and Federal alike, than any other woman in the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. RYAN. As much as any other, you mean.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I believe more, and I think they will say so. The testimony of James E. Yeatman, who was the head of the Sanitary Commission, certifies to the fact, and the certificate of Col. James O. Broadhead, formerly a member of this House, makes the same statement. At the battle of Vicksburg, while engaged in waiting upon the wounded, Mrs. Couzins was herself wounded, and this claim is based especially on that fact. I do not know of any other case of a like character. This woman was wounded upon the battle-field while engaged in the work of attending upon the wounded soldiers.

Mr. CHEADLE. I will ask that in connection with this bill we take up and pass a bill to pension an old lady, seventy-seven years old, who was a nurse with this lady in the Army.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have no objection whatever.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask that both bills be taken up together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. CHEADLE. The bill to which I refer is a Senate bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Did I understand the gentleman from Indiana to object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. He does not object.

Mr. KILGORE. Was not this bill considered at a former Friday evening session?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It was, and was recommended favorably to the House.

Mr. KILGORE. Was it not recommended to the House to be voted on when a quorum should be present?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It was recommended to be voted on in the House because it proposed a pension of $50. If there is objection to that amount——

Mr. KILGORE. As I understand, the agreement was it should be voted on when a quorum should be present.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No point of that kind was made.

Mr. KILGORE. That was the point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE], as I understand.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. If the gentleman from Missouri will reduce the amount to $30, I have no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I do not think the gentleman ought to do that.

Mr. CHEADLE. I wish to correct the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE]. He said he understood I had objected to this bill on account of the want of a quorum. I did not.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE]. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$50" and inserting "$30." With this amendment I hope there will be no further objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of business under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to call the roll of members, beginning where we left off on last Friday night, and that each member as his name is reached be permitted to call up a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] asks unanimous consent that business be continued this evening under the order of the last Friday-night session; that is, that the roll be called commencing where the call stopped on last Friday night, and that each member, as his name is reached, have the privilege of calling up a bill for consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

MRS. MARY MORRISON ELLIOTT.

Mr. PLUMB. I call up the bill (S. 2951) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Morrison Elliott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Mary Morrison Elliott, who was a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The committee beg leave to report that they have considered this case and adopt the report of the Senate made in this case as their report, and report the bill back with a recommendation that the same do pass.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2951) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Morrison Elliott, have examined the same, and report:

This is a bill to pension Mrs. Mary Morrison Elliott as an army nurse, at the rate of $25 a month.

Her identity as a nurse, and a very efficient one, is established by testimony in the possession of the committee.

Dr. H. A. Buttorph, who was superintendent of the Trenton (N. J.) State Lunatic Asylum, certifies that she left that institution soon after the commencement of the war, at the request of Miss D. L. Dix, to engage as a nurse under her direction in the case of sick and wounded soldiers.

Dr. Walter Ure certifies to her faithful, devoted, and efficient services at Winchester (Va.) Hospital and in the field, while he was assistant surgeon in charge in 1864. From the certificate of Dr. D. R. Good, acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, it appears that she was on duty at United States General Hospital, Camp Letterman, near Gettysburgh, in 1863, from which she was transferred to officers' hospital at Georgetown, D. C.

The committee is satisfied as to the extent and value of her service. She is now seventy-seven years of age, and physically and financially helpless.

The bill is reported favorably, with an amendment substituting the word "twelve" for "twenty-five" in the eighth line, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCES H. PLUMMER.

Mr. RICE. I call up the bill (S. 2091) granting a pension to Frances H. Plummer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Frances H. Plummer, widow of Brig. Gen. Joseph B. Plummer, United States Army, and to pay her a pension of $100 a month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out "$100" and insert "$75."

Mr. CHEADLE. I shall call a quorum on every bill of this kind. I have said this so often that it is very singular to me gentlemen should undertake to pass bills of this kind in this way.

Mr. RICE. I will ask, then, that the bill be reported to the House with the usual understanding in such cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RICE] that, with no quorum now in the city and with the likelihood that there may not be, his bill is in a more satisfactory condition where it is on the Calendar than it could possibly be if reported from the Committee of the Whole with such an understanding as he suggests.

Mr. RICE. Then I ask that the bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PIERRE BOTTINEAU.

Mr. RICE. I now call up the bill (S. 2713) granting a pension to Pierre Bottineau.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Pierre Bottineau, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2713) granting a penson to Pierre Bottineau, have considered the same and report it back to the House, recommending its passage.

George W. Sweet, a prominent citizen of Minneapolis, Minn., states:

"I have known Mr. Bottineau for a period of forty years, and during that time have often met him upon the frontiers, where he has been acting as guide to both military and civil expeditions, and from what I have seen I believe his faithful services, frequently rendered at great personal risk to himself, deserves recognition at the hands of our Government. Should it be the policy of the country to pension those engaged in putting down the hostile Indians, then he has well earned and deserves a pension."

Hon. W. H. Sibley also states:

"I have known him for fifty years past as a reliable, faithful guide and scout, who has rendered much valuable service to the Government, and richly merits to be provided for in his old age."

In addition to the above, your committee invites attention to the report of the Senate committee upon this matter as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1008, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a petition of Pierre Bottineau, guide and scout, praying for a pension, have examined the same and report:

The memorial of a large number of the most eminent citizens of Minnesota represents that Pierre Bottineau, who for thirty years has been employed by the civil and military officers of the Government in hazardous enterprises, involving not merely the special knowledge and instinct of scout and guide, but the highest courage and unbending rectitude, is now, in his old age, broken in health and poor.

The committee, appreciating the value of the service rendered, report the bill granting the pension prayed for, and recommend its passage.

The memorial follows, and is made a part of this report:

ST. PAUL, MINN., March, 1879.

PETITION.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned citizens of the United States resident in the State of Minnesota respectfully represents that they have been for many years personally acquainted with Pierre Bottineau, an old and experienced guide and scout, and known that he has been long employed in that capacity by civil and military officers of the Government, and has rendered important services, at great risk to his own life from hostile Indians.

Your memorialists further respectfully represent that the said Pierre Bottineau is now advanced in years and physically disabled from supporting himself by manual labor, and is withal reduced to poverty. There is appended hereto a list of some of the duties performed by said Bottineau, connected with the public service during a long series of years, which is made a part of this memorial and will serve to show that much of the prime of his life has been devoted to the Government, and that he has been a faithful, efficient, and intelligent public servant.

In view of which facts your memorialists humbly pray Congress to pass a special act for his benefit, granting him a pension of $50 a month for and during the time of his natural life.

And your memorialists will ever pray, etc.

Wm. R. Marshall, late colonel Seventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteers, and ex-governor of Minnesota; Henry H. Sibley, late brevet major-general United States Volunteers; W. Pfeauder, State treasurer, late colonel Second Minnesota Volunteers; N. W. Kittson; James Gilfillan, late colonel Eleventh Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, now chief-justice supreme court of Minnesota; J. S. Pillsbury, governor of Minnesota; David Day, postmaster, St. Paul; H. LIST OF PRINCIPAL PUBLIC SERVICES PERFORMED BY PIERRE BOTTINEAU.

First. In 1857 he was employed as guide and interpreter to the commissioner to make a treaty with the Chippewa Indians, at Red Lake. Hon. Alexander Ramsey, Government commissioner.

Second. In 1853 he was employed and acted as guide to Governor Stevens in surveying route to the Pacific.

Third. In 1854 and 1855 he acted as guide and interpreter to the command of Lieutenant Kearny or Carney, ordered to Mille Lac to apprehend the Chippewa murderers of lumbermen.

Fourth. In 1856 he was employed as guide to the command of Colonel Smith, United States Army, to Graham's Point, Sheyenne River, Devil's Lake, and Pembina, to select site for a military post at latter point.

Fifth. In 1858, as guide to Colonel White and another Army officer, appointed to examine points for military posts in Western Minnesota and Dakota Territory.

Sixth. In 1859 he was appointed by Gov. H. H. Sibley one of the commissioners to select Salt Spring lands.

Seventh. In 1860 he was guide to United States Commissioners Cullen and Bailey to make treaty at Grand Forks with Chippewas.

Eighth. In 1862, guide to Captain Fisk's overland expedition to Montana and Idaho.

Ninth. In 1863 he was chief guide to the important expedition against the hostile Sioux Indians, under the command of General H. H. Sibley.

Tenth. In the fall of the same year guide to United States Commissioner Alex. Ramsey, to make treaty with the Chippewas at Old Crossing.

Eleventh. In 1864 with Major Carlin, United States Army, to select site for military post at Fort Wadsworth, Dak.

Twelfth. In 1866 with General Terry, United States Army, to locate Fort Ransom; thence with Captain Wainright's command to Fort Totten, Dak.

Thirteenth. In 1865 with Colonel Camden, Illinois Cavalry, to seat of Indian war on the Missouri.

Fourteenth. In 1867 with Major-General Hancock to inspect military posts in Dakota Territory.

Fifteenth. In 1868 with J. Gregory Smith, of Red River, and with General W. R. Marshall, Phil. Holmes, and Major Brackett, to explore route for Northern Pacific Railroad.

Sixteenth. In 1870 with special agent for the Government, R. T. Crowell, to Pembina and other points.

Seventeenth. With Government Agents R. F. Crowell and H. S. Neal, to White Earth, Minn., and Pembina and St. Joseph, Dak.

Eighteenth. In 1872 with W. R. Marshall to Pembina and Manitoba, and many other minor services not above enumerated.

Mr. RICE. I will add my personal testimony to the value of the services of this man, whom I have known for a number of years.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. BRIDGET HACKETT.

Mr. ROWELL. I call up the bill (S. 2050) granting a pension to Mrs. Bridget Hackett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Bridget Hackett, of Decatur, Ill., widow of Michael Hackett, who served as a seaman in the naval service of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] to the fact that the report in this case is adverse.

Mr. ROWELL. I am aware of that. But there was a favorable report in the Senate; and the committee of this House seem to have started out to make a favorable report. I want to submit the case to the House. I think the bill, when the circumstances are understood, will be passed.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2050) granting a pension to Mrs. Bridget Hackett, beg leave to report:

They have considered the same and find that the following two reports were made to the Senate on said bill by the committee thereof, one being favorable and the other adverse:

"[Senate Report No. 1726, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2050) granting a pension to Mrs. Bridget Hacket, have re-examined and reconsidered the same and report:

"This bill was adversely reported May 15, 1888, and recommitted June 11, 1888, new evidence having been filed, as follows:

"H. M. Mixer, M. D., United States examining surgeon at New Hampton, Iowa, states that he has a perfect recollection of the late Michael Hackett, who served for two years on board the United States gunboat Lexington, to which affiant was attached as a surgeon; that the late seaman came to the Lexington with Capt. George M. Bache, who had commanded the Cincinnati at the time she was lost in an engagement with the enemy in front of Vicksburg, Miss., about May 23, 1863; that affiant knows that Captain Bache thought highly of the late Michael Hackett and often spoke of his valor in the engagement above referred to, and of the fact that the said Captain Bache owed his life to Hackett, who swam ashore carrying him in his arms; that affiant remembers that Hackett had received, as he alleged, an injury of his right eye from flying splinters during the engagement; that it was several days after the engagement before affiant saw Hackett, and did not treat him for the trouble at the time.

"This evidence, in connection with the former report, a copy of which is hereto appended, warrants favorable action.

"Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

"[Senate Report No. 1303, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2050) granting a pension to Mrs. Bridget Hackett, have examined the same and report:

"Claimant is the widow of Michael Hackett, who enlisted as a seaman September 30, 1862, for three years, and served as a first-class boy on the North Carolina to November 9, 1862; on the Clara Dolson from November 10 to November 15, 1862; on the Cincinnati from November 16, 1862, to May 27, 1863, and on the Lexington from May 28, 1863, to June 8, 1865, when he was discharged as a seaman.

"Widow filed no claim through the Bureau of Pensions, but in a letttr to the Commissioner of Pensions, dated October 18, 1887, she states that her husband died of a different disease than the one for which he claimed a pension; that she is greatly in need of a pension, having a large family of small children to support.

"In her affidavit executed January 21, 1888, claimant states that her late husband was injured in his right eye by a splinter striking him during an engagement of the gunboat Cincinnati with the enemy in front of Vicksburg, Miss., May 27, 1863, and that said injury resulted in a cataract, greatly impairing the vision of the late sailor's right eye; that her husband died September 26, 1884, from disability on account of peritonitis; that the late sailor left surviving him the following named children: Nellie Hackett, aged fourteen years; Harry Hackett, aged thirteen years; Willie Hackett, aged eleven years; Lillie Hackett, aged five years, all of whom are wholly dependent upon claimant for their support, and that she keeps the family, as best she can, by washing and ironing; that as she is debarred of a pension through the ordinary way, she prays that her name be placed upon the pension-roll by a special act of Congress.

"A petition signed by B. I. Sterrett, L. F. Skilley, G. C. Kinsman, E. F. Dawson, W. W. Burns, H. I. Miller, Charles P. Denton, Ralph Templeton, and fifty other citizens of Decatur, Ill., prays for the relief of claimant by the passage of a special act of Congress, as she is without remedy through the Bureau of Pensions.

"The sailor's application for pension was filed September 17, 1883, in which he alleges injury of right eye received by a splinter striking him during an engagement of the gunboat Cincinnati with the enemy in front of Vicksburg, Miss., May 27, 1863.

"In affidavit filed May 27, 1884, the sailor states that he was never treated for injury of right eye while in the service, and that since discharge he has treated himself; that he is unable to furnish testimony of officers showing the origin of his alleged disability, for the reason that Lieutenant Bache, the commanding officer of the Cincinnati, can not, at this late day, remember his disability.

"In affidavit filed September 20, 1884, John Pearce, late executive officer of the Mississippi squadron, testifies that the sailor was on the boat Cincinnati when she sunk at Vicksburg, Miss., May 27, 1863, and claims to have been wounded by a splinter; that splinters were flying around from the enemy's shots and struck many persons.

"Examination made by the board of United States surgeons at Springfield, Ill., October 10, 1883, rates the late sailor one-half on account of loss of sight of right eye, resulting from an injury from a flying splinter.

"The claim is one of a large class of cases which should be provided for by general legislation, but under the present state of the law the testimony presented does not seem to warrant a favorable recommendation by the committee for a special act granting a pension to the claimant."

It will be seen that no claim was ever made by the claimant for a pension in the Pension Bureau. It is further shown by the testimony, and not contradicted, that the soldier on whose account the pension is asked was injured in the right eye by a splinter during an engagement on May 27, 1863, on a gunboat, at Vicksburg, Miss., and that he died September 26, 1884, from disability on account of peritonitis. There is no pretense that the soldier's death was traceable to his Army service or had any connection with the injury to his eye. While the widow of this soldier, and his children, have our profound sympathy, and perhaps there should be a general law passed to meet this class of cases, yet we are unable to see any reason now why this pension should be granted and made an exception of a large class, and therefore report the bill back with a recommendation that the same lie on the table.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I will state my reason for calling up this bill and asking for its favorable consideration. This soldier, had he been able in his lifetime to find the evidence which was subsequently found, would have been entitled to a pension from 1863. He is proved to have been a very gallant soldier, and on one occasion he saved the life of his captain at the risk of his own, by carrying him ashore when the gunboat on which the soldier served was sunk. I know his widow. She is very poor and very deserving. She presents a petition in her behalf from the most prominent people in the city where she lives. I think there is presented here a specially meritorious case. If she be granted a pension for the rest of her life, she will not receive as much as her husband would have been entitled to if he had procured the proof which was discovered after his death. I think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. KILGORE. Do I understand that the committee reported adversely on this claim?

Mr. ROWELL. The Senate committee reported favorably and the House adversely. The bill was passed in the Senate.

Mr. KILGORE. I think I would be inclined to stand by the committee as usual. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROWELL. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact——

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, no; I am satisfied with the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with favorable recommendation.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 15.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

Mr. ROWELL. Very well; if that point is made I will withdraw the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

H. S. SAYRE.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 968) granting a pension to H. S. Sayre. I will state that I was in the cloak-room when my name was called.

There being no objection, the bill was considered.

It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of H. S. Sayre, late captain of an independent company of scouts of the State of West Virginia, who served in the war of the rebellion, at the rate of $24 per month.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 968) for the relief of H. S. Sayre, submit the following report:

Said Holdridge S. Sayre recruited a company of State scouts in Doddridge County, West Virginia, which, on the 25th day of October, 1863, selected him as captain, and on the 4th day of November of said year he was duly commissioned by the governor of said State as captain for one year. Said company was mustered out of service on the 20th day of June, 1864, and he in the mean time was paid with the men of his company as in active service. The company was armed, clothed, and supplied with commissary stores by the United States Government, and their service was useful and efficient in protecting the loyal people of the State and in co-operating with United States forces. That while engaged in such service and in the line of his duty, on the 17th day of December, 1863, he was thrown from his horse on his back across a rail and severely injured, so that he vomited blood and passed blood through his urine, from which injury he has never recovered. That he is unable to perform manual labor on account of such injuries without great pain, and at times he is unable to work at all from said injuries, although he has no other means of making a living than by manual labor.

About the 25th day of April, 1864, while engaged in said service, the company was fired upon by the Confederates, and said Holdridge S. Sayre received a gunshot wound in the right hand, causing the loss of the use of two fingers, and making it impossible to close the hand.

After the expiration of his service of scout, he recruited a company for the United States service, but was himself refused muster on account of disability. He was a sound man at the time of entering said service, to which fact three members of his company testify, and that they were with him at the time he received his injuries and wound, and also the effect they had upon him. Two physicians testify to the continuance of and increasing disability, now almost total, arising from said injuries and wound.

In view of the facts that his injuries were received in the service of his country, and that by reason of them he was unable to be mustered into the United States Army when he applied for that purpose, your committee are of the opinion that relief asked for in the bill ought to be granted. We therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment, to wit, strike out after the word "rebellion" where it occurs in the bill the words "at the rate of $24 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the work accomplished by the Pension Department and why certain pension bills were not approved by the President can be obtained in the annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions, a perusal of which reveals interesting and instructive facts. Within the last quarter of a century the pension system has developed from an inconsiderable office to a great bureau, whose operations reach out into nearly every hamlet and township of the nation. Its clients are legion, and its bounties and disbursements surpass the most generous dreams of the founders of the American pension system. It shows that there were during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, 60,252 names added to the pension-roll (the largest annual addition in the history of the bureau), making a total of 452,557 pensioners on the rolls at the close of the year.

One million one hundred and sixty-six thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven pension claims have been filed since 1861, and 737,200 claims of all classes have been allowed since that date. The average annual value of the pensions at the close of the year was $125.20. The aggregate annual value of the pensions is $56,707,220.92. There were received 2,698,000 letters during the year. Sixty-five thousand seven hundred and four applications for original pensions were filed. The highest number of claims received was from Ohio; Indiana follows next; then New York and Pennsylvania; the least number of claims came from Montana, and from South Carolina none were received.

The Adjutant-General of the Army removed 1,110 charges of desertion from the military records of that many volunteer soldiers of the late war, the most of which referred to pending pension claims. Twenty-six thousand five hundred and eighty-one claims were filed under the Mexican pension act.

The work of the final adjudicating boards is practically up to date. The roster of the medical officers of the late war, with their post-office addresses, is nearly completed, and makes a record invaluable to claimants in their efforts to obtain necessary evidence. The work of restoring to claimants fees improperly obtained by attorneys is very gratifying. The spirit of the bureau is, no compromise with those willfully or intentionally guilty, and no prosecution of those who sin through ignorance or without motive against the pension laws and who are willing to make restitution when the same is demanded of them. Special examiners submitted an average of eleven reports and fifty-six depositions per month, at a cost of $12.40 per report, an increase of nearly one-half report per man and a decrease in the cost of one-fourth in each case.

Over 88 per cent. of all pensions are paid by the pension agents within 10 days after the quarterly payments are due, and payments can not be made more rapidly without multiplying agencies. One hundred thousand cases of increase of pensions under recent legislation have been settled without expense or delay to the pensioners.

A new and unique feature of the report is a discussion of special pension acts and their relation to the administration of the general pension laws. It shows the various stages through which a special act passes from its receipt at the Executive Mansion to its receipt by the pensioner. In addition, a table is furnished showing the total number of special pension acts which have become laws since 1861, as follows:

1861–'65 (Lincoln)	41
1865–'69 (Johnson)	431
1869–'77 (Grant)	490
1877–'81 (Hayes)	303
1881–'85 (Garfield and Arthur)	736
Total	2,001
1885–'88 (Cleveland)	1,369
Grand total	3,370

It appears that while during President Cleveland's administration thirteen hundred and sixty-nine special acts became laws, while one hundred and ninety-one were vetoed, of this number seventeen were vetoed in the interest of claimants, because they would be entitled to a greater amount under the general law. These seventeen cases were afterwards allowed by the Pension Bureau, and saved the pensioners $17,249 more than they would have received had the special acts become laws. Twelve were vetoed because the charge of desertion or dishonorable discharge stained the military records of the soldiers. Two dependent fathers' claims were vetoed because the fathers abandoned their sons while said sons were infants and never resumed the care and custody of them, nor did they manifest any interest in them until after their death, when these fathers became applicants for pension. Two cases because they were duplicates of precisely the same special acts already approved by the Executive and in full force. Seven because the death cause was suicide and had no connection with the military service. One hundred and twenty-one because soldiers' disabilities or deaths were in no wise due to the service, but arose from causes entirely distinct therefrom. Seventeen because the cases were pending in the Pension Bureau, where they were being properly investigated. These cases also involved arrears. Nine because the special acts fixed no rate and the claimants were now receiving pension commensurate with the disability found to exist by competent boards of surgeons, and a special act would be of no benefit. Two more dependent cases because no dependence was shown by the evidence on file. One because the President refused to set aside the limitations fixed by the law of 1879, governing arrears, and one because the beneficiary was dead at the time of the passage of the special act.

Ninety-three of these vetoed claims had been rejected by the Pension Bureau prior to July 1, 1885, and fifty-four subsequent to that time; three were rejected before and after that date; thirty were pending unsettled in the Pension Bureau, and no applications under the general law had ever been filed in eleven.

In connection with the foregoing it may be interesting to state that in the fiscal years from July 1, 1882, to June 30, 1885, there were issued 191,221 certificates of all classes; to June 30, 1888, 359,537; making an increase for the last three years of 168,316.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY JANE JELLY.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 10825) granting a pension to Mary Jane Jelly.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws, the name of Mary Jane Jelly, widow of Frank Trask, late a private in Company F, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10825) granting a pension to Mary Jane Jelly, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Mary Jane Jelly was the widow of Frank Trask, who was killed in battle of Antietam September 17, 1862, while serving as corporal of Company F, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and on account of whose death she drew pension until her marriage with one John Jelly, December 10, 1868. The soldier also left surviving him a minor child, who drew pension after the widow's remarriage until June 23, 1877, when it terminated under the limitation of the general pension laws.

Mary Jane Jelly continued to live with her second husband until about the 1st day of May, 1869, when a separation became necessary because of his intemperate habits, and never thereafter until his death, March 20, 1874, did she live with him as his wife.

From medical evidence before your committee it appears that the proposed beneficiary has for many years been and is now a complete invalid by reason of hemorrhoidal and uterine troubles, recovery from which, in the opinion of the attending physician, is improbable because of age. She has no income from any source, and is consequently dependent upon others for support.

The case comes clearly within a well-established rule of the House, and as the necessities for Congressional relief are so well shown by the evidence submitted, your committee unhesitatingly return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM M. DEAN.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I ask the present consideration of the bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William M. Dean.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William M. Dean, late a member of Company G, Fifteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William M. Dean, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is as follows:

"These facts are satisfactorily established in this case: That the claimant was a sound man when he entered service; that during service he suffered from chills and fever, chronic diarrhea, and from measles, which occasioned disease of throat; and that for these combined disabilities and their continuance he was pensioned first at $2 per month from April, 1862, at $6 from September, 1865, and at $12 from February, 1878.

"A mental aberration, of which he gave occasional indications after his army service, and which affected him particularly after attacks of chills and fever, increased upon him until he has become insane. The difficulty in the case before the Pension Bureau is in connecting the insanity pathologically with the diseases for which he is pensioned. But there is a large amount of testimony, too voluminous to be abstracted, which shows that while in service he was reduced to a state of extreme nervous prostration, and that since his discharge he has been constantly subject to nervous attacks, interfering with the employments in which he was engaged, and which degenerated into melancholia and finally into settled insanity. These conditions followed each other, as appears by the mass of evidence, in progression sufficiently regular and continuous to justify the committee in finding the insanity to be an ultimate result of his army service.

"The claimant's wife has been acting for some years as his guardian; they are utterly destitute of property, and subsist on the charity of friends and of organizations with which he was connected in his better days. His insanity is of a harmless type, but, with his feebleness, requiring constant watchfulness and care, and the necessity of attendance on him prevents his wife from earning anything for their support.

"It is as hard a case as can be conceived, and, with the reasonable presumptions offered by the testimony, the committee do not hesitate to recommend the passage of the bill."

A careful examination of the evidence discloses the fact that soldier, after nearly three years honorable and faithful service, became broken down in health, and gradually his mind failed, until now he is unable to take care of himself. While the evidence may not be sufficiently positive to permit the Pension Bureau to accept this condition as sequential to the diseases admitted to be chargeable to the service, yet the most thorough special examination failed to discover any other cause therefor. In the absence of any adverse evidence your committee are of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore return the accompanying bill with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the words "seventy-two," in line 5, and insert therein the word "fifty;" also by striking out the words "William M. Dean," in the bill and the title of the same, and insert therein instead the words "William R. Dean."

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JESSE SPENCER.

Mr. RYAN. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9663) granting a pension to Jesse Spencer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse Spencer, late a private of Company M, Second Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 9663, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The claimant enlisted as a private in Company M, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, October 1, 1861, and was honorably discharged October 1, 1864.

In application filed February 5, 1882, he alleges that while in line of duty at Philadelphia, Pa., he contracted measles in February, 1862, resulting in disease of heart.

The claim was rejected on the ground of no record of alleged disease of heart, nor any competent evidence connecting the same with service or with the measles which claimant had in service.

The evidence is conclusive that claimant prior to and at the time of enlistment was a strong, healthy man and free from heart disease.

Claimant alleges that the first appearance of heart disease was while he was in Cherry Street Hospital, Philadelphia, with measles. He had no medical treatment, for the reason he had no confidence in medical skill for that disease. He alleges that he has been in trouble with said heart disease ever since his discharge from the Army, and has been unable most of the time to do but little manual labor, and since 1880 has scarcely done anything.

Lewis Kirk testifies—

"That he has been intimately acquainted with claimant for twenty-five years; has been a frequent visitor at his house, and knows that since he returned from the Army he has been regularly afflicted with heart disease. He has worked with him at many different times when an attack would come on, almost completely prostrating him for some hours, and unfitting him for labor for several days. Any sudden exertion brings on an attack."

Lieutenant Ferguson—

"Has known claimant many years. During the service he sometimes complained of something wrong, but was never off duty. Since the war he has known him all the time, sees him often, and knows that he is troubled with what is said to be heart disease. He is no doctor, but derives his information from his own knowledge and what he has been told by those who ought to know. He has often to lie down during spells of pain about the heart."

Isaac Spencer, who has been intimately acquainted with him since the war, knows that plaintiff is suffering with heart disease contracted while in the Army, making it impossible for him to perform hard labor.

Others testify to about the same state of facts, and the committee believe that it is established beyond a reasonable doubt that the claimant was sound prior to enlistment; that the heart disease for which he asks relief was incurred while in the line of duty, and that said disability has continued to the present time.

The committee therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY M. ORD.

Mr. SAWYER. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 2663) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary M. Ord.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Mary M. Ord, widow of the late General E. O. C. Ord, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2663) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary M. Ord, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the widow of the late Maj. Gen. E. O. C. Ord.

Upon the death of General Ord the following order was issued by the War Department:

"HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, July 24, 1883.

"With profound sorrow the General of the Army announces the death at Havana, Cuba, at 7 o'clock on the evening of the 22d instant, of Maj. Gen. Edward O. C. Ord, retired, and lately brigadier-general and brevet major-general on the active list.

"General Ord was graduated at the Military Academy and appointed second lieutenant in the Third Artillery July 1, 1839. Having passed through the several grades, including that of lieutenant-colonel in the artillery arm, he received his appointment as brigadier-general of the permanent establishment on the 26th of July, 1866. He had, on the 14th of September, 1861, for service in war, been appointed brigadier-general of volunteers, and on the 2d of May, 1862, major-general of volunteers. He was mustered out of the volunteer service September 1, 1866.

"For gallant services in action at Dranesville, Va., Iuka, Miss., the Hatchie, Miss., and at the assault of Fort Harrison, Va., he received successively the brevets of lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brigadier-general, and major-general, United States Army. He served in the Florida war against the Seminole Indians, on the Pacific coast in the war against Mexico, and in Indian campaigns on the same coast.

"In the Army of the Potomac he was brigade and division commander, in the Army of the Tennessee he commanded the left wing from August to September, 1862, and subsequently he commanded successively the Thirteenth, Eighth, Eighteenth, and Twenty-fourth Corps, and the Army of the James. He was severely wounded in the battle of the Hatchie, Miss., and was wounded in the assault and capture of Fort Harrison, Va.

"Since the late war he has at different times commanded the Departments of Virginia, the Ohio, Arkansas, California, the Platte, Texas, and the Fourth Military District.

"He was retired on the 6th day of December, 1880, and by act of Congress approved January 28, 1881, he became a major-general on the retired-list. Retirement did not close his active life, for immediately thereafter he engaged in civil pursuits and continued therein until death suddenly came upon him.

"Distinguished among his country's defenders, General Ord was a soldier of national repute. Through his long military service, reaching towards half a century, his career has been marked by faithful, devoted, and intelligent discharge of duty, by personal gallantry, by honest administration, and by a firmness which was not weakened by his great kindness of heart. As his intimate associate since boyhood, the General here bears testimony of him that a more unselfish, manly, and patriotic person never lived.

"By command of General Sherman.

"GEO. D. RUGGLES,
"Acting Adjutant-General."

Mrs. Ord is now in receipt of a pension of $50 per month, under act of Congress, approved July 5, 1884. She was married to General Ord October 15, 1854, at San Francisco, Cal., and is now a resident of that State. Having exhausted her limited means in support of an invalid daughter, she is now poor and not able to maintain hereself and daughter, who is dependent upon her on present pension, which is her only resource.

In view of her dependence and the long and eminent services of her gallant husband, your committee report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass, amending the same by striking out the words "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-five."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment recommended by the committee will be concurred in.

Mr. CHEADLE. There is objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. SAWYER. If the question of a quorum is to be raised, I will withdraw the bill and ask the consideration of another.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is withdrawn, if there be no objection.

Mr. WEBER. I understood the request was based on the supposition that a quorum would be called?

Mr. SAWYER. I assumed that the gentleman from Indiana will raise the question of no quorum, when he objected; and hence I will withdraw the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar in the absence of objection.

There was no objection.

ANSON WARD.

Mr. SAWYER. I now call up the bill (H. R. 5740) granting a pension to Anson Ward.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to place the name of Anson Ward, of Rockford, Ill., late private of Company K, Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

That the said Anson Ward enlisted August 5, 1862, as a private in Company K of the Seventy-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; that he was a faithful soldier during the war and was honorably discharged June 10, 1865; that on the 28th of December, 1862, while in the line of duty at Nolensville, Tenn., he was severely attacked with rheumatism, caused by hardships endured in the service, and that he has been afflicted continually ever since; that his system was so shattered that his mind became affected, and on June 9, 1875, he was confined in the Northern Hospital for Insane at Elgin, Ill., and remained there until April 26, 1876, and that the cause of his insanity is clearly traceable to rheumatism, and the ground on which his claim for pension was rejected was that at the time of filing said claim the disability shown did not exist in a pensionable degree; that he is not able to perform manual labor, and were it not for the disabilities incurred in the service would be abundantly able to provide for himself.

The committee have therefore concluded that he is justly entitled to a pension, and respectfully recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BETSEY WILLIAMS.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 9371) granting a pension to Betsey Williams, widow of William R. Williams, private Company C, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Betsey Williams, widow of William R. Williams, late private Company C, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate prescribed by existing provisions of law.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

William R. Williams, husband of Betsey Williams, was pensioned at the rate of $4 per month for hernia. The widow filed claim for pension, alleging that her husband died from the effects of the disease for which he was pensioned. The claim was rejected on the ground that it was not proved that the diseases which caused her husband's death were connected as results with his military service.

Dr. J. W. O'Harra, the physician who attended the soldier during his last illness, testifies that—

"The remote cause of his death was a hernia contracted in the Army, the hernia producing excessive constipation and strangury, thus producing apoplexy, retarding the free circulation of blood and finally paralysis, of which he died. He was of an apoplectic diathesis. My first visit was March 30, 1881; April 4, 7, 12, 16, and 23, which was the last visit, then having little encouragement, being hopelessly paralyzed. Had not much acquaintance with him previous to his last illness, but learned from the family that his health had been failing for some time, having had attacks of apoplexy. He complained much of constipation and impairment of the secretions, no doubt from paralysis, accompanied by vacant stare, slow, full pulse, flushed face; in fact, all the apoplectic symptoms."

The only evidence against the testimony of the attending physician is the opinion of the medical referee, which, in the opinion of the committee, should not cause a rejection of the claim.

The committee therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA BOPPELL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 9784) granting a pension to Anna Boppell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anna Boppell, widow of Martin Boppell, late of Company E, One hundred and fifty-third Regiment New York State Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the widow of Martin Boppell, who served as a private in Company E, One hundred and fifty-third Regiment of New York Volunteers. The records of the War Department show that Martin Boppell enlisted in said company August 22, 1862, and was discharged November 28, 1864, in consequence of the amputation of his right arm, caused by a gunshot wound received September 19, 1864, at Winchester, Va., while in service. The soldier was pensioned therefor March 15, 1865, and drew pension until the date of his death, July 25, 1882. The widow's claim has been rejected by Pension Office on the ground that soldier's death is not due to service. Soldier's arm was amputated close to the shoulder. The evidence shows that he had several times fallen in consequence of the loss of his right arm, by which he was more or less injured. It shows that on the evening of July 15, 1882, he tripped and fell, striking upon a broken bottle, receiving a severe and serious wound in his back, and that the fall was in no way the result of bad habits or the use of liquor. Medical aid was summoned, but despite the efforts of two physicians blood-poisoning set in, from which he died July 25, 1882. The evidence describing all the particulars of the fall and injury clearly shows that had the soldier had his right arm he would not hav received the injury that caused his death. The widow is the mother of three children, two of whom are under sixteen years of age.

Your committee believe the claim is meritorious and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NANCY J. COTNER.

Mr. SHIVELY. I call up the bill (H. R. 10388) granting a pension to Nancy J. Cotner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Nancy J. Cotner, dependent sister of Thomas Cotner, late private Company E, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

Nancy J. Cotner, the applicant, was the sister of Thomas Cotner, who was a member of Company E, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteers, and was killed in battle. The said applicant was the daughter of George Cotner, some time since deceased, and who, at the time of the enlistment of the said Thomas Cotner, was a man of feeble health and very limited means, and, being about sixty-five years of age, was dependent to a great extent for his subsistence and that of his daughter, the claimant herein, upon his said son.

It is shown by evidence that said Nancy J. Cotner was from childhood of feeble mind and very poor health, and has continued in that condition to the present time. It also appears that she has no means of support excepting her father and brother, and that since their death she has been thrown upon the charities of her neighbors and friends, and now has no means whatever, and is totally unable to support herself. There is no widow entitled to pension.

It seems to the committee that this is a case which strongly appeals for Congressional action, and we therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCIS DE FREITAS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 2051) granting an increase of pension to Francis De Freitas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to all the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis De Freitas, who was a private in Company G, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

That the claimant is now drawing a pension of $8 per month for gunshot wound in right breast. Department refuses increase on ground that disability is not total. Antonio Vasconcellos testifies that he has known claimant thirty years; that the wound in his breast has broken out afresh; that it is now a running sore; that by reason of said wound he is totally disabled, and at times he requires an attendant.

John Stirling Nimens testifies:

"That he is a near neighbor of claimant; that he sees him daily and helps him in the care of his wound; that said wound is a running sore, requiring constant attendance, and that by reason of said wound claimant is totally disabled and unable to care for himself without assistance."

Dr. David Prince, of Jacksonville, Ill., testifies:

"That claimant is now totally disabled, and it is probable that his capability for any physical labor is permanently impaired."

Your committee conclude from the testimony in this case that the soldier is entitled to the increase of pension asked, and we therefore respectfully recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend that bill by adding the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEAMAN L. BOWERS.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I call up the bill (H. R. 10433) for the relief of Leaman L. Bowers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Leaman L. Bowers, late second sergeant of Company H of the Tenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Reserves, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

Leaman L. Bowers was mustered as second sergeant of Company H, Tenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Reserves, on July 21, 1861. He was captured at the battle of Fredericksburgh in December, 1862. He was greatly exposed and subjected to many hardships on the march to Richmond as a prisoner. He was in Libby Prison from December, 1862, to April, 1863.

The evidence clearly shows that claimant was sick of inflammatory rheumatism during his imprisonment, from which he suffered terribly during the greater part of his imprisonment. His heart became involved as a result of the disease. These facts abundantly appear from the records, both Confederate and Union.

The testimony shows that his heart has been diseased ever since his discharge from the service in 1864. The medical testimony shows that this heart disease has become so aggravated as to practically unfit him for manual labor.

There can be no doubt that claimant should be pensioned if the disability from which he is suffering was incurred in the line of duty while in the service. The claim was rejected on the sole ground that claimant had had inflammatory rheumatism before his enlistment. That is true. The claimant, who made a frank and manly statement of his whole case, said that in 1848 or 1849 he had an attack of inflammatory rheumatism from which he soon recovered. That the attack at that time was confined wholly to his lower limbs. He was never troubled with it before that time nor afterwards prior to h s imprisonment in Libby.

The testimony shows that at the date of his enlistment he was a strong and vigorous man.

James Lish testified that he and claimant were raised in the same county in Pennsylvania and that he had known claimant well up to the date of his enlistment. Mr. Lish says:

"He (claimant) was known as the stoutest and toughest young man in the county. When he enlisted in the Army he was as sound and healthy as he ever had been. I saw him in the Army several times. I saw him again soon after the war and found his health very bad. He seemed to me a perfect wreck—so much so that he was entirely unable to make a support for himself and family by manual labor, and has continued in that condition ever since. I have been at his house frequently since the war and know this to be the fact."

There is testimony of other witnesses to the same effect. Indeed, there is no testimony, medical or otherwise, to the contrary.

Dr. Amos H. Caffee, examining surgeon, says he has examined claimant and finds him suffering from chronic rheumatism, resulting in chronic valvular disease of the heart, and, in his opinion, claimant was entitled to be rated at $8 per month.

Drs. Underwood and Ackason, who also examined claimant, concur in saying that they consider his condition dangerous, so much so as to make life very uncertain. They say his condition is such as to unfit him for much physical exertion.

There is no conflict in the testimony. We are at a loss to understand why the claim was rejected. The statement of the reviewer is that it was rejected because claimant admitted he had an attack of rheumatism in his legs in 1848 or 1849. The rejection is predicated wholly on that statement. But, since that attack was slight and claimant had so entirely recovered from it that he was regarded as an unusually strong and healthy man at the date of his enlistment, and since it clearly appears that the attack of inflammatory rheumatism which he suffered in his arms and breast in 1862-'63 was the direct result of exposure and hardship while a prisoner of war, and that he has never recovered from that attack, your committee think Mr. Bowers is entitled to a pension, and report the bill back accordingly with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY ANN CROSS AND OTHERS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 5985) to increase the pension of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardner, and Mrs. Lillie May Pavy to $30 per month.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the names of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, widow of Sergt. William H. Cross; Minnie L. Gardner, widow of Sergt. Hampton S. Gardener, and Lillie May Pavy, widow of Dr. Octave Pavy, on the pension-roll at the rate of $30 a month each, in place of that of $12 a month now allowed; the said William H. Cross, Hampton S. Gardner, and Octave Pavy having served in the late Arctic expedition under Greely and lost their lives in consequence.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to increase the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardener, and Mrs. Lilla May Pavy to $30 per month."

The report (by Mr. RUSSELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5985) increasing the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardiner, and Mrs. Lilla May Pavy to $30 per month, have considered the same and report as follows:

Mrs. Cross and Mrs. Gardiner are the widows of the late William H. Cross and Hampden S. Gardiner, of the general service, United States Army; and Mrs. Pavy the widow of Dr. Octave P. Pavy, late acting assistant surgeon United States Army. These soldiers were members of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition into the Arctic regions under Lieut. (now General) A. W. Greely, and all met their death from starvation "on the south side of Buchanan Strait, half-way between Cape Sabine and Cocked Hat Island."

Concerning the incidents and results of that terrible expedition no detailed reference is necessary. They form part of history, and are fresh in the minds of everybody.

Mrs. Cross and Mrs. Gardiner are in receipt of pensions at the rate of $12 per month, and Mrs. Pavy of one at $17 per month.

All three of the claimants are without any property and are dependent upon their own labor for support. Concerning Mrs. Gardiner, Hon. Z. B. VANCE, under date of January 15, 1885, states:

"I am well acquainted with her. She is in a very destitute condition, and is almost powerless to work on account of diseased eyes."

Mrs. Cross has depending upon her a family of children and an invalid sister, and her only means of subsistence is a small salary and her pension. Mrs. Pavy is likewise dependent upon her daily labor, and, as she has expressed it, "Dares not succumb to illness oftentimes threatened from overwork."

Your committee are of the opinion that the peculiar circumstances surrounding the cases of these widows warrant the granting of the relief they seek. The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it do pass; amended, however, by changing the words "Gardner" and "Lillie," wherever they appear in the bill, to "Gardiner" and "Lilla," respectively.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. STRUBLE. There is another amendment which should be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee propose to amend the bill in line 9 by inserting after the word "twelve" the words "and seventeen."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM R. RODGERS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 11362) for the relief of William R. Rodgers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the rate of pension now allowed to William R. Rodgers, late a private of Company F, of the Twenty-seventh Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, war of 1861, under certificate numbered 252404, from the sum of $8 per month to the sum of $50 per month.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 511) granting a pension to William R. Rodgers, having considered the same, report as follows:

The claimant enlisted as a private in Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, war of 1861, on the 25th day of August, 1862, and was discharged July 11, 1865. On the 14th day of August, 1879, he applied for a pension, which was granted him October 29, 1883, at the rate of $4 per month, for "disease of the eyes," and which was afterwards increased to $8 per month. Afterwards he again applied for an increase of his pension for total blindness, but his application was rejected. He is now, and since December, 1875, has been stone blind.

Special Examiner Samuel Woods, in his report in the case, says: "The claimant, William R. Rodgers, is so utterly blind that the full glare of an electric lamp gives him no sense of light." The only question in the case is whether this blindness was due to his military service, or to an injury to his right eye received in November, 1875. The case excited a great deal of discussion in the Pension Office, and it was maintained there on the one hand that the injury to the right eye not only caused the loss of that eye, but through sympathy the loss of the left eye also; while on the other hand it was claimed that the disease (the result of measles contracted in the service) was of a character that would result in total blindness, and that the injury to the right eye simply hastened that result. Finally all doubts were resolved against the soldier, and he was granted a pension of $8 per month for "disease of eyes," but was refused the rate of $72 per month for total blindness.

The original application for pension was based on rheumatism and disease of eyes, and Special Examiner Samuel Woods, in his report on this application, in which he recommended the admission of the claim "for a portion of the disability," says:

"My reasons, which I think will be sustained by the evidence of such of the witnesses as had intimate personal knowledge of the claimant, are as follows: (1) The soldier contracted measles while in service and line of duty; (2) that impairment of sight followed and was consequent upon measles so incurred; (3) that the impairment of sight and partial disability were continuous until he was virtually blind in the left eye (being unable to distinguish objects, though able to discern light) as early as 1873; (4) that the right eye was impaired, but while yet useful, its sight was destroyed by an accident in the fall of 1875."

In speaking of the type of measles from which the soldier suffered this examiner says:

"His family took it; one of his daughters died; his eldest son suffered with bad eyes on account of it, and shortly after claimant returned home in 1865 the son's left eye burst, and its sight was forever gone."

Afterwards, in an additional report made some months later on a further examination of the case, he says:

"My opinion as to the justice of the claim of William R. Rodgers has not changed one iota. That opinion was formed from knowledge of the manner in which the witnesses received their impressions as well as from the evidence itself. I beg pardon in advance for any violation of the new rule in regard to summaries, but would prefer to risk a reprimand rather than to see so worthy and so needy a claim rejected without entering my earnest protest. To do less appears to me dereliction of duty. * * * That except the immediate loss of the then failing sight of the right eye by accident in the ore bench the claimant's disabilities are due to and consequent upon his Army service; that he is a cheery, honest, simple-minded man, who will not intentionally make a false statement, and that he is a worthy applicant for pension."

As evidence of the state of doubt in which the officials of the Pension Office found themselves we quote from Dr. Hood, then medical referee, who, October 14, 1884, addressed Colonel Clarke, Acting Commissioner, as follows:

"That the soldier suffered from disease of the eyes as a sequel of measles there seems to be no question, but it is impossible to say with any certainty what would have been the ultimatum of the condition. The probability is that entire loss of vision would not have resulted, since, though many cases of conjunctivitis, etc., and other diseased states of the eyes follow upon measles, it is very rarely that loss of vision follows. But there is another view of the case and that is stated in this question. Is it probable that the condition of the eyes resulting from the attack of measles, particularly that of the left eye, was such as that the injury incurred (of right eye) was destructive in its effects? It is my judgment that giving the doubt to the claimant that question must be answered affirmatively. A diseased condition exists; more than that, a diseased condition with disposition to persistence and not recovery. To that condition are superadded the effects of injury; the result in the end is the destruction of both eyes. That is to say, it should seem wholly probable but that for the pre-existent disease caused by the attack of measles, the injury of 1875 would not have made enucleation of the right eye necessary, and thus the subject of the injury would not have wholly lost vision." * * *

And yet they finally allowed him but $8 per month.

The soldier requires the constant care and attention of another person, and has no means of support other than the small pension now paid him. We think the soldier is entitled to a pension of $50 per month, and we offer as a substitute for the bill under consideration the bill herewith presented, and recommend the passage of the substitute bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PATRICK WELCH.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3130) granting a pension to Patrick Welch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Welch, late of the United States Navy, war of the rebellion.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3130) granting a pension to Patrick Welch, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

Patrick Welch, the claimant under this bill, enlisted March 17, 1865, as landsman in the United States Navy, and was discharged October 18, 1865. He made application for pension February 7, 1880, alleging that at Bayou Sara, Miss., about September 26, 1865, he contracted piles.

The records of the Navy Department show that he was admitted to the hospital at New Orleans, July 26, 1865, "with hemorrhoids," and was sent North July 31, 1865. He was examined under date of July 27, and found that his disease, piles, rendered him unfit for service, and that in duration, permanent; and from the hospital ticket on which he was admitted it was believed it originated prior to enlistment, and his discharge was recommended. The claimant states that he is unable to furnish medical testimony as to prior soundness for the reason "that he had no family doctor." He submits, however, in lieu of medical testimony, the affidavits of friends and neighbors, whose statements are direct and positive as to the prior soundness of the claimant. The claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions October 4, 1882, on the ground—

"That it is shown by the record of the Navy Department that claimant's disability, for which he claims pension, existed prior to his enlistment."

Dr. John J. Gilmer, late surgeon Thirty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers, swears to treatment for piles in 1873, 1874, and 1875, and rates his disability at one-fourth.

D. W. Else, M. D., swears to treatment for piles from 1877, 1878, and 1879, and makes same rating.

Under date of May 16, 1881, S. D. Hall, United States examining surgeon at Concordia, Kans., reports to the Commissioner that—

"On thorough examination he finds one of the worst cases of piles that it has ever been his lot to witness. * * * That he is unable to perform any manual labor at all, and has not been for a number of years; has not been able to do a full day's work since coming out of the service."

He rates him at total third grade, $18.

Your committee feel disposed to accept the testimony of the creditable gentlemen who have made affidavits concerning the prior soundness of the claimant, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE A. WASHBURN.

Mr. VANCE. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 3236) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn, late major Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of George A. Washburn, late major of the Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers, at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the amount per month ($45) he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3236) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn, late major Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers, have had same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The committee have carefully examined all the evidence on file in the case, and find the facts, as set forth in the report of the Senate committee, which is made a part of this report, to warrant favorable action on pensioner's request for an increase, and therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is as follows:

"Claimant is now receiving a pension of $45 on account of gunshot wound of left thigh. This pension was granted by a special act of Congress approved February 28, 1885. The present bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on his name on the pension-roll at the rate of $100 per month.

"The testimony of Dr. C. S. May and A. S. Warner, late surgeon of claimant's regiment, considered by the committee at the time that the increase from $25 to $45 per month was recommended, showed that claimant was in a helpless condition at that time, suffering from lameness, asthma, bronchitis, wounds of the pelvis, sacrum, ilium, ischium, and left teste, and that he required the attendance of another person.

"Since the time above referred to testimony has been filed as follows: In affidavit filed August 7, 1886, Charles B. Rowell, of Aiken, S. C., testifies that during the past two years claimant has frequently been confined to his bed by reason of gunshot wound through his body, disease of lungs and throat, and difficult breathing, with symptoms of blood poisoning; that claimant has been compelled to leave his northern home on account of the disabilities above mentioned. This testimony is corroborated by the testimony of Dr. T. G. Croft and D. F. McEwen, of Aiken, S. C.

"In affidavit executed June 21, 1888, Dr. A. H. Ashley, of Aiken, S. C., testifies that claimant is suffering from severe chronic bronchitis, with asthma, and heart and kidney trouble, caused by a gunshot wound which has not healed; that claimant is not able to perform any kind of labor, or to attend to any kind of business, but requires the constant attendance of one or more persons both day and night, and under no circumstances is it safe to leave him alone.

"In an affidavit executed June 22, 1888, Dr. B. F. Wyman, of Aiken, S. C., testifies substantially as above.

"The evidence shows that claimant is a physical wreck, wholly unable to care for himself, and needs the constant aid and attendance of another person.

"Favorable action is warranted by the facts in the case, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment: Strike out the words 'one hundred' in the sixth line and insert the words 'seventy-two.'"

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. I desire to call up the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LANE. I object to calling up a bill out of the regular order. [To Mr. THOMPSON, of California.] Is it your bill?

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. It is not.

Mr. LANE. Then I object.

MYRA SINCLAIR.

Mr. WADE. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 10488) granting a pension to Myra Sinclair.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Myra Sinclair, a volunteer nurse in the late war, giving her the sum of $25 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10488) granting a pension to Myra Sinclair, submit the following report:

The evidence filed with the committee shows clearly the following facts:

That the beneficiary is now a widow and upwards of seventy-four years of age, having been a widow for about thirty years; that she is now poor and dependent upon others for support.

That in October, 1862, she entered upon her duties of nurse as nurse at the General Hospital, West's Building, Baltimore, Md., where she remained until March, 1864; that she acted as matron of that hospital.

That she discharged her duties in a very faithful and satisfactory manner.

Her faithfulness as a nurse and her kind discharge of her duties are fully shown by the certificate of Mrs. Dorothy L. Dix; Capt. S. A. Day, of U. S. Army, and a number of others who were cared for by her while acting as such nurse.

Your committee believe that this faithful nurse, now old and poor, is fully entitled to relief, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass with an amendment striking out the words "twenty-five," in the sixth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Mr. WADE. I move to non-concur in the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. STRUBLE. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. What is the amendment?

Mr. WADE. The amendment offered by the committee strikes out $25 and inserts $12. A number of these bills have passed—one to-night—for $30. This woman is just as worthy as the woman who gets $30. I know the character of the service she rendered, and it was just as valuable service as that of Mrs. Couzins, who to-night has been allowed a pension of $30.

Mr. CHEADLE. I hope the amendment of the committee will not be concurred in. There ought to be some uniformity in these bills. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was put; and there were—ayes 21, noes 15.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to strike out "$12" and insert "$20;" and I make that motion for the reason that we have passed a bill to-night giving a pension to a nurse at the rate of $30 per month. We have also passed others giving $25 a month.

Mr. MAISH. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAISH. We have already adopted the amendment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to make an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But the committee has already fixed the amount.

Mr. STRUBLE. You can move to reconsider.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have carefully examined these cases, and have fixed the rate at $12 where it is shown that a nurse received full pay for the time she served; and where they did not receive pay, and did not incur any disability in the service, they have fixed it at $12. But where it is shown that the nurses served without pay, and received injuries, we fixed it at $25. And we have in four or five cases fixed it at $30. There are twenty-five or thirty cases where it is fixed at $12. I regard any increase in this case as a reflection upon the committee, after they have carefully examined the merits of the case. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CHEADLE. I want to be heard a moment. I do not mean to make even a technical reflection upon the committee; but I think that in this tribunal of the people we ought to legislate upon some uniform plan, and upon some system as applicable to one as to another. This woman is seventy years of age. She was in charge of one of the hospitals and rendered valuable services to her country.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAISH. I ask whether a motion to reconsider is in order in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OWEN. I thought the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] was proceeding by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Regular order.

Mr. CHEADLE. It is too late to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object. Let us have a vote.

The question was put, and there were—ayes 32, noes 1.

So the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ALMIRA J. TOWNER.

Mr. WEBER. I call up the bill (H. R. 10908) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira J. Towner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Almira J. Towner, dependent mother of Seth S. Towner, late a private in Company A, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10908) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira J. Towner, submit the following report:

Almira J. Towner, the beneficiary, is the mother of Seth S. Towner, who was a private in Company A, Second Illinois Volunteer Cavalry Regiment, and who enlisted in said regiment September 23, 1862, to serve three years, and died at the St. Louis Hospital, New Orleans, December 16, 1864. He was admitted to the general hospital at Baton Rouge, La., October 11, 1864, from Camp Baton Rouge, with chronic diarrhea and dropsy, and was transferred December 9, 1864, to and was received at St. Louis Hospital, New Orleans, La., December 10, 1864, with parotitis, and died of that disease December 16, 1864, as appears from the report of the Surgeon-General of the date of July 9, 1879.

The papers in the Pension Office show that the soldier left surviving him neither widow nor child, never having been married, and that the claimant is the mother of the soldier; that her husband, the soldier's father, died September 15, 1868; that he was a physician, in poor health, and having but a limited practice. The mother filed her claim for pension, and the same was rejected in 1884—

"On the ground that claimant was not dependent wholly or in part upon the soldier for support at the date of his death. Husband's income was sufficient to and did furnish her a comfortable support."

The evidence furnished the office as to the husband's inability to support the family was not conclusive. The evidence would appear to show that the soldier, previous to his enlistment, contributed of his earnings to the support of the family, and while in the Army sent home money for the same purpose.

The evidence on file and furnished the committee shows that the mother is now and has been for years in very poor and destitute circumstances and wholly blind.

The committee, believing that this is a just and meritorious claim, report favorably upon the bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAPT. WILLIAM J. DULEY.

Mr. WHEELER. I call up the bill (H. R. 9310) granting a pension to Capt. William J. Duley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William J. Duley, chief of scouts, with the rank of captain, in the Army of the Northwest, Maj. Gen. John Pope commanding.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9310) granting a pension to Capt. W. J. Duley, have had the same under careful consideration, and find that the proposed beneficiary of the bill was badly wounded himself and his family grievously outraged and oppressed by the Sioux Indians at the time of their outbreak in Minnesota in 1862. The facts in the case are found to be as follows:

Captain Duley's settlement at Lake Shetek, Murray County, Minnesota, was attacked by the Sioux Indians August 21, 1862. Captain Duley heroically defended himself and his neighbors, killing the chief, Lean Bear, in the combat, but was overpowered after being badly wounded. Three of his family were massacred, and his wife and two of his children taken prisoners.

Immediately upon recovering from his wounds sufficiently to enable him to do so, Captain Duley volunteered his services as scout in the campaign undertaken by General Sibley to punish the Sioux for their outrages previously recited. General Sibley accepted Captain Duley's offer, and he proved to be both brave and sagacious, and as a recognition of the distinguished services rendered by Captain Duley, and to afford him the personal gratification of bearing a personal part in the punishment inflicted upon the savages through whom he had suffered so cruelly, both in person and in his family, he was ordered to superintend the details of the execution of the thirty-eight Indians who were hanged at Mankato, December 26, 1862, and the murderers were hanged under his immediate supervision.

Captain Duley enjoyed in an unusual degree the respect and confidence of his commanding officers while in the service, his strictly moral and temperate habits rendering him thoroughly reliable for the most arduous and perilous duty, and was also highly esteemed by his neighbors and acquaintances.

Maj. Gen. Henry H. Sibley, subsequently governor of Minnesota; S. P. Jennison, late lieutenant-colonel of the Tenth Minnesota Volunteers, engaged in the pursuit, capture, and punishment of the Indians in 1862-'63; William Crooks, late colonel Sixth Minnesota Infantry Volunteers in same expedition; William R. Marshall, late colonel Seventh Minnesota Volunteers in same expedition; ex-Governor L. F. Hubbard, and other citizens of Minnesota who had personal knowledge of Captain Duley's services and sufferings, have united in a petition to Congress, praying Congress to grant Captain Duley some relief, which the committee beg to incorporate in and make part of this report:

ST. PAUL, MINN., June 18, 1885.

The undersigned respectfully memoralize the Congress of the United States to authorize a pension to Capt. William J. Duley, who suffered greatly in his person and family at the time of the Sioux outbreak in Minnesota in August, 1862, and who rendered most valuable service as a scout and otherwise during the expeditions against the authors of the massacre of 1862 and 1863, under General Sibley.

Captain Duley's settlement at Lake Shetek, Murray County, Minnesota, was attacked by the Indians August 21, 1862. He heroically defended his neighbors and family, killed the chief, Lean Bear, but was overpowered. Three of his family were among the massacred, his wife and two children were taken prisoners, and he was badly wounded. As soon as he recovered from his wounds sufficiently he gave his services as a scout in the campaigns against the Indians that avenged the horrible outrages upon the settlers. He was remarkably brave and sagacious, and rendered such distinguished services that at the execution of the thirty-eight Indians hung at Mankato, December 26, 1862, Captain Duley was appointed to superintend the erection of the gallows, and to cut the rope that suspended the drop from which the murderers swung in the air.

Captain Duley enjoyed in an unusual degree the respect and confidence of his commanders. He was a man of strictly temperate and moral habits, always to be relied on for the most difficult and perilous duty.

He is now, in his old age, poor and in infirm health. He suffers from the effects of his wounds and exposure; his wife is an invalid from months of captivity and untold outrages among the Indians.

Captain Duley, not being an enlisted man or mustered into the United States service, is not entitled to pension under the general laws. Hence this application for relief by special act.

Respectfully,

L. F. HUBBARD,
Governor.

S. P. JENNISON,
Late Lieutenant-Colonel Tenth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers on Indian Expedition, 1863.

WILLIAM CROOKS,
Late Colonel Sixth Minnesota Infantry Volunteers in Indian Expeditions of 1862 and 1863.

WM. R. MARSHALL,
Late Colonel Seventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteers in Indian Expeditions of 1862 and 1863, and ex-Governor of Minnesota.

HORACE AUSTIN,
An officer on the expedition and late Governor of Minnesota.

A number of citizens of Minnesota, who were personally acquainted with Captain Duley and were present at the execution of the thirty-eight Indians hereinbefore referred to, have united in a certificate as to the personal part borne by Captaid Duley in said execution, which the committee beg also to incorporate in and make part of this report:

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
County of Blue Earth, City of Mankato:

We, the undersigned, residents and citizens of the said city of Mankato, state that we were well acquainted with Capt. William J. Duley prior to his removal to Colbert County, in the State of Alabama.

That we were present at the execution of the thirty-eight Sioux Indians who were hung at said city of Mankato on the 26th day of December, A. D. 1862, and personally saw said William J. Duley cut the rope that held up the frame upon which said Indians stood at the time of such execution, whereby said Indians were suspended until they were dead. Also that said Duley superintended and assisted in the erection of said gallows.

The committee find further that Captain Duley was never enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States, and therefore, notwithstanding his wounds and services, can not claim a pension under the pension laws; that he is now, in his old age, poor and infirm, and still suffering from the effects of wounds and exposure in his fight with and pursuit of the Indians.

In view of all the facts and circumstances of Captain Duley's case, the committee regard it as one eminently deserving of Congressional interference to grant the relief not otherwise obtainable, and they therefore report the bill back without amendment, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA S. GLASS.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I call up the bill (H. R. 11332) granting a pension to Eliza S. Glass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Eliza S. Glass on the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws, she being the widow of Randall S. Glass, a late soldier in the Union Army of the late war and a member of Company G, One hundred and twenty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11332) granting a pension to Eliza S. Glass, have examined the papers on file, and submit the following report:

Soldier enlisted December 18, 1863, and was discharged April 27, 1864, on surgeon's certificate of disability, showing chronic hemorrhoids and rheumatism, both together producing lameness of back.

He filed a claim for pension December 24, 1879, alleging that on the 15th day of February, 1864, while drilling at Camp Cleveland, Ohio, he received an injury to his back by slipping and falling to the ground, from the effects of which he has never recovered. The claim was rejected on the ground that his disability existed prior to enlistment.

April 26, 1885, soldier died, and his widow filed her application December 3, 1885. The claim was also rejected on the ground that death cause, nervous prostration, and spinal trouble was not due to the service.

It appears from the evidence on file, and on which the rejection by the Pension Office is based, that at the time the soldier was discharged the captain of the company, John J. Manor, gave information to the surgeon of the regiment that the soldier had been injured prior to his enlistment by falling from a load of hay, injuring his spine. The surgeon thereupon indorsed soldier's discharge with the statement that soldier's disability was chronic, and was not contracted in the military service.

Soldier, in support of his claim, furnishes the testimony of three comrades who were present when he received his injury, who saw him fall, who know of his sufferings, and his inability to perform military service up to the time of his discharge.

Dr. William Tripp, surgeon of soldier's regiment, in an affidavit admits having treated him for sprained back at the time, but says that as it was of recent occurrence and short standing he concluded it would get well quickly, and therefore did not include it as part of the cause of disability.

Dr. J. W. Failing testifies that he was soldier's physician previous to his enlistment, and that he was in good health and free from disability at that time. He also treated him immediately after discharge and up to 1881. He describes soldier's disability as rheumatism of the muscles of the back.

There is a mass of evidence establishing prior soundness. Seventeen of his neighbors who had known him intimately before the war, and who had seen and worked with him daily, testify to his having been a sound, healthy man, and free from any disability, and as many more testify that from his discharge up to his death he was in feeble health, physically weak, and unable to perform manual labor.

Your committee are of the opinion that the soldier's widow is clearly entitled to a pension. The uncorroborated statement of the soldier's captain that the disability existed prior to enlistment is abundantly refuted by the testimony of seventeen neighbors and the family physician. His condition since his discharge showed continued suffering and increased disability up to his death, and his family physician testifies that the cause of death was due to spinal trouble caused by some violent injury long before the time the affiant became acquainted with him.

Your committee can not doubt that soldier's death was caused by the fall received in the military service and in the line of duty. They therefore report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AARON R. GILKISON.

Mr. WICKHAM. I call up the bill (H. R. 7305) granting a pension to Aaron R. Gilkison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-rolls the name of Aaron R. Gilkison, late of Company H, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, from August 29, 1861, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7305) granting a pension to Aaron R. Gilkison, has had the same under consideration and make the following report:

That said Aaron R. Gilkison enlisted as a musician in Company H, Fifteenth Ohio Volunteers, April 23, 1861, and was discharged therefrom August 29, 1861. He also served a term of three months in 1864 with a National Guard regiment from Ohio.

This soldier claimed a pension because of the disability, epileptic fits, which is of such degree that he requires the constant supervision of an attendant, and has been for years an inmate of the St. Elizabeth Asylum, in the District of Columbia, and has not been able to live with his family for many years in consequence thereof.

He has proven that he was injured in the spine by a fall that was occasioned May 25, 1861, in alighting from a car that was side-tracked at Rowlesburgh, W. Va., being suddenly summoned to beat the long roll, and claims that epileptic fits are the sequence of said injury of the spine. His pension has been refused under the general laws, because he has not established the connection between the disability and the injury by proof deemed sufficient by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Your committee have carefully examined the papers connected with his case in the Pension Office, and find that the fact of the injury is abundantly proven; also that in a short time after his discharge from the first service he was subject to spasms and continuously since, even during his second service. Unfortunately the physicians who treated him soon after his return from the Army are dead, and he is not able to offer medical evidence showing the connection between the spasms and the injury. He does produce testimony of credible neighbors as to the fact of being afflicted, and the tenor of the evidence sustains the soldier's allegations.

The testimony of his wife and other members of the family, also his family physicians and neighbors, shows that he had no symptoms of the disease before enlistment in the United States service, and, although the witnesses are uncertain as to the precise date their attention was called to the epileptic fits, yet the burden of the proof indicates they made their appearance soon after his return from the Army.

His comrades testify that this soldier was anxious for discharging his duty as a musician. His orderly sergeant states as a reason he did not enter the hospital "that he was a gamey man," and hence he has no hospital record of treatment.

Your committee believe that this is a case that should have relief by special act of Congress, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. WICKHAM. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 6, the words "from August 29."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH W. FILLER.

Mr. WILKINSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 10274) granting a pension to Joseph W. Filler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph W. Filler, lieutenant-colonel, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10274) granting a pension to Joseph W. Filler, submit the following report:

The committee find that Joseph W. Filler was lieutenant-colonel of the Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers in the late civil war, and that he was severely injured while in the service, and that he made an application for a pension in the Pension Office, but the same was rejected for the reason that the injury did not occur in the service and in line of duty; but the committee have fully examined the records and the evidence therein, as well as the additional testimony filed with the committee, and we find the facts to be as follows: The soldier while in the service was thrown from his horse, striking on his left shoulder, from which injury a tumor developed, at first of slow growth, but finally increased very rapidly in size, until he was compelled to have the tumor cut out.

Dr. John N. Grones, assistant surgeon of the Ninety-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, testifies:

"That he was the surgeon who cut out such tumor, and that it was necessary to save the soldier's life; that the soldier was totally disabled from such injury for over five years, and that he will never be able to perform manual labor, and that the tumor came from the injury the soldier received in being thrown from his horse."

Dr. A. W. Heise, surgeon of the Eleventh Illinois Volunteers, testifies:

"That in May, 1861, he was riding with the claimant, being then on duty near Camp Hardin; the claimant was thrown from his horse, and, falling, struck a stump with his left shoulder, rendering him at the time insensible, and causing a large contusion on the left shoulder."

There is the testimony of a number of comrades that before the soldier enlisted he was a sound, healthy man.

The committee are forced to the conclusion from reading this testimony that the soldier received the injury complained of in the service and in the line of duty, and that he is now disabled from the performance of manual labor, and the committee therefore recommend that this bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANN BRYAN.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I call up the bill (H. R. 8613) granting a pension to Ann Bryan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Bryan, widow of William Bryan, late of Forty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8613) for the relief of Ann Bryan, submit the following report:

William Bryan, the soldier in this case, enlisted November 20, 1861, was discharged January 24, 1866, and died June 2, 1885.

The soldier drew a pension in his life-time for chronic diarrhea, and the widow made application for pension, which was rejected for the reason that chronic diarrhea was not the cause of the soldier's death.

The testimony in the record is abundant to show that the soldier contracted chronic diarrhea in the Army, and the granting to him of a pension is a confession on the part of the Government that he was so diseased, and the only question remaining is whether or not that was the cause of his death.

William Howell testifies that he knew the soldier for ten years prior to his death, that the soldier was affected with chronic diarrhea, that he was there on the day of his death, and that in his belief the cause of death was diarrhea.

John R. Murphy testifies that he knew the soldier for twenty years, that he had chronic diarrhea, and that was the cause of his death.

Other witnesses testify to the existence of chronic diarrhea in a severe form at the time of his death, that he was quite sick the evening before his death, and that he died suddenly at night.

There is no claim in the record that the soldier was affected with any other disease at the time of his death than that of chronic diarrhea, and the committee think it more reasonable to believe that the soldier died from this cause, for which he was pensioned, than to believe that he died from some disease with which he was not affected.

The widow is old, blind, and very poor, and the committee think that the testimony warrants the conclusion that the soldier died from chronic diarrhea, contracted in the service of his country, and the committee recommend that this bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IRA E. BALDWIN.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call up the bill (H. R. 10911) granting a pension to Ira E. Baldwin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Ira E. Baldwin, of Ada, Kans., dependent father of Alphonso Baldwin, late of Company I, Eighth Vermont Infantry Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10911) granting a pension to Ira E. Baldwin, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

"The claimant in this case is the father of Alphonso D. Baldwin, late private in Company I, Eighth Vermont Volunteers. The soldier enlisted December 30, 1861, when only sixteen years of age, and served until June 22, 1864. He died October 22, 1854. The mother of the soldier died in 1858. The cause of the soldier's death is given as spinal difficulty, which originated in the Army. The hospital records show that he was treated in hospital for chronic diarrhea a few months before being mustered out, and the lay evidence is conclusive that he came home in feeble health and continued so to time of death. It is also shown that the father was poor and infirm at time of soldier's service and received help from his son.

The Pension Office can not allow the claim without fuller and clearer proof showing the connection between his service and his death. This the aged father is unable to obtain. The facts as they appear from the evidence are that this boy of scarcely sixteen enlisted in the Army early in the war, served until June, 1864, enduring all its privations and hardships, returned to his home in feeble health, continuing so until, four months after, he died of some obscure disease which the doctor called spinal trouble. The father is now seventy-eight years old, feeble, and utterly destitute. It is a case which calls strongly for Congressional action, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M'DONALD.

Mr. ARNOLD. I call up the bill (S. 2938) granting a pension to James McDonald.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James McDonald, assistant wagon-master, Quartermaster's Department, whose invalid pension claim, numbered 163621, was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that applicant was a civilian employé when he received the injury which caused the amputation of his leg, and to pay him a pension at the same rate as if he had been a regularly enlisted soldier.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2938) granting a pension to James McDonald, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

In this case the files at the Adjutant-General's Office fail to show that claimant was regularly enlisted, though it seems to be shown by evidence submitted to your committee that he was sworn in and armed when he was placed in charge of a train of supplies accompanying a detachment of the Army.

The claimant was assistant wagon-master of the Second Kansas Cavalry in June, 1862, when that regiment was en route to New Mexico with a detachment of troops and as escort to an Army paymaster. While the train was crossing the Arkansas River the mules in one of the wagons became unmanagrable, and the claimant, dismounting, in his efforts to save them from drowning was knocked down and trampled upon by them, injuring his left leg so seriously as to require amputation some twenty days after, while on the march. These facts are properly attested in the record by the major and surgeon of the regiment.

There is little in the incident to create enthusiasm on the score of devotion to duty, but the fact is apparent that the wagon-master might have saved his leg without dereliction. He chose to apply himself to the emergency instead of ordering a subordinate, and lost his leg in a faithful and courageous effort to save the Government property. The committee do not think that the Government or the service will be injured by the appreciation of such spirit and conduct on the part of employés, and they recommend the passage of the bill which places the claimant, in his pensionary rights, on the footing of an enlisted soldier.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY F. KAISER.

Mr. ATKINSON. I call up the bill (S. 124) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry F. Kaiser, late a private in Company E, Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 124) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser, have considered the same, and submit and adopt the following report:

The claimant, Henry F. Kaiser, enlisted April 17, 1861, and served until July 29, 1861, in Company B, Twenty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers. He again enlisted August 6, 1861, and was discharged January 5, 1863, having served as a private in Company E, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers. He first filed an application for a pension August 31, 1877, and again April 9, 1878, alleging that at Camp Griffin, Virginia, December 25, 1861, from cold and exposure he became disabled so that he lost the sight of left eye and partial sight of right eye.

The claimant has on file the original discharge, dated January 5, 1863, at camp near White Oak Church, Virginia, stating that it is because "the said private has been blind of one eye for the last six months, and the other has become so affected that he is not able to see after night at all."

The claim was rejected March 9, 1885, on the ground that the alleged disease existed prior to enlistment.

It appears also that the soldier enlisted again at Harrisburg, Pa., in the Veteran Reserve Corps, December 29, 1863, and was mustered out December 23, 1865. Disability at date of enlistment in Veteran Reserve Corps, partial loss of sight of left eye.

The certificates of the examining boards show that in 1881 he had lost the sight of the left eye, and the right was very weak; June 8, 1883, total loss of sight of right eye, and can barely discern the light with the left eye; June 27, 1883, totally blind.

The claimant testifies that he can not furnish medical evidence showing his physical condition prior to and at the date of his enlistment, for the reason that he was a sailor on a merchant vessel for nine years prior thereto, and there were no doctors employed in the merchant service.

The testimony in this case is very voluminous, and the case has been several times examined by special examiners in the field. There is no question as to the existence of the disease in the service, and its continuance in a more severe degree and increasing intensity ever since. In addition to his own testimony there is the evidence of several comrades who served with him in his first three months' service that he was then sound and his eye-sight good. The only evidence of any prior difficulty is very meager and indefinite in its character.

Your committee are of opinion that if the disease was not in its first inception due to the service, of which there seems to be little doubt, that it was certainly much aggravated thereby, and that after the Government twice accepted this man as a good soldier, and he rendered long and valuable service to his country and was discharged for disability, that the weak and unsatisfactory evidence here presented of some slight previous weakness of the eyes should not prevent this poor blind soldier from now receiving a pension. We therefore report back the bill and recommend that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FREDERICKA LIESEGANG.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I call up the bill (H. R. 11317) granting a pension to Fredericka Liesegang.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fredericka Liesegang, widow of Ernest Christian Liesegang, late of Company H, Seventy-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The proposed beneficiary claims pension as the widow of Ernest C. Liesegang, or Leizegang, who served as private in Company H, Seventy-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers. Her claim has been rejected on the ground of her inability to furnish proof of the soldier's death.

The record of the War Department in the case is peculiar and evidently badly mixed. The Adjutant-General reports the soldier enlisted November 20, 1861; present with his command until June 1, 1862; sent to Washburn General Hospital; from there to Armory Square General Hospital, Washington, D. C., and discharged for disability July 26, 1862, by reason of mental imbecility; arrested as a deserter January 20, 1864, at Washington, D. C., and discharged February 17, 1864, on certificate of disability by reason of old age and infirmities of old age. This latter action was canceled as illegal by the Secretary of War June 16, 1882. The original discharge certificate is not on file, neither does the hospital record show nature of disability for which treated.

Capt. William N. Hall, of aforesaid company and regiment, testifies—

"That he was well acquainted with Liesegang from his enlistment in the fall of 1861. He was a sound, healthy, and able-bodied man, of sound mind, and entirely free from brain trouble; that in the winter of 1861-'62, while drilling on the ice at Fort Porter, New York, Liesegang slipped and fell, breaking his leg. When the company was ordered away he could only get about on crutches, and continued in that condition until after the command reached Staten Island, in March or April, 1862. While at the latter place, and still unable to walk without crutches, he was attacked and badly beaten about the head and body by one Frank Russell, a comrade, who was then very intoxicated. For these injuries he was treated by Regimental Surgeon Gray, who informed affiant that the blows received at the hands of Russell seriously affected Liesegang's mind. He was removed finally to Washington and finally discharged, as affiant was informed by the surgeon of the hospital, by reason of insanity."

Comrade S. H. Carson and Sergt. James H. Moore testify—

"That the assault upon Liesegang by Russell was without provocation he then being almost helpless and using crutches by reason of a fractured leg. They also fully corroborate Captain Hall as to the effect of the assault upon the soldier's mental condition."

Francis Weiss, late a member of Company D, Seventieth New York Volunteers, testifies—

"That in August, 1862, while on the march to Bristow Station, Va., and near that place, a soldier, evidently dangerously wounded, was lying by the roadside. The body was searched and papers found thereon showing them to belong to Ernest C. Liesegang, Compay H, Seventy-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers. Having been well acquainted with said person before his enlistment in the service, affiant examined the body and recognized the wounded soldier as the aforesaid Liesegang, whom he had known in Rochester before the war."

Captain Hall's testimony clearly shows that Liesegang while in hospital just prior to his discharge had a great desire to join his command, notwithstanding he was utterly unfitted for duty. He also states that it is his opinion that the soldier did not understand the full meaning of his discharge, but considered himself as still in the military service, and went in search of his company.

Comrade Dibble testifies—

"That he saw Liesegang in Washington City shortly after his discharge. He looked wild, had every appearance of being insane, and labored under the impression that he was still in the service. He then informed the affiant that he would soon join his company."

From this testimony it would appear that Liesegang, after his discharge, while believing himself still in the military service, made his way to the front and was wounded. Nothing, however, is known of his whereabouts from the fall of 1862 until in January, 1864, when arrested as a deserter in Washington, as heretofore stated. If the person arrested and subsequently discharged for disability under the name of John Leisegang was identical with the soldier in quest on, the latter action, by reason of the cancellation of the record of the same, must be eliminated from the case.

The evidence clearly shows that the soldier was sound at enlistment; that while in the service, and without fault or provocation on his part, received injuries which so seriously affected his mind that it became necessary to discharge him; that he disappeared while laboring under mental disabilities shown to be due to his service, and that he has not been heard from for about twenty-four years.

Evidence filed with the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department establishes the fact that the soldier was a hard-working man of sober habits prior to his enlistment and much attached to his family.

The claimant is old and has no means of support.

In view of all the facts shown, the committee are of opinion that the legal presumption of the soldier's death is fully established, and therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. STONE, of Missouri, having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry pension bills with various recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LYMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. On last Friday evening Senate bill No. 3018 was considered so far as to reach the question of third reading, when it went over, the hour for adjournment having arrived. I wish to ask whether that bill is not now the first business in order?

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that the bill to which the gentleman refers is on the Calendar of unfinished business, and should not interfere with the bills just reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LYMAN. Very well; let this bill go over until next Friday evening.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 10825) granting a pension to Mary Jane Jelly;

A bill (H. R. 9663) granting a pension to Jesse Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 5740) granting a pension to Anson Ward;

A bill (H. R. 9371) granting a pension to Betsy Williams, widow of William R. Williams, private Company C, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 9784) granting a pension to Anna Boppell;

A bill (H. R. 10881) granting a pension to Nancy J. Cotner;

A bill (H. R. 10433) for the relief of Leaman L. Bowers;

A bill (H. R. 11362) for the relief of William R. Rogers;

A bill (H. R. 10908) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira J. Towner;

A bill (H. R. 9310) granting a pension to Capt. William J. Duley;

A bill (H. R. 11332) granting a pension to Eliza S. Glass;

A bill (H. R. 10274) granting a pension to Joseph W. Filler;

A bill (H. R. 8613) granting a pension to Ann Bryan;

A bill (H. R. 10911) granting a pension to Ira E. Baldwin; and

A bill (H. R. 11317) granting a pension to Fredericka Liesegang.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were taken up, the amendments agreed to, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 968) granting a pension to H. S. Sayre;

A bill (H. R. 2061) granting an increase of pension to Francis De Freitas;

A bill (H. R. 10488) granting a pension to Myra Sinclair;

A bill (H. R. 7305) granting a pension to Aaron R. Gilkison; and

A bill (H. R. 5985) to increase the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardner, and Mrs. Lillie Pavy, to $30 per month. [Title amended by striking out "Gardner," and inserting "Gardener," and by striking out "Lillie," and inserting "Lilla."]

SENATE BILLS PASSED.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 2951) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Morrison Elliott;

A bill (S. 2713) granting a pension to Pierre Bottineau;

A bill (S. 3130) granting a pension to Patrick Welch;

A bill (S. 3236) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn, late major Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers;

A bill (S. 2938) granting a pension to James McDonald; and

A bill (S. 124) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser.

The bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William M. Dean (reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments) was taken up, the amendments agreed to, the bill as amended ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, the title being amended by striking out "M" and inserting "R."

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the votes by which the various bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHRISTIAN KUNZIE.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask unanimous consent (this is the first time I have made such a request) that the bill (H. R. 9385) for the relief of Christian Kunzie be taken up and passed. This bill is for the relief of an old man seventy years of age.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Christian Kunzie, dependent father of Henry Kunzie, of Company G, First Regiment Michigan Sharpshooters, killed in battle.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

Christian Kunzie is the surviving father of Henry Kunzie, of Company G, First Regiment of Michigan Sharpshooters, who is returned by the Adjutant-General as killed in battle before Spottsylvania Court-house, Va., May 12, 1864. Henry left no widow or child, as is shown by testimony before the committee and by the files of the Pension Bureau, to which Christian applied for pension as a dependent father in 1874, he being then sixty years of age. The application was rejected on the ground that at the time of the son's death he was self-supporting. This decision was then right, because the evidence showed that he was actually at work regularly on the streets, but he is now no longer able to do manual labor, is over seventy years of age, and dependent upon charity for support. He was a soldier in the regular Army and engaged in Indian wars when he was a young man.

In view of his advanced age and dependent condition we recommend that the bill pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. STARR.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 206) granting a pension to William H. Starr.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of William H. Starr, late a private in Company D, Eighth Illinois Infantry

Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

Claimant was a member of Company D, Eighth Illinois Infantry, and filed his application for pension on October 10, 1882, alleging injury to drum of left ear by concussion at Shiloh, Tenn., and injury to back caused by explosion of a shell at Vicksburg, Miss., in May, 1863.

The Pension Office calls for the testimony of an officer as to incurrence and surgeon as to treatment for deafness of left ear, which claimant says he is unable to obtain. He has filed affidavits of two comrades as to incurrence, showing that immediately after the battle of Shiloh claimant complained of deafness in his left ear. One of the witnesses, J. M. Honey, in a letter to the Commissioner of Pensions, in reply to inquiries of the Commissioner, says:

"I never heard his hearing called in question until after the battle of Shiloh. From that time until my discharge (in August, I think, 1864) I always understood Starr got his hearing injured there. * * * I got my information this way: First, Starr always claimed after the battle that his hearing was injured there. Second, I was jarred until my nose bled, and am deaf in one ear when I have a cold, fever, or take medicine, and can not distinguish the direction of sound when I hear it. Third, we were to the right a little, and were in front of some heavy guns there, and the firing was terrific. They opened the battery very sudden, and we were jarred and shook up generally. I was there, and I know Starr was, too."

Daniel N. Osborn, another comrade, corroborates the above. Both of these witnesses are vouched for as reliable men. Claimant can not furnish medical evidence of treatment, as required, never having been treated; he was examined by Dr. Edmonson, at Denver, Colo., who could not give any treatment beneficial to his ear.

Several acquaintances and neighbors testify to claimant's soundness prior to his enlistment, and that he is now deaf in his left ear, and has been since his discharge. The board of medical examiners at Wichita, Kans., report on July 16, 1884:

"We find left ear-drum gone, with resulting total deafness, as shown by failure to hear tick of watch or loud conversation on closing right ear."

The evidence seems to establish that claimant was free from deafness up to the battle of Shiloh, and that he has been deaf in his left ear ever since.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. BARR.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 935) to grant an honorable discharge to George W. Barr from the Army.

Mr. DOCKERY. That bill can not be considered under the special order for this evening's session.

Mr. KILGORE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Monday next.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BLOUNT: A bill (H. R. 11432) for the relief of A. V. Toole—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11433) for the relief of William T. Maynard—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CARUTH: A bill (H. R. 11434) for the relief of James D. Maclay—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CHIPMAN (by request): A bill (H. R. 11435) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. General Ward B. Burnett—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOFF: A bill (H. R. 11436) for the relief of the heirs of Brittan Marshal Odam—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 11437) granting a pension to Wm. C. Bowman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCOMAS: A bill (H. R. 11438) for the relief of Joseph Wilburn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 11439) to provide for the final settlement with the Mexican Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas in accordance with certain treaty stipulations—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. RAYNER: A bill (H. R. 11440) granting a pension to George D. D. Decker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROWLAND: A bill (H. R. 11441) for the relief of M. J. Edwards—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. L. ANDERSON: Petition of Mrs. Rachael R. McMullan and of John McGuire, of Alabama, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL: Petition of John Wilson, for relief—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CRAIN: Petition of Henry Simmons, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KENNEDY: Petition of William H. Tipton and 29 others, citizens of Pickaway County, Ohio, for a bill granting every soldier 160 acres of land—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEAL: Papers in the claim of Oliver M. Thurman, of Warren County, Tennessee—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RAYNER: Petition of George D. D. Decker, for an original pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Missouri: Petition of Thomas J. Freeman and others, citizens of Cedar County, Missouri, for re-enactment of arrears-of-pension act—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

MONDAY, September 17, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

FORFEITURE OF MICHIGAN RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a privileged motion. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate passed the bill (S. 947) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, etc.

When that bill was passed on Friday the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] said that if on examination it turned out not to be a literal and exact copy of a certain modification of the general bill which had passed the Senate, being somewhat of a compromise of different views, he would consent that it might be reconsidered. The Senator from Michigan informs me this morning that he has found that without his knowledge there was a slight verbal change from the language which had been contained in the old bill.

That was, I am sure, without the knowledge of the Senator from Michigan, and I am also reasonably sure that it is a mere change of phraseology, not in the least affecting the substance, so that the substance of the assurance which the Senator from Michigan made to the Senate on Friday is doubtless absolutely and precisely true and well founded.

I am not familiar with this matter myself. All that I knew about it when I engaged in the discussion before had been recently pumped in, I might almost say, by some constituents of mine who had an interest in the matter. I desire out of abundant caution to have the motion to reconsider entered, and let it stand a day or two until I can refer the matter to them. I have no doubt that at the end of two or three days I shall withdraw the motion and allow the bill to be passed.

Mr. PALMER. I shall not oppose the reconsideration, if the Senator from Massachusetts desires it. I would state, however, that when the bill left my hands section 2, which was intended to be identical with section 9 of the general forfeiture bill, was the same, but it was reported back with a slight interpolation, making it a little more particular. It does not affect the sense at all, but I thought under the circumstances it was my duty, as long as I had assured the Senator from Massachusetts that it was identical with the other bill, to state the circumstance to him this morning; and he now enters a motion to reconsider, that he may take advantage of it if he thinks it affects the particular features of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. My own belief is that they are identical.

Mr. PALMER. I have no doubt of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

REGISTERED-MAIL LOCKS.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote upon House bill 11391, which was passed by the Senate on Friday. It was reported by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee [Mr. SAWYER], and passed without being printed. I desire to examine the bill further, and to understand, if I may, what the object of the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to reconsider the vote——

Mr. PLATT. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider until I can have an opportunity to examine the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to reconsider the vote by which this bill passed the Senate. The bill having gone to the House of Representatives, the motion will be accompanied by a request to the House of Representatives to return the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Very well.

ATTORNEYS' FEES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Department of Justice, inclosing a letter from the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting a list of accounts approved by the Attorney-General and requesting that provision be made in the pending deficiency appropriation bill for the payment of such accounts; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented petitions of citizens of New York, Tennessee, and California, praying for the repeal of so much of section 2804 of the Revised Statutes as relates to the affixing of a special stamp on the boxes of foreign-made cigars; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BROWN presented resolutions adopted by the Clem Farmers' Alliance, of Georgia, condemning the cotton-bagging trust and asking legislation for its suppression; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8) to restore Mrs. R. S. Horton upon the pension-rolls;

A bill (H. R. 10258) to place the name of Cyrus Millins, of Ogden Centre, Mich., on the pension-rolls; and

A bill (H. R. 6022) granting a pension to Smith Bodkins.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3439) authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain the amount of money which has been expended and the obligations assumed by the State of California, growing out of Indian hostilities therein and upon the borders thereof, not heretofore reimbursed by the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11006) to provide for the revocation of the withdrawal of lands made for the benefit of certain railroads, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3528) to authorize the maintenance of a bridge across the Coosa River at Gadsden, Ala., reported it with amendments.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3540) granting a pension to Mary P. Myers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSES AND FOG-SIGNALS.

Mr. PALMER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8751) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lake Superior, Lakes Huron, Erie, and Michigan, and range-lights in Lake Saint Clair and Detroit River, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan if this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PALMER. I will state to the Senator from Tennessee that the subcommittee on light-houses are authorized to report when a majority agree. There are five on that subcommittee. The majority have agreed to the report.

Mr. HARRIS. The majority of the subcommittee?

Mr. PALMER. The majority of the subcommittee. I have not seen the others, because they are not here. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] was not here when the subcommittee considered the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill. Does the Senator know whether any Senator representing this side of the Chamber on the subcommittee is present?

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] has given his assent to it, and if it were not very patent that the bill should be passed I should not ask the Senate to consider it.

Mr. HARRIS. As there is a representative of the subcommittee on this side present, I shall not object.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISIANA QUARANTINE LANDS.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 10931) to donate and transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, subject to reversion to the United States in the event of their non-usage for quarantine purposes, and requiring the proper department of the United States Government to execute the necessary transfer to the State of Louisiana on the condition aforesaid.

Mr. PLUMB. That is somewhat urgent, and in view of the necessity for quarantine areas in that vicinity I will venture to ask that the Senate proceed at once to the consideration of the bill. It is a House bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, line 4, after "hereby," to strike out "donates and;" and in line 5, after the word "Louisiana," to insert "the possession of;" so as to read:

That for the purposes of maintaining a quarantine station on the Mississippi River the United States hereby transfers to the State of Louisiana the possession of all that portion of land known as sections 13 and 14, in township 21 south, range 19 east, southeastern district of Louisiana, east of the Mississippi River, said lands measuring 1,272 feet front on the Mississippi River, being swamp lands, and extending a half mile to the sea in the rear, and bounded above by section 12, patented to Jonathan Jones and Peter Runder in 1843, and bounded below by section 15, patented to Janet Bister and Angelo Laussade in 1839, which sections 13 and 14 were withdrawn from public sale or entry by proclamation of the President in 1875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 18, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That should the State of Louisiana at any time cease to use said lands for quarantine purposes, then and in that event said lands shall revert to the Government of the United States.

And to insert—

Provided, That should the State of Louisiana at any time cease to use said lands for quarantine purposes, or should the same be needed for the purposes for which they were originally reserved, then the Government of the United States shall resume the possession of said lands on the order of the President, whose decision in the premises shall be final.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the proper Department of the Government of the United States shall, on and after the passage of this act, execute to the State of Louisiana the proper transfers of said lands, on the conditions hereinbefore expressed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes the possession of certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. WALTHALL. I move that a conference be requested with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WALTHALL, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. BERRY were appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3557) to ratify and confirm certain agreements with the Upper and Middle bands of Spokane Indians, the Cœur d'Alene Indians, the Lower Pend d'Oreille or Calispel Indians, and the confederated bands of Flathead, Pend d'Oreille, and Kootenai Indians, in Washington, Idaho, and Montana Territories, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3558) to reduce letter postage to 1 cent per ounce from and after March 4, 1889; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the bill be printed and lie on the table; and I give notice that at an early day I shall move to proceed to its consideration for the purpose of enabling me to submit a few observations before it is referred to the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to allow honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries before the expiration of the six months allowed by section 2304 of the Revised Statutes to make another entry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3560) for the relief of William S. Rosecrans; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE introduced a bill (3561) granting a pension to Edwin W. Warner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3562) granting increase of pension to James A. Patterson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 3563) to amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GEORGE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3564) for the relief of Caroline C. Hedges; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3565) for the relief of Allie V. Askew, administratrix of W. W. Neeley, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8990) to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. PALMER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to give notice that on Thursday morning next, immediately at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the President's annual message to the Committee on Finance, for the purpose of enabling me to submit some remarks thereon.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, with such measures as are expedient to promote friendly commercial and political intercourse between these countries and the United States, and for that purpose have leave to sit during the recess of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to-morrow, when the resolution will naturally come up for consideration, I propose to address the Senate for a brief time upon it, and then will ask its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Chair lays before the Senate, pursuant to the order of the Senate on Friday last, the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. PLUMB. The time to elapse till 1 o'clock, at which hour the Senate has agreed by unanimous consent to take the vote upon the Chinese restriction bill, is so short that I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over now and be taken up immediately after the final vote upon the Chinese bill. That will give some twenty minutes for the Calendar and prevent the interruption of the proceedings on the Agricultural Department bill, which would be, I think, unwise and unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There having been some misunderstanding about the extent of these unanimous agreements hitherto, the Chair asks more definitely whether the request is that the bill shall be resumed after the vote on the motion to reconsider or after the Chinese restriction bill shall be finally disposed of?

Mr. PLUMB. After the bill is finally disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish simply to say that if the Chinese bill is to go on indefinitely I shall move to take up the Agricultural Department bill, the Chinese bill to the contrary notwithstanding. I shall not submit to its going on for a week or two.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 223) declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888.

The message also announced that the House had elected Hon. SAMUEL S. COX, a Representative from the State of New York, as Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 124) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser;

A bill (S. 2713) granting a pension to Pierre Bottineau;

A bill (S. 2938) granting a pension to James McDonald;

A bill (S. 2951) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Morrison Elliott;

A bill (S. 3130) granting a pension to Patrick Welch; and

A bill (S. 3236) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn, late major Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William M. Dean;

A bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to H. R. Blakiston; and

A bill (S. 2356) to provide a pension for Mrs. Adeline Couzins.

WILLIAM BROWN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order, and the first bill will be stated by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120, in the city of Washington, on certain conditions.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10907) granting a pension to Henry Mitchell Youngblood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill whose title has just been read being in order under Rule VIII, the Senator from Arkansas moves to proceed to the consideration——

Mr. SHERMAN. That is contrary to the understanding.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that we had better proceed regularly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain debate.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will withdraw the request as Senators are unwilling that it shall be granted.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill, but I think we had better go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill moved by the Senator from Arkansas will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the order of business ought to be observed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to be understood as objecting to the pension bill, and I do not desire to displace it, but I simply object to its being taken up now.

The bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120 in the city of Washington, on certain conditions, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was read the third time.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have some explanation of the bill. It proposes to grant lands to somebody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] who reported the bill is not present. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, July 27, 1888, as follows:

Your committee, having carefully considered the bill, concur in the opinion of the commissioners of the District as expressed in the following communication:

"OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"Washington, July 27, 1888.

"SIR: Referring to Senate bill 3193, 'directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120, in the city of Washington, on certain conditions,' submitted to the commissioners at your instance for their views, the commissioners are of opinion that the enactment of this bill will conduce to both public and private convenience, and recommend favorable action upon it.

"Very respectfully,

"W. B. WEBB,
"President Board of Commissioners.

"Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
"Chairman Committee for District of Columbia, United States Senate."

The bill was passed.

HARBOR OF FAIRPORT, OHIO.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 1107) to regulate the subdivision of land within the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution received from the House of Representatives just now, in reference to the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been advised that objection was to be made to the consideration of anything except the Calendar under Rule VIII. The Chair does not feel at liberty to enter ain the request after the agreement which has been made.

Mr. PAYNE. I am sure there will be no objection to this joint resolution. It passed the House of Representatives on Friday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Ohio asks that it be laid aside for the consideration of a joint resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read the first time by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. Res. 223) declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read the second time at length.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the phrase "present low-water mark" in the river and harbor bill of August 11, 1888, in the paragraph referring to Fairport Harbor, Ohio, is intended to mean the inner shoreline represented on map in the report of Chief of Engineers of 1881.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This joint resolution having been just received from the House of Representatives, and not referred to a committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] asks unanimous consent that the reference may be waived, and that the joint resolution may now be considered without a reference. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. CULLOM July 25, 1888, directing the Committee on Interstate Commerce to inquire into the ownership by the Canadian Pacific Railway of the Minneapolis, Sault Ste. Marie and Atlantic Railway Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition shall be made of the resolution?

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Illinois not being present I move that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting three claims allowed by the Fourth Auditor and Second Comptroller, amounting to $4,445.81, inadvertently omitted from the list of claims forwarded to Congress on the 3d instant; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION OF RECORD.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, having occasion to look at the record of the proceedings of the Senate of Friday last, on page 9477 of the RECORD published on Saturday, in the speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], I noticed that after he finished the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made an inquiry of him, which inquiry, as it seems very clearly to me, was not pertinent to what the Senator from Missouri appeared to have said. I therefore made inquiry of the Reporter and found that two words of the speech of the Senator from Missouri had been accidentally omitted by the Reporter. It is my desire, if I properly can raise the question, to have those two words restored in the RECORD. I will read the sentence of the Senator from Missouri as it is recorded. Speaking of the present President of the United States, he is reported to have said:

Like a brave, honest, and true man, he sent his message to Congress, which struck with steely point the shield of the protective system; and because he has done it he is now denounced here and we are denounced as if we attacked the whole protective system of this country from beginning to end.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] thereupon asked the question—

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator understand that the Democratic party propose to overthrow what he styled just now "the infamous protective system," or do they propose to retain it—which?

Mr. VEST. We propose to overthrow the oppressions of the present tariff system.

Mr. HOAR. That does not answer my question. The question is whether he proposes to overthrow what he styles the "infamous protective system?"

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; the infamous part of it I do; that part of it which collects money from one man in this country to enrich another without any necessity for the collection other than to enrich classes and individuals—and so on.

The whole colloquy seems to be incongruous by reason of the omission from the speech of the Senator from Missouri of the words "this infamous" before the words "protective system" where first used. I learn that the words were accidentally omitted by the Reporter or by a copyist of the Reporter. They were not omitted at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, who did not see the report of his remarks. Notwithstanding that, however, I desire to have the words restored to the RECORD.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have not seen the report of that speech and have not even read the RECORD containing it. I did not supervise it and did not correct it, and if any change was made in it, it was without any authority from me.

I have no question that I did use the expression "that infamous protective system;" I repeat it now, and the Senator from New Hampshire and his colleagues can have the full benefit of it. I mean by the "infamous protective system" the tariff that now exists, which the Republican party pledged itself to the country in 1884 to reform as to its inequalities and abuses and infamy. It has infamous features in it, and to those features I am opposed, and propose, with voice and vote, to strike them down if possible.

I have never stated, and never intended to say that the Democratic party proposed to attack the entire industrial or protective system of this country, but its abuses and outrages they do intend to remedy, and they never intend to stop the fight until they have struck them down.

Mr. CHANDLER. That opinion of the Senator is exactly what I wished to have recorded in the RECORD and made fixed and certain, adjectives and all.

Mr. VEST. Certainly; the Senator is welcome to it, adjectives, pronouns, interjections, and all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made by the Official Reporter.

COTTON-BAGGING TRUST.

Mr. HOAR. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution, and ask for its adoption at this time. I will state as a reason for it that there came to me in the mail on Friday a petition, signed by a large number of colored citizens in one of the Southern States, complaining of what they call a cotton-bagging trust, which they say enhances unduly and improperly the price of cotton-bagging. I had the petition laid aside with directions that it should be brought to me this morning in order that it might be presented to the Senate; but by some accident it has been mislaid and can not be found, and I think justice to the petitioners therefore requires me to introduce a resolution asking the Committee on Finance to take the subject into consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to inquire whether there be in existence a trust or combination whereby the price of cotton-bagging is increased, and what legislation is required, if any, to counteract the same.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask leave to present a communication that I have received from South Carolina on the same subject, and ask that it be read. It is very brief. It is a resolution of the convention recently held at Columbia.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CLIO, S. C., September 9, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to a resolution passed by the State convention of the Democratic party of South Carolina at Columbia, S. C., on September 6, 1888, we herewith inclose for your attention the following resolution as introduced by D. P. Duncan, of Union, and adopted by said convention:

"Resolved, That the Democratic party of South Carolina approves of the resolution offered by Representative HOOKER, of Mississippi, in the Congress of the United States authorizing the President to remit the duties on foreign bagging used in baling cotton, and urges upon Congress the prompt passage of the resolution, and that a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary to the Senators and Representatives from South Carolina."

Respectfully submitted.

JAS. L. ORR, President.
J. T. ROPER,
WM. L. STOKES,
Secretaries.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not sure but that a bill on that subject has been introduced.

Mr. HARRIS. There was one introduced in the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

MISSOURI JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 3539) to amend "An act to detach the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, from the eastern and attach it to the western judicial district of said State."

In regard to this bill, I would ask the Senate to take it up and pass it. It is entirely a local matter, and originates out of a mistake made in a bill which passed the House of Representatives and the Senate detaching the county of Audrain in my State from the eastern district of Missouri and attaching it to the western district. The bill, by an inadvertence, overlooked the fact that these districts are subdivided. There are six judicial divisions in the State of Missouri, two in the eastern and four in the western district, and this bill ought to have provided that Audrain County should have been taken from the northern division of the eastern and attached to the central division of the western district. Instead of that, by an oversight the bill simply provided for taking the county from the eastern to the western district. The term of court is approaching and the judge is anxious, together with the bar, to have this mistake corrected, as the county now belongs to neither division. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in section 2, line 2, before the word "courts," to strike out "Federal," and after the word "courts," in the same line, to insert the words "of the United States;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That all civil and criminal causes or proceedings pending in the courts of the United States for the northern division of the eastern district of Missouri which originated in said county of Audrain shall remain within the jurisdiction of said courts for that division until finally disposed of, and all offenses committed in said county against the laws of the United States before the passage of this act shall also be cognizable in the United States courts for the northern division of said eastern district until final disposition of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882. Will the Senate reconsider the vote by which this bill was passed? The yeas and nays having been ordered, Senators in the affirmative will answer "yea" as their names are called, and those in the negative will answer "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when the name of Mr. ALDRICH was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] on this question.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. By arrangement with his colleague [Mr. TELLER] the pair is transferred and I am allowed to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I will ask if the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with any one? [A pause.] I will for the present transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and, if it turns out that he is paired with any one, I shall withdraw my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. REAGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were here, I should vote "nay," and I understand he would vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], but the pair is transferred to my colleague [Mr. BOWEN]. I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has just announced a pair with the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, then.

Mr. SPOONER. I announced my pair with the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator has any arrangement for a pair with the Senator from Delaware, I will vote.

Mr. SPOONER. I am generally paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], but the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] just came to me with a statement that he desired me to pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. PUGH. I had just received a telegram from the Senator from Delaware asking me to pair him. I was not aware that the Senator from Delaware had any pair.

Mr. FARWELL. My colleague [Mr. CULLOM] is absent, and the pair may be transferred to him.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to be recorded?

Mr. ALLISON. I do, as I understand the Senator from Wisconsin has paired the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I will therefore vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER. I understand, then, that the Senator from Delaware is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and that I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. BECK] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to inquire if any pair has been announced with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] except the transfer that I made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No announcement has been made.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I shall let my vote stand.

Mr. MANDERSON. My colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] is paired generally with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT] was paired with my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER]. If the Senator from New Jersey were present, he would have voted the same way. He would have voted "nay." I ought to say, perhaps, that last week in pairing my colleague with the Senator from New Jersey I did so by authority.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—20.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was not agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as this matter has been disposed of, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] and the attention of the Senate to a very serious mistake which that Senator made in relation to the action of the State Department on the Chinese treaty, in the language which I will now read.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the Agricultural Department bill, which was the unfinished business, by agreement on Friday, to be resumed after the morning business on this day, and informally laid aside to enable the vote to be taken on the Chinese restriction bill. That vote having been taken, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] takes the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. In the RECORD of September 4 I find the following language used by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]:

When the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations stirred up the question of a treaty last winter and took action upon the matter and reported their resolution, there had not been, as I have very good authority for saying, a scratch of a pen between the two Governments in regard to this Chinese treaty since the 1st of the preceding May.

That is, when applied to the dates of these various transactions, from May, 1887, up to the 1st day of March, 1888, a period of ten months, the Senator from Oregon, upon what he regarded, and I have no doubt sincerely, as very good authority, stated that there had not been a scratch of a pen between the United States and the Government of China in relation to the subject-matter of Chinese immigration. My attention has been called to that and also to the very serious character of the mistake into which the Senator had fallen. It appears that the Senate passed the resolution which I will now read—I have it in my hand—on the 1st day of March, 1888:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That in view of the difficulties and embarrassments that have attended the regulation of the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States under the limitations of our treaties with China, the President of the United States be requested to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China containing a provision that no Chinese laborer shall enter the United States.

The effect of the statement made by the Senator from Oregon is that the State Department had been negligent in its duties, had taken no steps to negotiate a treaty or to have any understanding or arrangement with China in reference to the importation or immigration of Chinese laborers until March 1, 1888, when that Department, to use the language of the Senator, had been "stirred up" by the action of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee; that is, that no step had been taken by the Department from May, 1887, until March, 1888, on that subject.

I call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to a document which was sent by the President to the Senate when he sent us the treaty which is now pending in China. With that paper and with the message of the President are several communications between the State Department and the Chinese Government.

On page 88 there is a letter from the Chinese minister dated January 30, 1888, prior to the time indicated by the Senator, in which he acknowledges the receipt of a note from Mr. Bayard, dated the 28th of December, 1887, inclosing a draught of projét for a treaty.

On page 88 of the document from which I quote is found the statement of the Chinese minister, in these words:

As to your proposition for a conventional arrangement and the draught of a projét inclosed by you, I beg to recall to your attention the fact that this identical projét was sent to me with your note of April 11, 1887.

So it appears that so far from Mr. Bayard or the State Department having been stirred up to diligence by the action of the Senate and of its Committee on Foreign Relations, long prior to any action taken by the Senate, to wit, on the 16th of August, 1887, and even previously, on April 11, 1887, Mr. Bayard had written a letter to the Chinese minister proposing a treaty almost substantially the same as the one that was concluded. I will read an extract from the letter of Mr. Bayard dated the 28th of December, 1887, to the Chinese minister:

SIR: I am constrained, in the interests of that international comity which we both desire so fully to promote and sustain, to attract your excellency's attention to certain late disclosures in the course of judicial proceedings at San Francisco, in which certain Chinese subjects were arraigned for violation of existing laws of the United States relative to the restriction of the immigration of Chinese laborers, passed for the enforcement of the existing treaties with China.

In that same letter the following language is used:

In considering the remedy I have great satisfaction in finding a complete accord between the Government you so honorably represent and that of the United States, in desiring an absolute prohibition of Chinese laborers from coming into the United States from China.

So that in this letter of the 28th of December, 1887, several months prior to the time indicated by the Senator from Oregon, there had been such communication and interchange of views between the Chinese minister and Mr. Bayard, the Secretary of State, that Mr. Bayard felt authorized in a letter directed to the Chinese minister to inform him that he was very much gratified to know that there was perfect accord between them. There is also the projét of a treaty communicated again. And so on August 17, 1887, prior to the date indicated by the Senator, there is "a scratch of a pen" from the Chinese minister to Mr. Bayard, in which the following language is used:

In view of the foregoing it is believed that you will be willing to draught an article, to be added to the proposed convention, somewhat similar to Article XIX of the treaty of 1844 and Article III of 1880, or a stipulation for protection to Chinese laborers secured by laws of Congress to the extent indicated by the Supreme Court as consistent with the system of government.

In that same letter the Chinese minister says:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the draught of a convention which accompanied your note of April 11 last. In the interview I had the pleasure of having with you on the 13th of April last, I pointed out to you some words in the draught which I considered as not well defined, etc.

Soon after that interview on the 13th of April the Chinese minister left this country for Peru, and, as I am informed, did not return until August, about the date of his letter in reply to Mr. Bayard's letter.

So it can not be urged, as the Senator from Oregon felt authorized to urge upon what he deemed good authority, that the State Department had been negligent in this matter and had only acted when pressed by the action of the Senate and its Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MITCHELL. If my colleague desires to say anything I will yield.

Mr. DOLPH. Not at present.

Mr. MITCHELL. Inasmuch as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has referred to this Chinese business, although the bill has passed, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an editorial appearing in the New York Star of yesterday, an Administration paper, as I understand, in New York. It is headed "The Scott Chinese bill signed." It reads as follows:

THE SCOTT CHINESE BILL SIGNED.

The President has signed the bill to prevent the further immigration of Chinese laborers to this country. It is now a law, and there is no doubt that it will be rigidly enforced. It originated in a Democratic House, where it was unanimously passed. Among the Republicans of the Senate there was some disposition shown to cavil at its provisions and delay its passage, but the feeling on the subject on the Pacific coast was so strong that few Republicans dared to vote against it.

There is a disposition among some good people to criticise the provisions of the bill as harsh, and the haste that has marked its passage, while a treaty is still pending, as discourteous to the Chinese Empire.

If there is any truth in these charges the Republican majority in the Senate must bear the whole blame. The President had negotiated with China a friendly treaty that met the case. Out of mere malignant partisan perversity the Republican Senate refused to ratify the treaty, and insisted on amendments that probably have caused its rejection by China. Then came the crisis that the President had wisely sought to avoid by diplomacy.

It could not be denied that in the absence of the treaty stipulations a flood of Chinese immigrants was pouring into the country. There was no time for hesitation or parley, in view of the facts. Something had to be done and done at once. Mr. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, introduced his bill, and it has swiftly become a law. The immigration will be stopped, and if this is not accomplished in accord with Chinese views the fault lies with those who caused the delay in the ratification of the treaty.

The New York Star is a little previous, it will be seen, in announcing in its issue of yesterday that the President of the United States had signed what is known as the Scott Chinese exclusion bill. That bill has not yet gone to the President. Yesterday it was still pending in the Senate on a motion to reconsider, and that motion to reconsider was only disposed of this morning. Certainly the New York Star was misinformed when it stated that the President had signed the bill.

It would be well to remark in this connection that on the motion this morning to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed some ten days or two weeks ago, there were 20 yeas, and 14 of them were Democrats and 6 of them were Republicans. There were 21 nays; 15 of whom were Republicans and 6 were Democrats. Therefore, although there was vigorous opposition to this bill by the Democratic party in the Senate, it passed; the motion to reconsider has been voted down by the Republicans, and the bill has now gone to the President, and I hope he will have an opportunity, as he certainly will in a day or two, to sign it, and I trust he will sign it and that it will become a law.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I see that I was mistaken in the statement I made about any negotiations in regard to a treaty after the 1st of May, 1887. That arises from the imperfection of hearing or of recollection. I derived my information from a conversation in which certain documents were read and referred to in the meeting which was alluded to by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] the other day, concerning which I undertook to make some statements. It arose from the fact that the Chinese minister is also accredited to Spain and Peru, and on or about the 1st of May, 1887, he left the United States for Spain; and as I understood the statement at the time, while there had been some negotiation prior to the time of signing the treaty, it was stopped by the absence of the Chinese minister at the time he left for Spain, and I had not recollected if there was anything said or anything in the correspondence which showed that it had been renewed after his return, and I was in error to that extent. I was not, however, in error in contradicting the statement made on the other side of the Chamber that the treaty was not negotiated before the Senate committee acted or before the resolution was adopted. As I stated before, the treaty had not been negotiated. Although there had been correspondence concerning it, nothing had been agreed upon, and the probability of successful negotiation was talked over in connection with the provision for the payment of the indemnity to Chinese subjects.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1216) for the investigation of the mining-débris question in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. 10679) to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8752) providing for the establishment of an additional life-saving station on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. 5059) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Watertown, in the State of New York;

A bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Mathew W. Berryman;

A bill (H. R. 2996) to confirm the title of the heirs or legal representatives of Henry Volcker, deceased, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit and district courts for the western division of the western district of Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

DETAILS OF ARMY OFFICERS TO EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Senate bill 186 as amended by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 186) entitled "to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions," etc., do pass with the following amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "established," insert "military institute, seminary, or academy."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "Army," insert the words "or Navy."

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "president."

Page 1, line 20, strike out all after the word "population," in said line, down to and including the word "president," in line 22.

Page 2, line 3, add, after the word "required," the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the detail of officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy as professors in scientific schools or colleges as now provided by act of Congress approved February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to promote a knowledge of steam engineering and iron-ship building among the students of scientific schools or colleges in the United States;" and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government on the terms and conditions hereinbefore provided to any college or university at which a retired officer of the Army may be assigned as provided by section 1260 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Agricultural Department bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry recommend that section 5 of the bill be stricken out, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Weather Service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture, to take effect July 1, 1888, and shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary to efficiently manage said bureau. Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau, including the second lieutenants now in service, shall continue as at present: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps. The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; and the compensation now paid to the employés and enlisted men of said service shall continue as now; and the moneys appropriated for said service and hereafter appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to appoint a board of three Army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member. The duty of said board shall be to make an inventory of all property now in the control and possession of the Signal Service Bureau, and shall separate and turn over to the Department of Agriculture such portions of the property as the said board may determine to be suitable for the work of the Signal Service Weather Bureau. The remainder of the property shall remain in the control of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BUTLER. In connection with this amendment I beg to submit some extracts from a letter which I received awhile ago from the president of a State agricultural college, a gentleman of high scientific attainments, whose opinion is entitled to very great weight. He says:

SEPTEMBER 15, 1888.

DEAR SIR: By to-day's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I have been much pleased to see your approbation of the transfer of the Weather Bureau to the proposed enlarged Department of Agriculture. Permit me to express the hope that your efforts to secure the rejection by the Senate of the pending amendment of the House bill will be vigorously renewed on Monday.

There seems to be very general agreement that the Weather Service, by itself, divorced from the technical signal service of the Army, is more closely related to agriculture than to any other industry or interest; that the proper logical place for its administration is under the Department of Agriculture; that being a purely civil service its organization and administration in military form throughout is an anomaly—and that even as it exists (as claimed by the Chief Signal Officer himself) the service sadly needs reorganization.

The main difference of opinion is, therefore, as to the expediency of entering upon a reorganization at this time and in connection with the proposed rational transfer. I know that I am not alone among those outside official circles and legislative halls, who have given this subject much attention from a combined agricultural and scientific aspect, in believing that a better time and more favorable circumstances for effecting this desirable change, easily, efficiently, and economically are never likely to exist.

Seeing your interest in the subject, and the general concurrence of your views and ours, I venture to send some of the reasons occurring to us.

First. If new law is desirable to "enlarge" the Department of Agriculture, is it not well to increase in some other way than by substituting, at almost treble cost, a Secretary and an Assistant Secretary to perform the duties already well executed by a single Commissioner?

Second. The House bill amply provides for bridging over the transitory period without a break in the service. The agricultural colleges and the newly formed or forming experiment stations, constitute a cadre organization upon which the new system can be soon developed and perfected at a very moderate cost. My own belief is that within a year, practical utility could be increased and the total cost actually decreased. The service thus transplanted would be in a congenial atmosphere, and in the hands of efficient men earnestly interested in its success. At every State college or university with an agricultural experiment station attached (and such an institution exists in almost every State) the need is already felt of a complete meteorological record, including observations of the physics of the soil as well as of the atmosphere, as an essential part of the work. Several of these institutions have thought it necessary to establish weather bureaus of their own, local or covering their States. The efficient State weather service in Alabama is organized at and managed by an officer of the State Agricultural College. The same is true of Ohio, and applies in a measure to Tennessee and Wisconsin. The United States Signal Service depends largely upon these State organizations and officers for its local information. Other States are at this time arranging for similar service. The Massachusetts experiment station at its agricultural college has just procured a meteorological equipment, equaled in this country only by those at the Government office in Washington, and at Central Park, New York. Only last Wednesday the Associated Press dispatches published the details of arrangements just perfected at Cornell University for a State weather service and the issue of daily bulletins with predictions or probabilities. (See New York Times, September 12.)

It is absurd for the Chief Signal Officer of the Army to express a fear, as he did before the Senate committee, that the work would fall into incompetent hands if this transfer were made. In almost every State men of scientific attainments, well trained for just such service, are now on duty, and could at once assume the direction of this meteorological work. They are fully the peers of those who now have the service in charge, and far exceed the latter in number. As stated, a good many of them are already the local representatives and agents of the present bureau. The local observers, scattered over the country and doing only civil duty, would be but too glad to escape the unpleasant status and disadvantages of being "enlisted men" and transfer their services to the control of these State officials, or a civil chief, at the Agricultural Department. There is a man at your own State University at Columbia, now engaged in work of like nature, who has already demonstrated his right to be classed as a meteorologist equal in ability to any in the Signal Service. Another could be named, in Indiana, whose experience and capability fit him to assume at any moment all the duties of the Chief of the Army Signal Corps that is or the Weather Bureau of the new Department of Agriculture that is hoped for without detriment to the service.

Third. (Personal.) It can not be doubted by candid observers that if the Weather Service alone were transferred to the Agricultural Department, and with a new civil chief, leaving the present Chief Signal Officer to his military service proper, there would be a great public gain.

SENATOR BUTLER,
Of South Carolina.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he will give the name of the person who wrote the letter.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not given the name. The writer requests that for the present his name be not given. It is a private letter to me, but I will state for the information of the Senate that the writer is one of the most distinguished scientific agriculturists of this country, and is at present president of a State agricultural college. He is well known to the Senator from Massachusetts, and in fact to almost all the scientific agriculturists of the country. For some reason he begs that I will not give his name. I am quite willing to vouch for him in every particular. I have simply added that, as he expresses it, as a contribution to the consideration of this bill.

I am not inclined personally to insist upon this amendment of the Senate committee being agreed to. The bill will have to go back to the House anyhow. I am very clear, however, that this weather service of the Signal Bureau ought to be transferred to the Agricultural Department, and, for myself, it appears to me that this is about the most proper time to do it, and, as this gentleman suggests, it will not produce any friction or inconvenience at all. Therefore if I were to consult my own feelings and wishes about the matter I should vote against the amendment of the Senate committee.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, as I said on Friday that I was not assured in my own mind that I should not at some future time be in favor of this transfer, but what I deprecated was hasty legislation on this most important matter, both for the sake of the Signal Service and the Agricultural Department, and I think if there was any proof necessary to be adduced that we are acting unintelligibly in voting for the transfer of this bureau, it would be furnished by the Senator from South Carolina and myself this morning. His arguments are from a letter from a distinguished gentleman, and I claim the consideration of the Senate while I read one from another. It shows the paucity of ideas and arguments in the Senate upon this most essential question.

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, September 15, 1888.

SIR: In answer to your verbal inquiry relative to section 5 of the bill which creates an executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture, I have the honor to state that the bill transfers, in block, the entire Signal Service force to the new department, and the proposed legislation is crude and shows unmistakable evidence of haste, without full consideration of the effect which must attend the passage of this bill.

I would respectfully invite your attention to the fact that such a bureau as is named in section 5 of the bill is not known to law. If the meteorological work of the Signal Corps is intended, the intent of the law should be made clear by adding after the word "service," in line 1, the words "Organized under the joint resolution approved February 9, 1870." If the Senate intends to go further and transfer the varied duties of the Signal Corps entire to the Department of Agriculture, it should specifically so provide, but it should be brought to the notice of the Senate that the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army existed for many years prior to the Weather Bureau, and that he has important and responsible duties, which are of a strictly military character. It is hardly thought that Congress intends to impose upon the Agricultural Department the anomalous charge of supervising Army signal duty, which by Statutes at Large devolves on the Chief Signal Officer.

It should also be noted that there is signal property to the value of $100,000 in the Army proper, which, entirely disconnected from the Weather Bureau, is by law and regulations under the control of the Chief Signal Officer, and this section leaves him without a man to care for it. Attention is further invited to the fact that there is in existence nearly 2,300 miles of military telegraph lines, which unite military posts on the frontier, and which are entirely disconnected from the Weather Service. The proposed bill leaves these lines and all military signal duty unprovided for, and it will be necessary for the Secretary of War to ask for an additional appropriation of $50,000 for the maintenance of these lines on a civil basis, since the men now operating them are to be transferred from the War Department by this bill.

"I would ask your careful attention to the provisions of section 5, which transfers this bureau in its present shape to the Agricultural Department without correcting any of the abuses or inefficiencies which may exist." It is provided that the organization is to remain as at present until otherwise provided by law. If the service is to be transferred, the law transferring it should state clearly and specifically what its organization shall be.

The bill provides for the transfer of the entire service to a new department, with provision that the pay of employés shall remain unchanged. The present pay is based on time of service and increases with each year of service; it depends upon the station at which service may be rendered; and, in fact, the conditions are so varied that there are actually one hundred and twenty different rates of pay for the employés of this service. Are these rates to be fixed according to War Department rules and regulations? Are they to continue as under the present organization? It will be seen that this proposed transfer has not been fully considered in detail, and that dangerous precedents and complications must result if the bill becomes a law.

Is the Senate prepared to establish a pension-list for civilian employés, and is it prepared to furnish medical attendance to such employés?

Which is the case now in the Signal Service.

These are privileges which are now secured to the enlisted force of the Signal Service, and which under the provisions of this bill may be considered a part of their present pay and allowance.

It is stated in the report of the committee that the Signal Service may be greatly extended and that it may be the means of saving millions of dollars' worth of property. The Signal Service is at present accomplishing what is proposed by the committee, and there is no demand from the people for its transfer. A year's experience with the Signal Service under its present able management shows that no change is necessary. There is commendation of this service from every section of the country. It is performing excellent work, giving its special bulletins to those interested in agriculture. For the first time in the history of this or any other country can those interested in farm products receive at the close of each week reliable statements of the weather conditions and the probable effect of same on the growing crops. This new feature of Signal Service work is of recent origin and its benefits are acknowledged throughout the country.

It is proposed to try the experiment of placing this valuable service in new hands, chiefly for the purpose of organizing a new department. The Signal Service is now under the management of one who is thoroughly familiar with it, both generally and in detail; one who fully understands its capabilities, appreciates its importance to the varied interests of the country, and who has the knowledge, experience, and determination necessary to make it of more value to the people. By extended travel as a subordinate, the present Chief Signal Officer has become familiar with the needs of every section of the country, and by years of study he has become expert in the vital work of the service, namely, the preparation of weather indications, cold-wave, frost, and storm warnings. His skill as a signal officer has enabled him to devise a cipher system by means of which the weather telegrams are sent at a saving of many thousands of dollars yearly.

While extending the service for the benefit of the farmer, he has been able to reduce the annual expenses $100,000, and has made recommendations which, if adopted by Congress, will still further reduce the annual expenses $112,000, without impairing the efficiency of the service. He has reorganized the office force, and so arranged the meteorological records as to enable the service to furnish data for climatic study without delay. Under the old system hundreds of volumes and thousands of forms were so badly arranged and so deficiently indexed as to render it a matter of great difficulty, and practically an impossibility, to obtain any consecutive data pertaining to the voluntary stations of the country. By improved methods the Chief Signal Officer was enabled to prepare and furnish promptly, in compliance with resolutions of the United States Senate, a most exhaustive paper treating of rainfall in the States and Territories west of the Mississippi River, which will prove of special value to the agriculturists of those sections.

Notwithstanding all this experience, which is so necessary and valuable in the management of a technical service, it is proposed to take it from the most thoroughly qualified man in the country for the work and place it in untried hands. Although the bill provides for the present Chief Signal Officer having charge, as director, of the Weather Bureau, temporarily, I am confident that he would decline such directorship should the service be transferred without a reorganization which would provide for the continued service of those assistants who have proved most efficient, while at the same time freeing the service of those who are incompetent.

By the provisions of section 5 the Signal Corps is stripped of its entire force and military signaling wholly neglected. In the organization of the regular Army it was the intention of Congress to have in it all the various arms of the service, so that it might be possible to organize an army complete in all its details in the shortest possible time. Each branch of the service is represented in the small organized regular Army, so that improvements in each branch of foreign armies, as made from time to time, may be utilized in our own. The Engineer Battalion is so provided, and much good has resulted from the employment of this small force. The Ordnance Corps of the Army, so far as permitted by Congress, keeps pace with the improvements in that branch of the service, so as to be ready to meet the wants on a large increase of force. The force of quartermaster and commissary sergeants furnishes an intelligent body of men ready for enlarged duties, and the Signal Corps, as part of the Army, with its four hundred and seventy enlisted men, stands ready to supply the immediate wants of a volunteer army, in furnishing men skilled in all branches of signaling and operations of field and permanent telegraph lines, all so new in armies, and now so indispensable. The Army must be supplied with a signal corps; and it will be in the interest of economy to keep the meteorological work with it, and thus save the organization of a separate service.

The prime object of the Signal Corps and its proper functions in case of war are entirely ignored by this section, and certainly no action should be taken on this important question before the subject is considered by the Military Committee, which by right should have been consulted in matters pertaining to a bureau of the War Department.

If there is to be a Department of Agriculture, it would seem proper that it should be required to devote its energies to that special branch of industry. There are many commercial interests constantly calling for information from the Signal Service, especially the marine interest, which receives substantial benefit from the storm warnings on the lakes and seacoasts. Might it not be possible that these varied interests would be sacrificed if the proposed change is made?

It may be wise to organize a new department of agriculture, but I doubt the propriety of taking this scientific and extremely valuable service from the management of one who is specially, by education and experience, qualified to supervise and, if necessary, to perform every feature of the work required of his officers or assistants.

The present organization has been in existence eighteen years, and is efficient for the work assigned to it. It is not apparent how it can be made more efficient by the substitution of a wholly civil force for that now employed, as it is proposed to employ the same force.

The pay received by the enlisted force is probably less than it would be under the civil organization; the annual pay of the enlisted force ranges from $1,175 to $684 per man, and this is a smaller compensation than is received by the employés of any civil bureau. If this change is made it will prove expensive, as the rate of pay will be raised to that of other bureaus, while many of the most worthy and efficient observers will be replaced by new and inexperienced men. The bill provides for the immediate discharge of the entire enlisted force on a single day. Such action would be in bad faith on the part of the Government, as these men are all serving under an enlistment of five years. A number of the men have served about twenty years faithfully, and are looking forward to the benefits resulting from the privilege they now have of being placed upon the retired-list after thirty years of service.

While the Signal Service continues, justice demands that those who have engaged in it should be retained during the continuance of the enlistment contract, and any change from a military jurisdiction can only be equitably made by gradual discharge of the present force as time of service expires. This sudden change would not only work injustice to the men, but would impair the efficiency of the service. The current work of the bureau would be injured and the service would be deprived of its most experienced indication officers, who are not included in the provisions of section 5 of the bill. These officers will be returned to their regiments and sixteen years' experience in the preparation of weather forecasts could not be utilized.

The proposed legislation will paralyze all efforts now being made by the Chief Signal Officer to improve the methods of military signaling, and in case of war no army can afford to be without the most thorough and approved system of signaling.

It is only urged that no transfer, in block, of a badly arranged, and in some respects inefficient, personnel be enacted, but that a detailed organization, either civil or military, be provided for. Crude and illy-digested provisions, put forth in a general form, can not but vastly injure the efficiency of this service, which from its importance has both a need of and a right to consideration and wise legislation.

The meteorological service of this country is far in advance of any similar service in the world, as it renders more practical benefits to the public, and these benefits may be increased by proper organization and support. But no improvement can be looked for by depriving the service of its most experienced officers, making the working force civilian and subjecting it to partisan influence. The service is now non-partisan, and the best interests of the country demand that it should be so. Examinations have always been required of persons before enlistment, and the standard of the Signal Corps is much higher than that of any other branch of the Army.

During the past year the service has been seriously crippled by the loss of Fort Myer as a preparatory school for instruction of the observers, who are now enlisted and sent at once on station to be instructed in their duties. Experience shows that during the past year the observers in charge of stations have been hampered in the performance of their regular duties by being obliged to instruct their assistants. It is also apparent that men entering the service without thorough training under a military direction in many cases fail to satisfactorily perform their duties.

Efforts have been made during past years to transfer this service from the War Department, but the reasons urged for this change do not obtain under the present management. The demand for the change no longer exists, and if this bill is forced through Congress it will be at the expense of every interest of the country now receiving benefits from the Signal Service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

Hon. JAMES Z. GEORGE,
United States Senate.

Mr. President, as I said before, the very fact that the Senator from South Carolina and myself have to give the arguments pro and con as we receive them by letter from men who are supposed to be posted shows——

Mr. HARRIS. Who is the writer of the letter just submitted by the Senator?

Mr. PALMER. I suppose I might withhold his name, but I have no object in doing so. I presume he would have no objection to having it known. Lieut. H. H. C. Dunwoody, acting Chief Signal Officer, wrote this letter to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], at the request of the Senator from Mississippi, for information.

As I said before, I think we are about to take a very grave step without due consideration. It was so regarded in the Committee on Agriculture. We felt that although we should like to magnify the Department of Agriculture we should not tamper with so vital an interest as the Signal Service. To me it appears particularly perilous, for upon the coast and upon the waters of the Great Lakes the Signal Service now has attained a reputation that gives confidence to the mariner and is the protector of millions of property and the lives of thousands of men. On the shores of the Great Lakes there are over two hundred signal stations. No sailor ever thinks of coming into or going out of port without looking at those signals.

I think that to transfer this whole service in block to the Agricultural Department would at this time be very perilous, and I think that if it is going to be transferred it should be transferred on the joint reports, and favorable reports, of the Committees on Agriculture and on Military Affairs. If the Committee on Agriculture had supposed that there would be any effort to have the fifth section restored they would have consulted the Committee on Military Affairs, or they would have reported the bill and asked for its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs. Nothing of that kind has been done. Whatever may be the ultimate legislation in regard to this transfer, no decisive step, in my opinion, should be taken now.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator to state that both committees he named reported in favor of the proposed transfer?

Mr. PALMER. No, sir. I say if the Committee on Agriculture had been in favor of this transfer it would have felt bound to have consulted the Committee on Military Affairs; but the committee being nearly unanimous against it, we supposed that there would be no effort on the part of the Senate to transfer it.

I think that if the Senator from Kansas really appreciated the Signal Service, as far as it relates to life and property upon the water, he would be as cautious as any of us in transferring it, without the utmost care in making all the provisions essential to its success. This proposed transfer in block appears to me as a very crude piece of legislation, and I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment of the committee to strike out section 5.

Mr. VEST. I am willing to make a frank confession that I intended to look into this matter, but I have been so busy that I have not been able to do so. I should like the Senator to state what is the exact condition of the question now.

Mr. PALMER. Has the Senator the bill?

Mr. VEST. No. I glanced at the bill and somebody took it off my desk. The Senator can state in a very few words what is the status of the matter at present.

Mr. PALMER. The Department of Agriculture is created by the first four sections of the bill, and section 5 transfers the weather service of the Signal Service Bureau, as it is called, in block to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DAWES. The Senate committee moved to strike that out.

Mr. PALMER. The Senate committee have stricken that out and reported against it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, unless the agricultural interests of the country are to be committed to the War Department generally, there can be no possible reason for the service of the Weather Bureau being placed under military control. The propositions and suggestions which the Senator from Michigan has read relating to the military signal service have no kind of relation to the weather service of this bureau, which does not concern military operations in any respect. The only advantage of it is that it confines the appointment of the Chief of the Signal Service to the Army. That is the whole of that argument and proposition.

It may be that a military government is the best kind of a government. It is perhaps true that the Secretary of War would make the best administrator of the agricultural and the Secretary of the Navy of the commercial interests of the country; but these are novel propositions to make here. It really seems to me that the suggestions upon which this retention of the Weather Bureau, designed to give information in agriculture and in commerce, under the control of the Army, the military department, with which it can have no possible connection, are not entirely worthy of this body.

This service can properly rest nowhere else but in the civil department of the Government. You have no need of enlisted men to give information in regard to the weather, to operate telegraphs which are connected with commercial interests alone.

There can be no additional strength given to these ideas by the report of either one or two committees. They are fixed principles in this Government that the military are to be confined to military matters, to matters of war, and the peace establishment is to be confined to the commercial and agricultural and industrial interests of the country.

I can see no possible difficulty in making the proposed transfer. If the War Department desire a military signal service they should certainly have it. If they require preparation in time of peace for the efficiency of this service in war, it is easy enough for the Committee on Military Affairs to recommend it, and certainly Congress should make provision for it.

But this service as it is now established is purely a civil service. It has no relation to the signal service in time of war. It makes no preparation for that work. The great mass of its duties are confined to giving information of sudden changes of temperature, to ships engaged in commerce, and to the farmers, the fruit-growers, and the gardeners more particularly of the country.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] reminds us that this bureau has nothing military in its character, but is entirely in the service of the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. CALL. Commercial and agricultural.

Mr. DAWES. To some extent that remark is true. There is nothing connected with this Government which I take more interest in than the Signal Service Bureau. The history of it will show the Senator from Florida how it happens to be connected with the Army. If I may use the remark, I was in at the first. It was on my motion that it first had a dollar of appropriation, and it begun with a little appropriation of $15,000 put in an appropriation bill in the House of Representatives of which I had charge, and on my motion.

It came about because there was an Army officer connected with the Signal Service of the Army located on the lakes at Milwaukee or near there who had made this subject a study and who had an idea that he could utilize it for the benefit of commerce on the lakes. For that, and with that idea alone, with no idea that it ever could be utilized for the farming interests of the country, a friend of his came to those who had charge of that bill and suggested that his investigations, voluntary as they were, could be enlarged and improved by a little appropriation. We asked him how much, and he said that if he could have only $15,000 it would be enough to try this experiment. He said this man had of his own accord done very much for the benefit of commerce on the lakes by indicating what the weather was to be, and vessels cleared from harbors or sought refuge in harbors according to the indications which he gave. Out of that grew this great service from year to year.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to read the joint resolution which first established the service, which confirms exactly what he says.

Mr. DAWES. It grew from little——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to read the joint resolution. It will confirm what he says.

Mr. DAWES. I will.

Mr. GEORGE. February 9, 1870, the following joint resolution was passed:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to provide for taking meteorological observations at the military stations in the interior of the continent, and at other points in the States and Territories of the United States, and for giving notice on the northern lakes and on the seacoast, by magnetic telegraph and marine signals, of the approach and force of storms.

Mr. DAWES. It was before the passage of that joint resolution that the appropriation to which I referred was made. The joint resolution grew out of the success of that appropriation precisely as was the case with the Fish Commission. The law establishing the Fish Commission which exists to-day on the statute-book grew the next year out of an appropriation of $5,000 introduced into a similar appropriation bill.

I was going to remark that the Signal Service developed from these small beginnings and reached out not only for the benefit of commerce, but of agriculture, and very many business relations have availed themselves of it which were not thought of originally.

It has come to be true that it is of immense advantage to agriculture, and perhaps of more advantage to the agricultural interests of the country than to any other. It is of immense advantage to them, and no man having the interest of this bureau at heart desires anything but to push it as far as it can be pushed in that direction.

So far as the creation of this Department of Agriculture, making it a Cabinet position, is concerned, those who desire the best development of this bureau desire also the passage of this measure. It may be true (I am coming more and more every year to think it is true) that ultimately this bureau will be more largely devoted to the interests of agriculture than to the interests of commerce, where it began.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the fact now. It is more beneficial to agriculture than it is to commerce.

Mr. DAWES. There is no doubt about that. The gentleman from whose investigations it began and who had charge of it in connection with the Signal Bureau in its early years, it has always seemed to me, had the most scientific knowledge in reference to it of anybody ever connected with it. At any rate it never would have been a success had it not been for the clear head and scientific research and ability to group together and make a language out of the facts gathered together in that bureau like Albert J. Myer. All others followed after him, and some of them, I am free to say, a good ways after him.

But it has come to be a bureau of which this Government ought to be proud, which it ought to cherish. It may be that sooner or later it ought to be with the Agricultural Department, as it is proposed to establish it by this bill; but I for one am not ready now and in this way to transfer it all in block without any preparation for the change. As one who has stood by this bureau from beginning and have no interest in the advancement or the furthering of the wishes of any man connected with it, but as one who has seen it grow up and done what he could to help it grow up, when it goes to the Agricultural Department I want that it shall go there under an organization that will take it along as a civil institution in the best way.

If this new department will content itself by establishing itself in the manner provided in this bill until the next session of Congress or the next Congress, when this organization can be transferred without friction, its best friends will be found helping to contribute to that end; but I am unwilling for one to contribute to doing it in this crude manner and breaking up all arrangements that are being carried on under this system without knowing what the practical operation of this provision will be, where those who are employed in it will be, and what the Signal Service Bureau will be when it is taken out.

I ask the Senate therefore, earnestly, in the interest of this bureau and in no other interest, to strike this section for the present out of the bill.

Mr. CALL. In all the Senator from Massachusetts has so well said as to the honorable paternity of this service there is not a single reason given why the service would not be as efficient if transferred in block, as he terms it, under the Agricultural Department as it would be under the Secretary of War. What is the difference? If you choose to discharge these people, as they ought to be discharged, except the general in charge, who from personal considerations might be retained—if you choose to discharge the enlisted men from the military service it requires but three words to do it. Why should we have a large corps of civilians employed in civil duty?

Mr. GEORGE. It is a contract.

Mr. CALL. A contract with these men? Oh, well; if you hold that everything the Government does is a contract, comply with it. What is the contract? That they shall be employed for life or for a term of years?

Mr. GEORGE. For five years.

Mr. CALL. They can be employed for five years on the same terms they are now employed in the Army. If they do not perform the duties, discharge them. You need not try them before a military court-martial in order to do that. But why enlarge the number of people who are subject to military law, who are deprived of the rights of citizens? Why in a republic assign men who are not performing military duties to the severe discipline of the military service? That is a great objection to the present establishment.

Mr. GEORGE. But they do perform military duties.

Mr. CALL. What military duties do they perform?

Mr. GEORGE. They signal for the Army.

Mr. CALL. There is no signaling required for the Army.

Mr. GEORGE. They operate military-telegraph lines.

Mr. CALL. There is no military telegraphing required for the Army.

Mr. GEORGE. There are 23,000 miles of military telegraphs.

Mr. CALL. Built when there was some necessity for it, but now there is little or none. We have no foreign war. Our relations with the Indians do not require the maintenance of any class of military-telegraph lines. We all know that. It is a pretense. This duty is a civil duty. It is a commercial interest; it is an agricultural interest. It is a mere pretense without any truth that there is any military interest whatever in the weather or meteorological bureau or that it should have any connection with the Army. The Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Massachusetts can point to none; and when they say there are 23,000 miles of military telegraph it is a delusion, because although it may have been constructed under the military service and for temporary military exigencies, we know that it is not maintained for that purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. It is now in operation.

Mr. CALL. Where? I beg the Senator to say where. I aver it as a fact that nowhere in this country is there any existing line of military telegraph maintained as a necessity, or properly so, as a part of the necessities of this Weather Service, this commercial and agricultural interest. Where are the enemies in war that we should require military telegraphs at this time?

Mr. President, these things have no kind of foundation. Transfer it in block. What do you transfer? So many clerks, so many telegraph operators, telegraphing not for military signal service. The service of signaling and communicating by signals in a field to an army is one thing, and telegraphic service in commercial and agricultural interests is just as distinct as the judge and the jury and the court.

There is no difficulty whatever in transferring this bureau to-day, these telegraph operators, these clerks in the Department here who have nothing whatever to do with the Army except that they are enlisted, they having grown up as an incident, as the Senator from Massachusetts said, to a service already established and known as the Signal Service for war purposes and created in time of war.

I have no particular interest in this matter. I am in favor of extending this bureau and maintaining it. It is a civil bureau. It is related to agricultural and commercial interests entirely. It has nothing to do with the Army. There is no system of telegraphing and signaling by telegraph extending all over the country which can be said to be peculiarly military. Of course telegraphs are a great military aid in time of war, and a necessity of communication, but this is nothing more than the communication which belongs to us in the ordinary transactions of life. It is an agency that may be used, and it is now entirely commercial and industrial. You might just as well have enlisted men to serve as jurors and an official of the Army assigned as a judge of the courts or to fill the legislative positions here as to maintain this as a military department.

[Mr. PLUMB withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in a good deal of what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has said I entirely sympathize. I believe that at every Congress since I have been a member of this body I have introduced a bill or have voted for a bill to make the Agricultural Department an executive department. I have made one or two speeches in this body in advocacy of that measure. My opinions upon that subject are well known and I do not regard it as necessary to repeat them.

I find now in the fourth Congress in which I have served that there seems to be a general concurrence of opinion as to the propriety of making the Agricultural Department an executive department, so that the head of the department may be a member of the President's Cabinet. As there seems now to be no objection to that, I shall not discuss it.

There is a different view, though, between the members of the Agricultural Committee and among the members of this body generally as to the disposition to be made of the weather branch of the Signal Service Bureau. I believe the Senator from Kansas was not present when the Agricultural Committee, with entire unanimity of all the members except him as far as I know, after very careful consideration of this subject, determined that it was unsafe and unwise to make the change provided for in the fifth section of the bill and therefore recommended that it should be stricken out.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. I think he stated the case substantially correctly with a slight addition to it. There was a feeling that the bill in some shape ought to pass.

Mr. GEORGE. All agree to that.

Mr. PLUMB. And it was desirable to have eliminated anything liable to create special objection, and thereby prevent its passage; and in that view of the case I think some members of the committee subordinated their view as to what ought to be done, and I know I was one of them. I say now that I do not care so much about the transfer of the bureau at this time as I do about the passage of the bill; but I do not like to have the assertion that the committee decided that the bureau should stay with the War Department go without contradiction.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator from Kansas is mistaken in regard to the view of the committee. The view of the committee was that although it might be advisable in time to make this transfer, there was no reason perhaps why it should be made now, and they thought it would be unsafe without further light on the subject. That was the view, as I understood, in the committee, and I think the Senator from Mississippi will agree with me in that.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator from Mississippi will allow me——

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. As one member of the committee my vote in the committee for this amendment was chiefly, almost entirely, influenced by what I understood to be the fact, and still understand to be the fact, that the transfer at the present time will be likely to excite all or nearly all the opposition that the bill will meet with in its progress, and how serious that may be I do not know. I have understood that it might be such as to involve the fate of the bill, and with a view to get the department established upon the basis desired, to get it a foothold so that it will have "a local habitation and a name" on this higher elevation where it is desired to place it so that hereafter it may attract unto itself whatever is necessary for its aggrandizement and increasing development, I was anxious to take this step and to have no mistake about it. With a view to the accomplishing of that desirable thing without risk of its failure, I acquiesced in this amendment and approved of it. I have no other motive now. I think the transfer should be made. I think without the Weather Bureau, and one thoroughly and appropriately organized, the Agricultural Department will suffer for the want of the assistance which it should have in the future.

At the present time the service is largely inefficient. Our farmers do not realize from it, in my opinion, 10 per cent. of the good that they will realize from its proper development, and it may be in the future a question whether this existing Signal Service that we have should be transferred, or whether there should be a new one organized and established in connection with the Department of Agriculture for specific uses of our agricultural people. It is a question whether it may be carried on efficiently in such a way as best to serve the interests of commerce under the War Department, or whether the Bureau of Weather Service in the Agricultural Department should not be wholly and exclusively devoted to the benefit of agriculture. There are so many questions in regard to it, even so many personal questions arising as to whether the transfer should be made at this time, that I favor, as I stated before, the amendment in order that we may get something, the main thing in the bill certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course there were various views operating upon the minds of members of the committee in recommending this amendment. Several Senators have stated theirs. I stated mine partially on Friday. There is one view, however, that has not been presented to the Senate, and which operated largely on the minds of the members of the committee, and that is that this legislation in section 5 was very crude and very imperfect, and such as would disorganize and disarrange the whole Signal Service, as well in its Army relations as in its meteorological relation. The first provision in the section is:

That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture.

There is no line drawn in the statutes of the United States which separates and marks with distinctness the weather service of the Signal Service Office from the military service; and when you make the transfer you have no standard by which you can effectuate it. There are appropriations for several purposes, and as to those the division can be made; but as to the officers, from the Chief Signal Officer down to the privates, there is nothing in the statutes, so far as I have been able to learn—if I am mistaken in this the Senators who oppose my view can correct me—which designates any particular officer or any particular enlisted man or non-commissioned officer for the weather bureau as contradistinguished from the military signal service. I ask when you make this transfer, how are you going to do it?

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me one moment, I will say to him that my information is—a good deal of it has been acquired from the letter I read this morning—that the present bureau is dependent in very large measure upon persons connected with the various experimental stations and agricultural colleges in the various States.

Mr. GEORGE. I will come to that presently.

Mr. BUTLER. I was answering that part of your question.

Mr. GEORGE. They are not part of the Signal Service Bureau, and you do not transfer them.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that.

Mr. GEORGE. I am talking about the legal effect of the section. The first clause of it provides for a transfer of the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau. There is no such thing. There is a transfer of something that does not exist. There is nothing in the statutes which draws a distinction except in the appropriations requiring the money to be applied in a particular way; but in the organization of the personnel of the Signal Service there is no distinction drawn between military signaling and the weather service—not a particle. How are you going to do that? When you get your board, as provided for in section 5, to make the transfer, where are you going to run the line of division? Who will say under this statute that so many sergeants and so many corporals and so many privates and so many commissioned officers shall be maintained to discharge the military part of it, and so many shall be turned over to the weather service part?

So you find in the very beginning that this legislation can not be adopted. It is crude; it has not been examined and perfected as was necessary to form a new weather service bureau.

Then again:

Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau—

What?

the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau.

Who are these subordinates? If you transfer all, if you transfer every private, if you transfer every sergeant, if you transfer every corporal, if you transfer every second lieutenant, what have you left then for the military part of the service?

Then it goes on and says:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps.

What are you going to do with the sergeants? What are you going to do with the corporals? What are you going to do with the privates? The commissioned officers are preserved in their status in the Army; but are you going to discharge the others? You have 150 sergeants, you have 50 corporals, and you have about 300 privates. What is to become of them? They are all under contract. The Government has enlisted them for five years. The Government is bound to feed them and to clothe them and to furnish medical assistance to them. Suppose you transfer them; how is all this to be done? They are privates, they are sergeants, they are corporals, and they are paid in that way, paid as sergeants, paid as privates, paid as corporals. Now when you come to feed them how are you going to do it? Have you a commissary department in the Department of Agriculture? Have you a quartermaster's department in the Agricultural Department? Have you a medical staff in the Agricultural Department? All these men are entitled to be clothed, entitled to be transported, entitled to be fed, and entitled to medical assistance under their contract. How are you going to perform that contract?

Let us go on a little further to see how this thing will work:

The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; and the compensation now paid to the employés and enlisted men of said service shall continue as now.

There are one hundred and twenty-two different rates of pay for these men, based upon their length of service and other considerations. How are you going to arrange that in the Agricultural Department? You will find some trouble in it.

The measure is crude; it is ill-digested. In other words, it is an attempt to transfer and ingraft on a purely civil department a military establishment, and of course when you undertake to do that you will always fail to accomplish what you intend to do.

These are some of the inconsistencies, some of the difficulties which attend this wholesale attempt to transfer a part of the military establishment of the Government to a civil department.

But, Mr. President, whatever may be our ultimate determination as to where this Weather Bureau ought to go, it is very certain that it ought not to go to a civil department now, and I am not right sure whether I shall ever be willing to see it transferred.

Senators talk here about the necessity of having this weather service made subordinate to the interests of the farmer. That is very nice. I am a farmer and I believe every member of the Committee on Agriculture is a farmer. I know of no exception to it. I have no other interests than farming. Will some man tell me right now, leaving out all gush, in what respect the service of this bureau can be made more subordinate to the interests of farmers than it is now? Will some Senator point out to me any defects in the service as now carried on which will be remedied by making the transfer? I stated on Friday that so far as predictions are concerned it would always happen that the predictions would never reach ninety-nine out of every one hundred farmers until the event had happened.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to say a word here?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. BLAIR. It has been claimed, I think, that great advantage would result to the farmers from the head of the Agricultural Department having the control of this bureau, the absolute control of it, and in this way: That the adaptation of crops to particular portions of the country can be determined better by more systematic and thorough meteorological and climatic observations than perhaps in almost any other way; and that the head of the Agricultural Department will make that the subject-matter of inquiry, the chief duty of the Signal Bureau in this weather department. As it now exists, the officer in control is a military officer; he is in no wise by law subordinated to the authority of the Agricultural Department. He does what he does for it rather by permission and consent than by absolute obligation of law, and is not subject to the control of an officer who has the development of the agricultural interests primarily under his charge; and now by the transfer of the bureau to the charge of the head of that department we shall be likely to get all the good that can be got out of it, whereas at the present time it is merely an appurtenance to the duties of a military officer, to whom farming is altogether a matter of comparatively little consequence.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire is a little plausible, but it has no relation whatever to any duty performed by this bureau which is thus transferred. If you want what the Senator from New Hampshire seems to desire, that there should be a scientific study of meteorology as to every section of this country, not with reference, as now, to predicting storms and forecasting the weather, but with reference to the adaptation of any particular place with its climate, with its rain, with its sunshine and storm, to the raising of any particular crop, then you have got something clear outside of anything that is in this bureau and clear outside of any connection it has——

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but just there is the main purpose, the chief direction in which this bureau can be made serviceable to the farming interests of the country, with reference to climatology as well as the observation of weather.

Mr. GEORGE. The study of climatology, the adaptation of soil and climate to the production of particular crops, may be carried on properly now at the Agricultural Department without reference to or an invasion of the duties performed by the Signal Service Bureau entirely outside of it. This bureau has nothing to do with anything of that sort. It is organized in its civil capacity, leaving out its military capacity, mainly, and almost exclusively, with the view of forecasting the weather for twenty-four hours, and I want to call attention now to the fact that the longest time which they ever undertake to forecast the weather is thirty-two hours, and they find as they add an hour to the length of the prediction, so is the uncertainty as to whether the prediction will be verified.

Now, let us stop and talk as sensible men about this. What good will it do the farmers of this country? They do not live in towns; they do not take daily papers; they do not leave their farms every morning and go into some village or city for the purpose of ascertaining how the weather is going to be for the next twenty-four hours.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. GEORGE. Not now. I do not wish to be interrupted.

How are they going to get it? I will take Mississippi for instance. I am quite familiar with that State, and there are three or four daily papers in Mississippi. They are published in the morning. Suppose they get these reports. Very few farmers take daily papers. Most of them live from 1 to 10 miles from any post office; and how are they to be put in possession of these predictions until after the period at which the predictions will either be verified or falsified?

There is an interest in this country very largely subserved by the weather part of the Signal Service Bureau who do get the information in time to control their actions. In the large cities, in New York, in Chicago, in Boston, in New Orleans, and in various other large cities of the country where there is shipping, these reports are published every morning; and if a storm is forecast on the seas the owners of vessels may regulate their conduct accordingly.

But I wish to say to the Senate, what probably most Senators are not aware of, that in the respects in which the weather service can be of especial benefit to farmers it has already accomplished and is now accomplishing the best results ever obtained in this country or anywhere else. Do Senators know that on every Sunday a bulletin is issued by the Signal Service Bureau stating the weather in all parts of this country for the previous seven days and its effect upon crops? I have a few of these bulletins here before me, the last two, but I will not read them to the Senate. I will state, however, that upon an examination of those reports as applied to the State of Mississippi, from which I have information otherwise as to the correctness or incorrectness of the reports, I find that the reports are entirely correct. These reports are made oftener than the Agricultural Department make their crop reports. They make theirs, I believe, once a month, not oftener.

This bureau issues these bulletins every Sunday morning, and these reports are distributed all over the country, and whilst farmers now can not have the benefit, from the nature of their lives and the nature of their business, of conforming their actions to predictions as to the weather, they can conform their business and make their business arrangements with reference to information furnished weekly by this Bureau. For instance, I was informed the other day that a gentleman in New Jersey had a large amount of grapes for sale. A man came from New York to buy them. He was offered so and so. He said, "I will wait until I see the weekly report of the Signal Service Bureau." When he saw that, he saw that there had been rain and injury done to the crop, and he received 30 per cent. more than he was offered before he got the report.

Mr. President, a good deal has been said about Army officers interfering in civil matters; that they are not the proper persons for this business. Suppose we discharge all the engineers of the War Department from their appropriate duties in improving rivers and harbors, how are you going to supply their places? That is a peculiarly civil matter. Instead of endeavoring to cut off the Army from any association with the business of the people, we ought to enlist them on that side. We are obliged to keep an army, not so much for use in peace, but as a nucleus for an army in war. There is a large number of engineer officers competent to build harbors, competent to clean rivers, and all that sort of thing.

What are they to do? There is no military duty for them to do. Is it not well that during times of peace when these men have nothing in their profession to do, for them to earn their salaries and to serve their masters, the American people, by doing work which they are qualified to do, and work which the American people have paid for teaching them how to do? I see no incongruity in that.

So, Mr. President, in reference to the army signaling. I am not much of a military man, but I see from what I have read—and I appeal to other Senators who have more knowledge on that subject than I have—that it is as essential now in the present state of the world to have a competent signal corps for an army as it is to have an engineer corps.

Mr. PLUMB. Then what——

Mr. GEORGE. Let me get through, and then you can reply to me if you please.

We do not send out in the present age of the world little armies of eight or ten thousand men. Armies now amount to hundreds of thousands, and the same army covers a large district of territory. It is impossible, even when under fire, that the commanding general by his couriers on horseback should have instant communication with all parts of his army. So this is a useful service, and absolutely essential in the present system of modern warfare. Why? There is a great battle to be fought; hundreds of thousands of men are to be engaged in it; the lines are several miles long; it would take hours to communicate back and forth from the commanding general to the commander of one of his divisions. By signaling the communication is instantaneous.

It is now understood, if am not incorrectly informed, that a competent, faithful, well-organized, and skillful signal service corps is just as essential to an army in the field as an engineer corps or any other part of it.

This corps is a part of the Army. Gentlemen sneer at that. You have provided for it; it has grown up under the Army; and because the people through their representatives, desiring to have a competent signal service corps in the Army when in peace there is very little for them to do, see proper to annex to them the discharge of civil duties for which they are specially qualified, we are told that we are subordinating the interests of agriculture and of the people of this country to the Army!

Let us see how this thing has grown up. The first statute on the subject of a signal service corps was passed before the late war. June 21, 1860, it was found necessary to have a signal service, and in 1861 belonging to that service were 108 commissioned officers and 259 enlisted men. In 1866, when the war was over, they ran down and there was only 1 commissioned officer with 7 enlisted men in the service. But in 1870, as we were informed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], it being essential to keep up this corps of the Army, Congress, in order to keep it up and yet at the same time there being no war to utilize the men who were qualified for the discharge of this signal service, passed the law alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts, requiring them to inquire into storm signals for the benefit of navigation on the lakes, and then they embraced the sea; and it went on in that way until about 1873, doing great good, no man complaining that the duties were not performed exactly right, no man complaining that this was mercantile business or commercial business, and that therefore it should be under the Secretary of the Treasury and not under the Secretary of War. The men in this service went on performing their duties faithfully and well, saving thousands of lives and hundreds of vessels, with no complaint from any source that they were not doing their duty right.

The corps was kept up and put on that duty, and then in 1871 we find there were 17 commissioned officers and 230 enlisted men, and in 1876 there were 20 commissioned officers and 398 enlisted men, and about 1873, if I am not mistaken, or 1874, the first provision was introduced into the statute which required the men of this bureau to make observations with reference to the benefit of agriculture. They have been doing it ever since. Now, will any Senator say that they do not do their duty properly?

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator refers to me, I say I do most decidedly.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Then point out when I get through where they do not do it properly. I know that about three or four years ago we got to meddling with this thing, and matters did not work as well then as they did before, and I want to call the attention of Senators to that, for I have looked into this subject somewhat.

As to the merely meteorological observations, you can teach the taking of them to any intelligent man; but there is one part of this duty which can only be performed by a man of a peculiar order of mind and of great experience, and that is an important part of it. You can take an ordinarily intelligent man and station him at Chicago, for instance, and he can report to you the state of the barometer, the temperature, and the direction of the wind. That only requires care. But when you come to what is called the indicator, the man who takes the reports coming up from all parts of this country and compares them and interprets them, he has a duty to perform which very few men can perform, and none, however intelligent, can do it except with great experience.

Mr. President, let me describe that operation for a minute so that Senators may understand it. Here are five hundred different reports coming into the Signal Bureau at Washington, say at 11 o'clock at night, from all parts of the country. All these reports are to be compared, and what they mean is to be determined. Do Senators know that the examination of these reports has to be so rapid that sometimes less than a minute is allowed for the observation and comparison and weighing of the different materials that come in? Here is a report saying the temperature is so and so, and the same report says the wind is from a certain direction, and then there may be other elements about which I am probably not familiar. But all such reports from a particular section must be taken and compared, and upon that comparison a prediction is to be made. Let us see how that is done and see whether merely smart, intelligent men, men who understand meteorology, can do that thing satisfactorily:

The tri-daily indications are now issued for a period of thirty-two hours, so that they hold good for twenty-four hours, or more, from the time they reach the general public. This increase in the length of hours, while manifestly in the public interest, has naturally resulted in a reduced percentage of verification, as might be expected; the diminution from such cause amounting so far to 7 per cent. It is thought that with carefully selected indications officers the diminution in accuracy which has resulted from an increase in time may be eventually compensated for by increased skill through study, research, and practice. The difference of successful percentage between predicting officers is very marked.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that.

The difference of successful percentage between predicting officers is very marked, as is shown by the fact that between the general standing of the best predicting officer and of the poorest there is a difference of 13.7 per cent. It is thus to be seen how greatly such public interests as depend upon accurate forecasts must be benefited or prejudiced by any action which tends to either raise or lower the standard or efficiency of these officers.

It has been a subject of complaint that the indications of this service have not improved to the extent expected—

That is the predictions—

And since the statement has been officially put forth that the indications are made by the same officers who have made them for years, it is presumed that the public labors under this same misapprehension. Such is not the fact, as within the past three or four years the relief of the old officers detailed from the line of the Army has been forced upon the Chief Signal Officer by legislative action. In consequence, it followed that the young officers of the Signal Corps, who have only within the past year or two received any extended instruction in meteorology, have been assigned to this important duty. Within the past year three officers have necessarily been assigned to indications work who never before have performed duty of this character. It consequently follows that through restrictive legislation the Chief Signal Officer finds himself compelled to permit the new officers to serve their apprenticeship in predicting at the expense of the whole country.

So that whenever you have a change, whenever you bring in a man without experience, then you have got false predictions, or, at least, you have got a large loss in the percentage of accurate predictions.

Again, on page 44—I am reading from the report of General Greely—I find:

The table of percentages shows that in such proportion as officers of long experience and high standing have been relieved from signal duty, to be replaced by those of less experience and training, just to that extent the character of the service, as shown by the verifications, has decreased. If the country is to have the utmost benefit which can be derived from a bureau of this kind, it must be by insuring that the officers who make these indications shall be men of training and experience, with a decidedly scientific bent of mind.

Mr. President, where do you get men who have permanency of situation in the Departments except in the Army? Talk about permanency in situation, long experience, and all that sort of thing in the other departments here excites the ire of all of us. We denounce that. We want our friends in. When the Democrats succeed they want Democrats in; and when the Republicans succeed they want Republicans in. So in the ordinary personnel of the Departments you are liable to have changes with every change of administration; and yet the experience of this bureau shows that if you want to have accurate predictions, if you want to have thorough and good work done, you must retain in your Departments for long periods of time the men who are able to do it.

What is there in all this? Will any Senator say how he could improve it? The Senator from Kansas said that the Signal Service work was not done well. In what respect is it not done well? Are the predictions false? If that is alleged, I answer by showing you that by your own legislation you have required a change of officers, and that by this change there was a large decrease in the percentage of verifications. Are you going to make it any better; are you going to make your predictions better by tearing up this bureau and reorganizing it and putting in new men and putting in a man who happens to be a friend and supporter of the Senator from Massachusetts, or the Senator from Alabama, or some other Senators around; or will you preserve its efficiency by putting in men there who can retain their places as other Army officers, to be turned out when they are of no account, when they do not perform their duties well?

So, Mr. President, as far as I can see, this section is not only crude and ill-digested, but worse than that, it introduces a law which can not be carried out; and not only that, but if you make the transfer and make it properly and make it under a well-digested, carefully-drawn bill, if you take the service from the Army, you are in great danger of having a substitute which will not be half as efficient for agriculture as the bureau that we now have.

Mr. VEST. I do not propose, Mr. President, to make any elaborate argument or any studied effort about this bill. I take great interest in it as a matter of course, because the State of Missouri is one of the largest agricultural States in the Union, and my constituents almost always feel the very greatest possible interest in a measure of this kind.

It seems to me there has been a confusion as to the issues that are pending before the Senate in this present legislation. If the question were here whether we were to abolish this Signal Service Bureau, or the weather bureau or weather division of it, a good deal that has been said would be entirely applicable; but as I understand it there is no such proposition pending before the Senate. The simple question is whether we are to establish an executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture, and then whether we are to attach to that the Weather Bureau of the Signal Service. That is my understanding of the issue that is pending here.

About the first issue there can be I think no sort of question. This Department of Agriculture will be established as one of the executive departments of the Government, and the only salient point, then, is as to whether this Signal Service Bureau or the weather department of it, in the language of the bill before me, shall be attached to this agricultural executive department after we have created it. About that, sir, I have not the slightest doubt, so far as my own vote and judgment are concerned.

It seems to me there is not one single argument why the Army should retain possession of this Weather Bureau. It is an adjunct, simply and solely, of agriculture, and of nothing else. The signal part of this bureau is simply the handling of flags, as all of us who have been out in the West and amongst the mountains have seen over and over again an Army officer at some high point in the mountains that has a signal service there isolated and alone, from which he signals the condition of the atmosphere, and changes his flag from one day to another. It is a mere show performance so far as the flag is concerned. It amounts to nothing of consequence; and the only possible utility in this Signal Service Bureau is in that portion of it which attaches to the Weather Bureau and which gives information, not always entirely reliable, but simply approximating to what may be expected to be the atmospheric changes in the different localities throughout the country.

I heartily agree with what the Senator from Kansas has said as to the absurd reports that are frequently made, and so long as men are finite, so long as human judgment has not arrived to the perfection which is given to the gods, there must be this inaccuracy, this guessing, frequently this absurdity. No living man, I care not how much science he may have attained, can ever tell over a distance of thousands of miles what a particular week or a particular day will be in any locality. That is absurd upon the face of it; but to do justice to this Weather Bureau I must say that there are some things connected with it which are of the very greatest importance.

There is no sort of question that science has attained to an approximate result as to great and sudden atmospheric changes. It is within my personal knowledge that cyclones in my State of Missouri have been foretold by this Weather Bureau; not the exact locality, for that was impossible; not the amount of damage, for that was equally impossible, but the notice has been sent out—the storm-signal—that a storm would proceed upon a certain extent of territory, not in any specific locality, but over certain regions, and subsequent events have shown that to be true.

There is not a sensible man in this city who does not know when the storm-signal is put up here over the Weather Bureau that in seventy-five cases, at least, out of one hundred that storm comes, not always in the full force predicted, but in some sort of shape to show that science has approximated to the result attained.

That is of incalculable advantage to the agriculturists. When this Weather Bureau can even approximate as to what may be expected as to a great convulsion, a radical change in atmospheric currents, that is of great value to the intelligent farmer, and for that reason I would not vote to abolish this Weather Bureau, but at the same time I am clearly of the opinion that not one single argument can be made that is anything more than plausible why it should remain under the control of the Army.

If we create this executive department why not give it all the powers that should appertain to it? If we are to make the head of this department—it is called a department now in law but it is simply a great bureau of the Interior Department—if we are to make the Commissioner of Agriculture an executive officer, we should give to him the full powers necessary to subserve all the interests of agriculture in this country. It is not a question as to abolishing the Signal Service. It is a question where we should put it; and if we conclude to establish a great executive department of agriculture we should give it this appurtenance of the Weather Bureau which belongs to agriculture and not to military affairs. It seems to me in that single sentence is the whole argument, and certainly the one that will control my action.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course I do not know how to reply to the peculiar kind of argumentation of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], in which he undertakes to make me a worshiper of the Army and as going back on the agriculturists of the country and all that sort of thing. If it is any consolation to that Senator to believe that I am not devoted to the agricultural interests of the country, or that I have any special interest in the Army, be it so; but I do not believe that I am acquainted with a single man who belongs to the Army. I can not call to mind a single officer of the Army with whom I am personally acquainted; but if it is any consolation to the Senator to entertain this opinion, he is welcome to it.

I attempted to discharge my duty in the speech I made by showing, as I thought I showed and I believe I showed, that as things were now and were likely to remain for some time, the agriculturists of this country would get more benefit from the Weather Bureau, conducted as it now is, than they would by breaking it up, getting new officers and a new personnel entirely and transferring it to another department.

I endeavored to show—and that has not been contradicted by anybody—that the predictions as to the weather would not in one case in a hundred ever reach the farmers of this country before the prediction would either be verified or falsified. I did show that as to the commerce of this country, as to the shipping in the large cities where these reports are published every morning in the daily papers, great benefits could arise. I did show, also, and there has been no controversy about that, that as to all that anybody can claim to be the benefit which can be derived by the farmers of this country from weather reports, they already have them under the weekly bulletins of the Signal Service Office issued here. Gentlemen, instead of answering these plain points, get up and glorify the farmer, talk about the importance of agriculture and about the importance of everybody and everything being subordinated to it. That is the answer they make to the plain statements I made, first, your predictions can not reach the farmers until it is too late, and, secondly, all the weather information that it is possible to give to them is given in an accurate form by the bulletins every week.

Then, in addition, the Senator from Kansas seemed to make light of the idea that in time of peace we had any particular use for military signaling. That may be true. In time of peace we have very little use for the Army except as having a body of men and officers prepared to go into war, and prepared to act as a nucleus for the volunteer soldiers of the country in making an army. That is about all. I thought it was the policy of this Government to not have a large standing Army—and I am opposed to that—but to have a sufficient body of men and officers trained in all the various departments of military knowledge so that if war should come there would be competent men and competent officers to do every single thing that is done in war. If that is not the policy of this country, we had better abolish the Army entirely and abolish West Point.

The Senator says that Army signaling is taught at West Point. I answer that by saying that may be so, and yet like all theoretic knowledge it amounts to very little unless put in practice. The report of General Greely, from which I read, shows that the present state of Army signaling amongst those who have not been specially trained is very inefficient.

Mr. President, this is a plain business proposition. Here is a bureau, as I understand, first in importance and in usefulness in the whole world, that has grown up in the Army, under Army officers, to its present usefulness. The Senator from Kansas sneers and makes fun of some bulletins they have issued. I can not reply to anything of that sort. We do know that as to 80 per cent. of the predictions—and it has gone as high as 89 and it fell off when we made changes in the officers under the legislation of Congress—that as to 80 per cent. of the predictions made by this bureau as to the weather, there has been a verification. That is what the report says. The Senator shakes his head. If he knows more about it than General Greely he has a right to give his information on that subject.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator permit me a suggestion? I suggest that the great storm of last winter, the greatest storm probably this country has ever known, was as totally unknown to any official of the Signal Service as to any citizen on the streets. There was no premonition of it furnished by that bureau.

Mr. GEORGE. That may be an exceptional case. The reports show, and I hold the report of General Greely in my hand, that over 80 per cent. of the predictions made by that bureau are verified.

Then you seek to destroy this. You start out crudely. No man can take the fifth section of this bill and say who shall go in the Agricultural Department and who shall remain. No one can do that. You make your change suddenly. You make it without due reflection; you make it without due preparation. You discharge the best and most experienced men you have, and I showed that wherever you discharged the experienced men then right off that discharge was indicated by a failure in a larger percentage of the verifications of the predictions.

The Senator assails the engineers of the Army. I do not know how competent they are. I only know that we have appropriated this year about $22,000,000 to be spent solely under their direction. If they are incompetent, the Senator from Kansas and other Senators who believe they are incompetent ought to suggest a better means of spending that money, ought to suggest a better personnel to superintend these immense works for which we pay these large sums of money.

Mr. President, I do not join in any idolatry of the Army, nor do I join in any depreciation of the Army. They are our Army; the officers are educated at our expense; and in times of peace I think it is fair to them, fair to the country, fair to the tax-payers of this country that they should perform such civil duties as they are specially qualified for.

Mr. BUTLER. I think, Mr. President, in order to have a just conception and comprehension of what we are proposing to do it would be as well to see what is proposed in the fifth section of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

The intimation has been made by the Senator from Mississippi, and others who agree with him in this matter, that there is some intention to destroy the Signal Service Bureau of the Army. I see nothing of that kind in this bill. On the contrary, it says distinctly:

SEC. 5. That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture, to take effect July 1, 1888, and shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary to efficiently manage said bureau. Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau, including the second lieutenants now in service, shall continue as at present: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps. The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

In the second paragraph of that section it is said:

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to appoint a board of three Army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member. The duty of said board shall be to make an inventory of all property now in the control and possession of the Signal Service Bureau, and shall separate and turn over to the Department of Agriculture such portions of the property as the said board may determine to be suitable for the work of the Signal Service Weather Bureau. The remainder of the property shall remain in the control of the Secretary of War.

I do not see anything in that which proposes to destroy the Signal Service Bureau of the Army. On the contrary it remains practically intact, and as has been so properly said by the Senator from Kansas, there is now very little for the Signal Bureau of the Army to do. In time of war it becomes a very important service, but even that service has been largely superseded by the military telegraph, even on the field of battle; and whilst it is true that Army officers are taught military signaling at West Point, and perhaps when appointed from civil life they are taught it, that is purely and simply a military duty; Army officers are supposed to be informed in strictly military duties and nothing else. True, the engineers discharge certain civil duties in their surveys and management of the rivers and harbors, but that is merely an incident of their education.

It is no reflection upon the officers of the Army to say that these bulletins and communications are imperfect, incorrect. The predictions made are largely guess-work. But I understand the proposition in this bill is to make it strictly and essentially a scientific bureau, and that some scientific man shall be put at the head of it as is to-day at the head of the Geological Survey, of the Smithsonian Institution, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and of the other scientific bureaus of the Government. It does not involve merely the knowledge of transmitting signals from one hill top to another, but involves the study of the currents of the wind, of the atmosphere, meteorological studies, which require sometimes a very high order of scientific attainment. It is no reflection upon the Army officers that they are not informed upon those subjects; and the statement of the Senator from Mississippi himself as to the manner of getting these bulletins before the public is a quite sufficient argument to my mind why Army officers, who are simply taught military duties, are disqualified for this business.

If a man is stationed at a certain point and he communicates to another that the wind is in a certain direction, the atmosphere of such a state and character, that is communicated to the headquarters at Washington; and then the indicator, as the Senator from Mississippi calls him, takes charge of it, and from the variety of reports that come in the indicator strikes a general average and issues his bulletin. Necessarily such bulletins are incorrect; they are bound to be incorrect, and the more incorrect as the man is less informed scientifically on the subject with which he deals.

If I had the selection of the chief of that bureau I should try to get the services of the most accomplished scientific man in this country; but it is not to be supposed that an Army officer, simply because he has been in the Signal Service of the Army, which is merely a technical duty, is necessarily informed as to these subjects which he has to treat of and deal with. So I can not see with the light before me where there is to be any injustice whatever to the Army officers by this proposed change.

I repeat, Mr. President, we had better go back to the text of the bill and see what that means, and it will be found to mean nothing whatever on earth except the transfer of the weather service of the Signal Bureau of the Army to the Agricultural Department that we are about to organize. It provides for the transfer of the subordinate force of the bureau and only the subordinate force. There is no proposition in this bill to interfere with the Signal Service of the Army. That will go on—whatever is left of it—just as if this bill had not passed, and possibly General Greely will be retained at the head of it with such subordinate officers as may be necessary to give it efficiency; and those subordinate officers may as well be selected from the Army as anywhere else, because it does not require a high order of intelligence simply to transmit signals for the use of the Army, and in time of peace there is very little need for them.

So I repeat again that I can not for the life of me discover that there are the difficulties which the Senator from Mississippi has pointed out. The argument he makes is a very good one for the purpose for which he made it, but for the purposes of this bill it seems to me to have no possible application. No injury can result to anybody in the Army or out of it by the transfer, and great benefit, in my judgment, will be conferred upon the agricultural interests and upon the commercial interests our people.

I am very frank to say that I think the benefit of the present weather bulletins to the crops is very much exaggerated, for I do not believe crops grow any better or grow any worse than they did before we had this weather service, and I doubt very much if the farmers would get along any better if they had the reports every morning of what the weather was going to be the next morning. But still, like a good many other things which have grown up in this Government, it has got to be rather a stupendous affair, like the Agricultural Department itself, which originated about the year 1845 on an appropriation bill with an appropriation of $4,500. It has grown and grown, and is about to become an executive department of the Government. So does every other bureau of the Government spring up in the same way.

I think, perhaps, the importance and value of the Signal Service Bureau is exaggerated, but still, whatever of value there is in it my disposition is to put that bureau where it can render the most efficient service for the benefit of the country and for the benefit of science, and I believe it can be better done in the Agricultural Department than in the Army, in the very nature of things. It is no reflection upon the Army or upon the Army officers when I say that. I do not intend to make any such reflection. I have no doubt they have done the best they could. Very few of these lieutenants are scientific men. They simply learn military duties in the course of their education; they learn what is called military signaling, and that can be done by men without a very high order of intelligence.

Mr. DAWES. The entire argument for the immediate transfer of the Signal Service or Weather Bureau to the Agricultural Department at this time proceeds upon the idea that it is exclusively for the use of the agricultural interests of this country. If Congress is prepared by law to put that limitation upon the bureau, this is the way to do it. That is the idea of the letters of the two presidents of agricultural colleges which have been read here to-day. That is the idea of every communication which I have seen that has been made upon the subject. It is the idea that this Weather Bureau is exclusively for the use of the agriculturists of the country; and it is proposed now, when this department is created, to incorporate it into the active legislation of the country, and to appropriate it to that use. An appropriation of it to that use extinguishes any effort through this bureau to utilize science for the commercial interests of the country.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him if the Weather Bureau shall be as well conducted under the control of the Agricultural Department as under any other Department, is there any reason why commerce may not reap all the advantages from the reports of that bureau that it can while it is under the War Department?

Mr. DAWES. If the Agricultural Department shall conceive it to be a part of its duty not only to take in the breadth of the agriculture of this country and all that pertains to it, but also all that pertains to commerce, all that pertains to the interchange of business among the States, and all the other elements of public affairs as well, that may be true.

Mr. BUTLER. Why should it not?

Mr. DAWES. It may be that it should; I am not arguing the question whether it may not be proper for us to create a department and call it the Department of Agriculture, that shall take in and swallow up all other departments and all other features of administrative policy in this Government. I am not arguing that question. Upon the assumption of the Senator from South Carolina, why not? It is the most natural thing in the world to take this bureau with all other bureaus and gather them in this Agricultural Department.

I protest as one member of the Senate against putting any such limitation upon this bureau. I protest against putting it where it will be assumed by those in charge of it that that is the purpose of Congress by this legislation. I have a higher idea of the possibility and the comprehension of this bureau. I do not know any interest in this country, any pursuit in all the business affairs of this country, that does not come properly under the effects and benefits of the proper administration of this bureau. I would do everything in the administration of it that would contribute to its efficiency and its breadth and its development, in the appointment of the proper officer at the head of it, in furnishing him with everything that can make of that bureau the marvelous results that have grown out of the small beginning, not larger than a man's hand.

This proposition is belittling the bureau; and while I say it is belittling it, I do not mean to belittle the great agricultural interests of this country or to belittle in any sense the beneficial effects of this bureau upon the agricultural interests of the country. But the agricultural interests of this country have no right to appropriate it. They have no right to take it as their special bureau, and they have no right to put it where its efforts to benefit commerce and to benefit all other transactions of business affairs shall be crippled in the least.

When this bureau shall be taken from the War Department, as it must be, and as it ought to be, early, I want to have it put in such charge, on such a foundation, under such men—whether they be in the Agricultural Department, or in the Interior Department, or in the Treasury Department, or in a new department—put upon such a basis and in such a charge as will comprehend in its administration all that it is possible to accomplish by means of science and scientific men. But to undertake in the creation of a new Agricultural Department to pack into its administration this bureau is equivalent to saying that the bureau shall hereafter be simply an adjunct and an auxiliary to the Agricultural Department and its interests.

As one who has some regard and some affection for this bureau, I desire to see it lifted above all such application of it to any narrow and circumscribed interest, and that is why I want this question postponed to that time, and that time only, to be taken from the War Department, when it can be put upon the broadest and strongest and most efficient foundation possible that legislation can make for it.

Mr. DAVIS. It seems apparent that the pending matter can not be concluded to-day. I ask unanimous consent that it be informally laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of such private pension bills on the Calendar as are unobjected to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that the Senator will defer that until to-morrow. It is now 5 o'clock, and nearly dark.

Mr. DAVIS. I have been waiting nearly a week to get this opportunity. I do not feel like withdrawing the application.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that motion, the Chair will lay before the Senate sundry bills from the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 206) granting a pension to William H. Starr;

A bill (H. R. 968) granting a pension to H. S. Sayre;

A bill (H. R. 5426) for the relief of St. Joseph Commercial College, of St. Joseph, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 6404) for the relief of Charles F. Swain, master of bark Philena;

A bill (H. R. 7799) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company;

A bill (H. R. 8276) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin F. Richardson;

A bill (H. R. 8356) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of David Ryan against the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 8979) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie H. Carrow, executrix of Samuel T. Carrow, deceased.

The following bills were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

A bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of W. W. Welch; and

A bill (H. R. 8469) for the relief of Michael Pigott.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 3494) for the relief of John F. Alsup; and

A bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 766) for the relief of H. L. Newman; and

A bill (H. R. 7924) for the relief of A. J. McCreary, administrator of the estate of J. M. Hiatt, deceased, and for other purposes.

H. R. BLAKISTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to H. R. Blackiston.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 3, to strike out "H. R. Blackiston" and insert "Henry R. Blakiston," and to amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to Henry R. Blakiston."

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS—TREATY WITH CHINA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 3532) to appropriate money for the relief of certain Chinese subjects, introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], having been twice read, at his request, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If there be no objection, the message of the President of the United States in response to the resolution of September 5 will also be referred to the same committee.

MATHEW W. BERRYMAN.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a bill on the desk for the relief of Mathew W. Berryman?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill to which the Senator from Missouri calls the attention of the Chair, being the bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Mathew W. Berryman, has passed both Houses and the enrolled bill has been signed by the presiding officers of both Houses. It is yet here, however. What action does the Senator from Missouri desire?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has not passed beyond the time to move a reconsideration. The only question is as to what motion must precede in order to get the bill into the possession of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill passed the Senate last Friday. The Senator can move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed after it shall have been brought into the custody of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall enter that motion. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply want to enter a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose the bill which was last under consideration will come up as the unfinished business to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be the unfinished business for to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that it may come up immediately at the close of the formal morning business to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be taken up at the close of the routine morning business to-morrow. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that it be the understanding that immediately after disposing of the Agricultural Department bill, which will come up after the morning business to-morrow, we take up the unobjected pension cases and dispose of them. There is not time to dispose of them this evening.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not see why we can not as well put in an hour this evening on that portion of the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. At this time of the evening we can not afford to stay here and consider them. The proposition of the Senator from Missouri only delays the Senator from Minnesota a day.

Mr. DAVIS. I feel quite certain it will delay me more than that. However, I do not wish to be strenuous. I accept the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it is the understanding that after the conclusion of the Agricultural Department bill the Senate will proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported to which there is no objection. It is so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 18, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, September 17, 1888.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock m. by Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, its Clerk.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The CLERK. The Clerk is in receipt of the following communication from the Speaker of the House:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., September 17, 1888.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk House of Representatives:

DEAR SIR: I am compelled to be absent from the city until next Friday, and you will therefore please ask the House to elect a Speaker pro tempore.

Yours, truly,

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Under the rules of the House, in the absence of the Speaker it is the duty of the Clerk to proceed to the election of a Speaker pro tempore to occupy the chair during the Speaker's absence. Nominations are now in order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I submit the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. SAMUEL S. COX, a Representative from the State of New York, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to, and Mr. COX took the chair as Speaker pro tempore amidst loud applause.

Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. MCMILLIN submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to notify the Senate that the House has elected Hon. SAMUEL S. COX, a Representative from the State of New York, as Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

The Journal of Friday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COWLES, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LATHAM, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PENINGTON, for two days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. SYMES, for ten days, on account of ill health.

To Mr. SIMMONS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. GROSVENOR, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WEBER, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. MAISH, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, an extension of leave for ten days, on account of important business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague [Mr. GLASS] has been called home on account of important business and sickness in his family, and I ask that indefinite leave of absence be granted to him.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, to publish certain remarks in the RECORD on the tariff.

Mr. RYAN. There is already a general order covering this request, I think.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is so advised.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills, etc.

BUSINESS FROM COMMITTEE EXPENDITURES TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas there are several important bills on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department; and

Whereas said committee have had no opportunity to consider but one bill during the present session: Therefore,

Resolved, That two days of the present week be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

WATER RENTS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. ROWELL introduced a bill (H. R. 11442) to abolish rents for the use of Potomac water for domestic purposes in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BROOKLYN.

Mr. CHEADLE submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings:

Whereas it is reported in the public prints that the contract for the construction of the Brooklyn Federal building was awarded, after advertisement, to one Gobel, of Chicago, at his bid of $623,000, and that said Gobel failed to comply with the terms of said contract, and that the Supervising Architect has forfeited his check for $1,000 deposited with his bid, and that the said official has since awarded the contract to Bernard Gallagher, of Brooklyn, at his bid of $860,000; and

Whereas it was reported that said Gobel had undue advantages in the matter of information; that other contractors said that with these advantages they could have reduced their bids: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings be directed to inquire into all the facts of the case, and to report to the House whether the Supervising Architect was derelict in his duty in failing to readvertise for proposals, and in awarding the contract at a figure nearly a quarter of a million of dollars more than the lowest offer submitted at the letting.

PAYMENT OF BOUNTY.

Mr. CHEADLE also introduced a bill (H. R. 11443) authorizing the payment of bounty to regular soldiers who served in the war of the rebellion and who were not paid any bounty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DEPOSIT OF PUBLIC MONEYS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. WEAVER introduced a bill (H. R. 11444) to prohibit the deposit of public moneys in national banks or other banks except in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

SIOUX INDIAN TREATY.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Whereas the following statements in relation to the action of the Sioux Indian Commission have appeared in several of the leading newspapers of the country, and contain grave charges of official misconduct on the part of said commission:

[St. Louis Globe-Democrat, August 8.]

"Two of the commissioners (Judge Wright, of Tennessee, and Rev. Mr. Cleveland, of Dakota), have been inclined to a fair and decent policy, which, if adopted, might have secured the consent of the Indians, but unfortunately the man selected as chairman has attempted to pursue the same tactics with the warriors of the reservation that he employs in ruling a few weak-minded children at Carlisle, Pa. For days it has been apparent that the Indians were growing more bitter in their opposition to the treaty daily, but not until to-day did Pratt realize the fact. Puffed up with his importance in the East, where he exhibited his Indian children and educates the whites to believe that he is the greatest 'Indian controller in the country,' he has been slow to believe that he knows absolutely nothing of the true Indian character. For the past week he has had control of the Associated Press wire and has been dictating so-called news which has been misleading and unfair to the press depending upon this service.

"At last the conference has been closed, not by the commissioners but by the Indians, and he can no longer blind the public with his silly reports of the great work which he is accomplishing.

"The commissioners again warned the Indians of what would follow their refusal to sign, and informed them that unless they accepted this treaty their lands might be taken from them without giving them a cent for them, b t the speeches of the commissioners had no effect, and when John Grass and Mad Bear replied, it was evident that the climax had been reached. When Grass closed his speech by calling upon the Indians to disperse and leave the agency, a grand break was made, and but for the action of Agent McLaughlin the commission would not have been given an opportunity to adjourn. As it was, the Indians remained long enough to hear that the conference would now be adjourned indefinitely; that the commission would leave for other agencies, and that after other tribes had taken action Standing Rock would again be visited."

[New York World.]

"ALLEGED LIES TO INDIANS—HARSH METHODS BEING USED, IT IS SAID, TO COERCE THE SIOUX.

"WASHINGTON, September 7.

"Dr. Bland, secretary of the Indian Defense Association, of this city, is in receipt of information, as follows:

"'The Sioux commission, now in the Sioux country, having failed to get the Indians to sign the agreement to surrender half their reservation, are now resorting to threats, telling them that if they do not sign the agreement soldiers will be sent to drive them from their reservation to some other, and that in such a contingency they will lose their lands and get nothing.'

"It is also said the Indians charge that Captain Pratt, chairman of the commission, on their refusing to sign the agreement printed in black ink, presented another, printed in red, which they understand to mean war unless they attach their signatures. The Indians say Pratt told them they would yet be compelled to sign the paper. This they say they will never do, nor do they believe the Great Father at Washington instructed Captain Pratt to force them to sign any paper against their will."

[Omaha Bee, August 7.]

"And now Judge Wright, of the commission, is telling them that if they refuse to sign this bill the troops will distribute them among other reservations, and they will lose their land without compensation. The commission has taken possession of the telegraph, and no dispatch can be sent without being inspected."

[New York Tribune.]

"BULLDOZING THE INDIANS.

"In our report of the Standing Rock conference of Saturday the following passage occurs: 'Judge Wright reminded them (the Sioux) of the white man and the Indian who went hunting and divided the game, the white man taking the turkey and giving the buzzard to the Indian. He admonished them to accept the treaty, so that they would not share the fate of their brother in the story.' Commissioner Cleveland was even more outspoken: 'Before closing he reminded that if they failed to accept this treaty they might be compelled to give up their lands without recompense.'

"The American people have, we trust, a conscience, and it ought to be stirred by this amazing method of recommending the treaty to the Sioux. The line of argument employed by the commissioners is degrading and humiliating to the national honor in the last degree. They say in effect: 'We represent a great nation, but one whose honesty can not be depended upon. It is true that Congress has decreed that this reservation shall not be opened unless the consent of three-fourths of the Indians to whom it belongs is obtained. But you must not rely upon that pledge being kept. On the contrary, we now tell you plainly that unless you accept the treaty, even against your judgment, there is imminent danger that the United States will steal your land without more ado.'

"Let it be understood plainly that this is practically what the United States commissioners have said to the Indians at Standing Rock. Let it be further understood that, however shameful the position taken must appear to all right-minded people, the commissioners have not been drawing wholly upon their imagination, have not invented a danger which has no tangible existence, for three years ago Congress showed its entire willingness to do precisely this outrageous thing, to steal the half of the Sioux reservation bodly and without pretense of right; and but for the force of public opinion then brought to bear by the Indian Rights Association, the seizure would have been carried into effect at that time. Now, however, Congress stands committed to abide by the decision of the Indians. It has expressly provided that the consent of three-fourths of the Sioux shall be necessary to the opening of the reservation. Is it to be supposed that the freedom of that consent was not implied in the stipulation?

"What the commissioners are now doing is only too apparent. They are trying to bulldoze the Indians; trying to intimidate them into consenting to the treaty; and what is worst of all, trying to do this by alleging the dishonesty and perfidy of their own Government. The Sioux are plainly told that they must not rely upon the good faith of Congress, or believe that it will keep its engagements; and in the same breath they are chidden because they suspect the sincerity of the Government in its promises of payment for their lands. Surely cynicism can hardly go beyond the exhibition these commissioners are now making at Standing Rock. This is their idea of 'negotiating a treaty,' to threaten the other party with high-handed confiscation of their lands if they refuse to sell them for less than they believe them to be worth to a Government whose good faith they have already had a score of reasons for doubting.

"We are compelled to repeat what we have said before, that the most brutal and reckless seizure of Indian lands would be less discreditable than the methods at present being employed. If the country is not again to be disgraced by the immorality and baseness of its Indian policy, the commissioners at Standing Rock must be instructed to suspend their bulldozing tactics and to tell the Indians that they are free to decide the question for themselves. In a word, the country must compel Congress to stand by its own laws, and the outrageous intimation that unless the Sioux yield to threats they will be plundered in cold blood by the people of the United States must be repudiated and rebuked emphatically."

Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House whether there is any foundation for these statements, and to take such steps as may in his judgment be proper to ascertain whether undue influence has been used to secure the signatures of any of the Indians to the treaty.

THE FISHERIES.

Mr. DINGLEY submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas the President, in a message laid before the House on the 23d of August last, for the purpose of securing the rights of American fishing vessels in Canadian ports, asked for a grant of power additional to that given by the act of March 3, 1887, which provided that—

"Whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any American fishing vessels or fishermen, having a permit under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or place in the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied the privilege of entering such port or place in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nation, * * * or shall be prevented from purchasing such supplies as may be there lawfully sold to trading vessels of the most favored nation, * * * it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, in his discretion, by proclamation to that effect, to deny vessels, their masters and crews, of the British dominions of North America any entrance into the waters, ports, and places of or within the United States, and also to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh or salt fish or any other product of said dominions;" and

Whereas the President in said message informed the House that American fishing vessels are denied in Canadian ports rights and privileges to which they are entitled; and

Whereas the President in said message further informed the House that the treaty negotiated by him with Great Britain in February last secured to American fishing vessels all their rights in Canadian ports, which rights were defined in said treaty to be simply shelter, repairs, the purchase of wood and obtaining water, with such incidents of repairs and shelter as the right to land fish for sale, on payment of duty, and for shipment in bond to the United States, only in case of marine disaster, and the right to ship a man to take the place of one ill or deceased, and to purchase provisions and supplies for a homeward voyage or to take the place of those lost by accident, the privileges of purchasing bait, provisions, and supplies for a fishing voyage and transshipment of catch being expressly excluded: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the House—

First. Whether he has information that American fishing vessels are now denied or have been denied in Canadian ports within the past year either of such rights or privileges named in the treaty negotiated with Great Britain in February last as the sole rights of such vessels in such ports; and, if so, when and to what vessels these rights were denied.

Second. Whether the Executive now holds that American fishing vessels, authorized by our laws to touch and trade at foreign ports, are also entitled to the rights or privileges of entering Canadian ports for the purpose of purchasing bait, provisions, or supplies for a deep-sea fishing voyage, or for the purpose of landing fish to be sold in Canadian territory on payment of duty, or for shipment in bond to the United States without the payment of a license fee to the Canadian authorities for the exercise of either or all of such privileges.

Third. Whether any American fishing vessels authorized by our laws to touch and trade have been denied the exercise of either of said rights in Canadian ports, or have been required to pay a special license fee not exacted of other vessels for the exercise of such privileges; and, if so—

Fourth. What steps have been taken by the President, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1887, to withdraw from Canadian fishing vessels in ports of the United States the privileges of purchasing bait, provisions, and supplies for a fishing voyage, denied to American fishing vessels in Canadian ports, or to withdraw from Canadian fishermen the privilege of bringing their fish into the territory of the United States for sale in our markets on payment of duty or for shipment in bond to Canada, which privileges have been denied in Canada to fishermen of the United States.

LABOR MEASURES.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Wednesday, September 26, 1888, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Labor, and if not completed by 5 o'clock of that day, their consideration to be continued at the evening session, commencing at 8 o'clock.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That resolution would go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to refer it to the Committee on Labor.

The question was put; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. COX) announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

A division was demanded; and there were—ayes 45, noes 39.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 37.

Mr. BLOUNT. No quorum.

Mr. FORNEY. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to call up the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. KELLEY. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me to submit a privileged resolution, which will not take any time.

Mr. FORNEY. With the understanding that I retain the floor in the event that it provokes discussion I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. A vote is being taken, and the question of no quorum has been raised. Can any business be transacted, even a question of privilege, without a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A question of privilege is always in order, even pending a motion to adjourn. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. The resolution I desire to offer is asking an extension of the scope of the powers of the committee to investigate the construction of the Library in connection with a charge against a member. It is to remove the restriction confining the inquiry to improper material, and asking that the committee may investigate whether undue influence was used to affect the acceptance of any material, so as to give the inquiry the scope which was originally intended.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the House of Representatives on the 4th day of September instant passed a resolution as follows: Resolved, That the special committee engaged in investigating the construction of the new Library building be directed to inquire and report to this House whether any member of the House acting by and for himself, or in concert and combination with others, has sought by persuasion, intimidation, or other corrupt or improper means, to influence or control the action of Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer, the architect of said building, in the selection, acceptance, or approval of inferior or improper materials to be used in the construction of said building; and

Whereas the Speaker of the House in pursuance of said resolution appointed a select committee to inquire into and report to the House regarding the facts set forth in said resolution; and

Whereas it is desired to offer certain evidence before said committee for the purpose of showing attempts to improperly influence the said architect of the Library building in the selection or acceptance of material to be used in the construction of said building, which said evidence is not competent under said resolution for the reason that the said resolution looks solely to an investigation into the selection of inferior or improper material to be used in the construction of said building: Therefore,

Resolved, That the said committee be directed to inquire into and report to the House whether any member of the House, acting for himself or others or in connection with any person acting for or in the interest of others and with the knowledge of any member, or acting for or with the knowledge and in the interest of any company, person, or individual with whom any member of the House is interested or associated in business, directly or indirectly, has sought by persuasion, intimidation, or any undue or improper influence to direct or control or influence the action of Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer, the architect of said building, in the selection or acceptance or in procuring to be selected or accepted material to be used in said building or in the management, control, or construction of said building.

Resolved, That said committee be further directed to inquire whether any member of Congress has sought, directly or indirectly, to cause the removal of said Smithmeyer in any way or manner from his position as architect of the Library building, or to deprive or take from him any of the powers and duties pertaining to his position as architect of said building, for the reason that said Smithmeyer has refused to act as requested by said member of Congress in and about using or procuring to be used material of any kind in the construction of said Library building.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is that resolution subject to objection?

Mr. KELLEY. It is a privileged question.

Mr. TAULBEE. The question I addressed to the Chair is whether this is subject to objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That point has not been made on it as yet.

Mr. TAULBEE. What I mean is whether this resolution is being introduced by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is offered as a matter of privilege.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it a matter of privilege?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not decided that.

Mr. KELLEY. It pertains to the conduct of a member of the House and the integrity of the proceedings of the House, and is therefore clearly a privileged question.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me, I will state that the Speaker of the House ruled on this very question that it was a matter of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not present when the decision was made. As the Speaker has already ruled on the matter the Chair will hold it a privileged question.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, the House, as I understood, was taking a vote. The inquiry I would make is whether this is in order. The gentleman who is affected by this resolution [Mr. STAHLNECKER] is not present, and I think he should be when the resolution is under consideration. I simply ask whether the resolution is in order.

Mr. KELLEY. The Speaker, Mr. CARLISLE, a few days ago ruled that it was a privileged question. First, when on Monday, under a call of the States and Territories I submitted it, he decided that it was a privileged question, and could be brought up at any time. On the next day he recognized me to submit it as a privileged question, and it was acted upon; so that it has been twice held to be a privileged question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is open for both amendment and debate.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a ruling on the point I have raised, that the House being now dividing, this matter is not in order.

Mr. KELLEY. Having submitted a privileged question, I do not yield for an amendment. I call the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. No; I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the situation. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] had the right, as a matter of privilege, to call up the conference report. He did so, and then yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] for a short time, as he said.

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir; with the understanding that this matter would take but a very short time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentlemen from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] now resumes the floor, the Chair is bound to recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. FORNEY. I do resume the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. TAULBEE. So far as I am concerned, I have no desire whatever to debate the resolution, but I desire to offer an amendment which I am willing shall be considered with the resolution without debate.

Mr. KELLEY. I will withdraw the resolution.

Mr. HEARD. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope the gentleman will not withdraw it. I see no disposition to delay its consideration at all. I simply desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] will give me an opportunity to hear the gentleman from Kentucky state his amendment, I may be willing to adopt it.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, as I was proceeding to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I have no disposition to delay the consideration of his resolution or to discuss the resolution. I simply wish to offer an amendment and then let the House vote on the amendment and the resolution without any discussion whatever.

Mr. KELLEY. I will hear the amendment of the gentleman before yielding the floor.

Mr. TAULBEE. The amendment which I wish to offer will come in just after that point in the resolution where the committee is directed to inquire whether or not the influence of any member of this House has been brought to bear for the removal of the architect from the position which he holds, and the amendment will be to the effect that the committee shall also be authorized and directed to investigate as to whether or not any member has used his influence to retain the architect in the position which he holds.

Mr. KELLEY. My proposition is to inquire whether any member has used his influence in the manner stated in the resolution because the architect would not yield to his solicitations. I decline to accept the amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then, if the gentleman please, let the resolution further recite that the committee shall investigate as to whether or not the influence used to retain Mr. Smithmeyer in his present position was so used by reason of his doing or trying to do what the members wanted him to do. Let the resolution cut both ways and let us have the whole thing opened up.

Mr. KELLEY. Let the gentleman introduce a resolution at his own time to that effect. I have no objection to that inquiry.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am not given to introducing resolutions; but why will not the gentleman accept the amendment?

Mr. KELLEY. I have no objection to the inquiry, but I do not want this amendment interpolated in my resolution.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let it come in as my amendment, and then the gentleman will have no responsibility for it.

Mr. KELLEY. I demand the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the resolution in my possession long enough to indicate the point where my amendment would come in.

Mr. KELLEY. I decline to accept the amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I offer it as a matter of parliamentary right.

Mr. FORNEY. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] declines to accept the amendment, I now call up the conference report.

Mr. TAULBEE. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be printed in the RECORD, so that we may all understand what it is when it comes up again.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] not to urge the conference report in the presence of the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to investigate the conduct of a member of this House. I think we owe it to ourselves, I think we owe it to the gentleman whose character is involved, that we shall proceed to consider this resolution with the dignity, the seriousness, and the promptness to which the matter is entitled. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will proceed, and that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] will co-operate with him.

Mr. FORNEY. I was perfectly willing that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] should offer his resolution, and also that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] should offer his amendment; but it seems they can not agree, and the only way I could see out of the difficulty was to call up the conference report. However, if it is the desire of the House to proceed with this matter, I will withhold the motion to call up the report for the present.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman from Kentucky will make his amendment to this effect: "Directing the committee to inquire whether any member of this House has used improper or corrupt influence to induce the retention of the architect," so as to make the inquiry correspond to what I propose on the other side, I will accept it.

Mr. HEARD. That is what the gentleman proposes.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is all I have proposed—to insert after the phrase "after his removal" the phrase "or his retention."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a point of order. I want to ask whether this business can interrupt the call of States for the introduction of bills. I have always understood that that order, when commenced, must be gone through with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now before the House is a question of privilege, and can interrupt the call of States.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all I desired to know.

Mr. HEARD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question with regard to the scope of his resolution. As I understand, it goes to the extent of directing an inquiry whether any member of Congress has used his influence, etc., to procure the use of improper or inferior materials.

Mr. KELLEY. That was the original resolution.

Mr. HEARD. Very good. Now, what I want to know is this: I see it stated that Mr. Smithmeyer claims that some inferior material has been used, contrary to his assent. Now, I regard this question whether or not in the foundation of this building improper material has been used as more important, perhaps, to the country at large than the question which is immediately under inquiry. I should like to have the investigation broad enough to ascertain whether by the influence of any member of Congress or otherwise inferior material has been used, such as may make that foundation unfit for the purpose for which it was intended.

Mr. KELLEY. That question is distinctly covered by the original resolution.

Mr. HEARD. That is satisfactory.

Mr. HERBERT. I have just come into the Hall; and I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is likely that the broadening of the scope of this inquiry as indicated may result in preventing a report this session.

Mr. KELLEY. From my knowledge of the case, I have no idea that it will.

Mr. HERBERT. It is very important in a matter of this kind, affecting the character of a member of the House, that a report should be made promptly.

Mr. KELLEY. I have not the remotest idea that this session can come to an end before the presentation of the report of this committee.

Mr. HERBERT. If there is anything in this proposed enlargement of the inquiry which may prevent a report before the adjournment of Congress, I think we ought to pause and consider before adopting any such proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to accept as an addition to his resolution the clause which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks consent to have an amendment read.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield for the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that said committee be instructed to report the evidence to the House, together with their recommendation thereon, within one week from this time.

Mr. KELLEY. That can not be done, for the reason that one or two witnesses are absent, but have promised to be here during next week. The Speaker of the House has expressed a desire to the committee to be heard, and has announced——

Mr. SPRINGER. The Speaker will be here on Friday.

Mr. KELLEY. That he can not be here until Friday. I hope that Senator VOORHEES, whose testimony is desired, will also be here on Friday. I hope that Mr. George B. Williams, of Indiana, will be here before Friday. If these gentlemen should attend as expected, I can see no reason——

Mr. SPRINGER. We must fix a time within which this report shall be made.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me.

Mr. SPRINGER. This investigation, in justice to Mr. STAHLNECKER, ought not to be continued beyond the present session of Congress. The facts to be brought out should be laid before the country before we adjourn. This is due to Mr. STAHLNECKER. He may be a candidate for re-election; and to have this matter pending and under investigation until the election would be a manifest injustice to him. All I desire is that there shall be a report upon this matter before Congress adjourns, so that he may have an opportunity to go before his constituents with all the facts in their possession.

Mr. KELLEY. I am very anxious to bring about that result.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania another question. Will the present proposition require the introduction of any more witnesses who are absent? Is it contemplated to bring in additional witnesses who are now absent?

Mr. KELLEY. None that I know of that have not been intimated, if not actually named, to the committee. I know of no other cause of delay than securing the attendance of the two witnesses I have named, unless it be that we would gladly have the testimony of Judge Lamar, who was Secretary of the Interior and ex officio chairman of the commission. But we will make no delay on that account.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand he is here now.

Mr. KELLEY. We have taken all proper steps to secure the attendance of Senator VOORHEES and Mr. Williams.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will modify my amendment so as to provide that the committee shall report during this session, but not later than ten days hence.

Mr. KELLEY. Two weeks.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, not later than two weeks. If a report be made this session, that is all I desire. Let the language be inserted, "but not later than two weeks from this time."

Mr. KELLEY. All right.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire now to offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. KELLEY. I yield to hear it read.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not yield except to have it read.

Mr. SPRINGER. The suggestion I have made is accepted as a part of your proposition?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, let this go in also.

Mr. KELLEY. I will hear it.

Mr. TAULBEE. The first words to be inserted in the resolution occur in the fifth line, where the words "removed from" are used, immediately after "or retention in."

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the effect of it?

Mr. TAULBEE. The effect would be to ascertain whether improper influences were used to retain Mr. Smithmeyer in his position, as well as improper influences to remove him. The resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to inquire if improper influences had been used to induce his removal. My amendment seeks to ascertain whether improper influences were used for his retention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the first line on the third page of the resolution, after the word "removal"——

Mr. KELLEY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is the gentleman not willing to have this amendment read for information?

Mr. KELLEY. I yielded for the purpose.

Mr. TAULBEE. The Clerk is just about reading it.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "removal," in the first line of the third page of the resolution, insert: "and whether any member of the House has or is now using his position to retain Mr. Smithmeyer in his position, or to divert attention from the investigation now proposed, in which the said Smithmeyer is involved, or to intimidate the committee or any member of it now engaged in the investigation of the construction of the Library building."

Mr. KELLEY. The terms "improper or corrupt" are omitted there.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am willing to insert the words "improper or corrupt."

Mr. KELLEY. Insert them; and I want to hear from my friend from Georgia, to whom I have twice yielded the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will not consent to the previous question operating on the amendment. The House has begun an investigation in relation to one particular matter, to wit, alleged improper influences on the part of a member of this House in regard to certain contracts. That is a distinct and unequivocal charge. An investigation is going on, and it is important that it should be pressed promptly, and that we should have a report to the House without delay.

This amendment contains an entirely different proposition, to wit, whether or not any member has improperly used or is using improper influences or corrupt influences to have Mr. Smithmeyer retained; and it savors very much, sir, of an attempt to impede the former investigation. The House can not afford to occupy that attitude. It looks very like two propositions contesting against each other at a time when the House should, as with one mind, proceed to investigate that which involves the question of its own honor and dignity.

It is perfectly competent for the House to charge another committee with the investigation of the question as to whether any member of the House, or any number of members, have been using undue motives to have Mr. Smithmeyer retained. If any member on this floor believes that this has been done, I am willing to unite with him, and I have no doubt the House will so feel, in having an investigation ordered of that matter. But, for one, I trust that this side of the House will give no semblance of partisan or personal feeling to this question, but will conduct itself in a manner calculated to command the confidence of the country in the purity of its motives and purposes; and I trust that this amendment will be voted down. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has taken the responsibility for the first investigation, and he shall not have from me, and I trust will not from this side of the House, the slightest discouragement in what he believes to be a public duty.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KELLEY. I believe I am entitled to the floor on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think the gentleman has yielded to my amendment, although I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not yielded the floor, as the Chair understands.

Mr. KELLEY. As I said before, start an original investigation in the new line that you suggest and I will help you.

I demand the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he desires, by demanding the previous question, to prevent the offering of this amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I call for the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to know if the gentleman feels himself justified in demanding the previous question after having yielded to the gentleman from Georgia to discuss his side of the pending proposition, or that side in which he seems to concur?

Mr. KELLEY. Regular order.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me to explain a matter. I rose for the purpose of making a point of order, which may be improperly construed. I am not opposed to the resolution nor to this investigation, but I desire it to be as broad as possible. I felt that Mr. STAHLNECKER, the person who is most interested, ought to be present and have opportunity to present amendments, if he thought necessary.

Mr. KELLEY. Regular order.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman to have inserted in his resolution the words which I suggested, "improperly or corruptly," in connection with the removal of Mr. Smithmeyer. You have it there simply "who sought to cause his removal."

Mr. KELLEY. The purpose is stated all through.

Mr. ROGERS. But not there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thought the gentleman accepted that amendment to the resolution.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. It is this: I wish to inquire as to whether or not the first amendment which I suggested and read myself from the floor, as being inserted in the fifth line in the second paragraph of the resolution, was not that amendment accepted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KELLEY. No, Mr. Speaker; fearing that I am to be removed from the floor by a question of higher privilege, I ask that the matter go as it is, and I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the previous question affects the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NELSON. The amendments were only read for information.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, I understood from the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that my amendment, which was last read by the Clerk, was consented to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am speaking to a point of order, and it pertains to the status of this resolution. My point of order is this: I want to know the effect of the previous question if ordered, and I want the House to understand before we order the previous question whether the resolution will include the amendment I had read.

Mr. KELLEY. Not at all.

Mr. TAULBEE. The amendment suggesting the insertion of "undue and improperly" before the word "influence," in the resolution which the Clerk read.

Mr. KELLEY. I accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to limit the time. I did not accept the other amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it in order to ask that the notes be read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I ask that the notes be read.

Mr. KELLEY. I trust the Chair will endeavor to influence the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] not to take me off the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will refer to the notes. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist that he did not yield the floor for the purpose of an amendment being offered?

Mr. BLOUNT. Of course he did not.

Mr. KELLEY. Of course I did not, and I so stated.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it in order to ask that the second resolution be reported again?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the point of order. After that the Chair will listen to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read from the Reporter's notes, as follows:

Mr. KELLEY. The terms "improper or corrupt" are omitted there.
Mr. TAULBEE. I am willing to insert the words "improper or corrupt."
Mr. KELLEY. Insert them; and I want to hear from my friend from Georgia, to whom I have twice yielded the floor.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the second resolution reported again.

The Clerk again read the second resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that the words "corrupt and improperly" are left out.

Mr. HEARD. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will accept the amendment and insert these words.

Mr. KELLEY. The very object is to show the impropriety; but I have no objection to say "by improper or corrupt means."

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us have the whole thing open for amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. No, you do not. I make that amendment myself, and continue the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the demand for the previous question; and the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky are not before the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania not having yielded for that purpose.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to inquire as to whether or not my amendment will be in order and whether I will be entitled to recognition if the previous question is refused?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky if the previous question is not sustained on the resolution as amended.

The question was put; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois as accepted and incorporated in the resolution that has just been read.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to hear that section again read.

The resolution as amended was again read.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the resolution; and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Mathew W. Berryman;

A bill (H. R. 1216) for the investigation of the mining-débris question in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit and district courts for the western division of the western district of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. 2996) to confirm the title of the heirs or legal representatives of Henry Volcker, deceased, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. 5059) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Watertown, in the State of New York;

A bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés;

A bill (H. R. 8752) providing for the establishment of an additional life-saving station on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. 10679) to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw papers filed in support of a bill in the Forty-eighth Congress for the relief of C. W. Keifer.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from further consideration of the bill (S. 3145) for the relief of the heirs of John M. Powell, deceased, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask what has become of the call of the States for bills and resolutions, and what has become of the resolution offered by my namesake from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was interrupted by a privileged matter, a conference report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Could it be interrupted until that order was concluded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has so ruled, and it has been so decided frequently.

DREDGING THE ST. CLAIR FLATS CANAL.

Mr. CHIPMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11445) for completing the improvement and dredging the St. Clair Flats ship-canal in Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11446) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand the regular order. I can not be removed from the floor in that kind of a way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be in order. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] has the floor.

Mr. FORNEY. I rise to a privileged question and call up the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a point of order. Rule XXIX, under the head of "conference reports," provides that the presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order except when the Journal is being read, when the roll is being called, or when the House is dividing on any proposition. Now, the House is dividing upon a proposition for the reference of a resolution introduced by me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the tellers to have made their final report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That was a mistake. The point of no quorum was made, and the tellers were still taking the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report of the tellers having been made, as the Chair understood, the Chair recognized the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] on a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The result of the vote was not announced. The point of no quorum was made, and when that point was made the tellers were required to resume their places, and, in the absence of a quorum, is not the only thing in order either a motion to adjourn or a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state the situation. The tellers, as the Chair understood, made their final report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That was a mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And thereupon the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] took the floor to call up a conference report. If the tellers did not make their final report, then they must resume their places.

The tellers resumed their places.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] to refer the resolution introduced by him to the Committee on Labor. Those in favor of the motion will now pass between the tellers.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. As business has intervened, I submit to the Chair that the vote ought to be taken de novo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks so, and the Chair has requested gentlemen who are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL], to refer the resolution to the Committee on Labor, to pass between the tellers. This is a new vote.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. If this resolution should be referred to the Committee on Labor, will that committee have the right to report at any time?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would not be authorized to answer that inquiry just now.

Mr. BLOUNT. As the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] seems to be distrustful of the opinion of the Chair, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the point of no quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. I renew it.

The tellers resumed the count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after the count by tellers had continued some time). If no other gentlemen desire to vote, the Chair will announce the result. On the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] the ayes are 60, the noes 12. Is the point of no quorum insisted on?

Mr. OATES. It is.

Mr. MCMILLIN (after further continuance of the count). I ask the Chair to announce the result. There is evidently not a quorum in the House; there has not been to-day, and I do not believe there will be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers report—ayes 64, noes 12. Does the gentleman from Alabama still insist on the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. OATES. I do.

Mr. MCMILLIN. There is evidently no quorum in attendance, and if the point is insisted on this proposition can not go through. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] that he allow the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] to bring up the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill and have it acted on.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That would be a wise suggestion to offer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make it, then, to the gentleman from Alabama. I only propose it as a practical way of doing business. It is evident we can not go further with the present question in the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] asks unanimous consent that the further count by tellers be suspended and that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] be allowed to bring up his conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the call of States will be concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] will be complied with. The States will be called through, and then the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] will be recognized to call up his conference report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Did I understand the Chair to say that the call of States is to proceed before we get through with this question? I object.

Mr. JACKSON. It is too late to make objection.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It is not too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee to ask unanimous consent that the conference report be taken up.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I did.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that I am still standing here to discharge my duty as a teller. I have not vacated my place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to the proposition?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask, then, that some one be appointed a teller in my place. I did not make the point of no quorum; and I have some business which I wish to attend to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] will please take the place of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] as a teller.

Mr. WEAVER (after a further continuance of the count by tellers). I move a call of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the result announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce the result of the count by tellers. On the motion of the gentleman from Missouri the ayes are 68, the noes 12. Does the gentleman from Alabama still insist on the point of no quorum?

Mr. OATES. If I had not intended to insist on it, I would not have made it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] that there be a call of the House.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes 11, noes 35.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. As there is no quorum here, and as it will doubtless be impossible to get a quorum here to-day, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, let me make a suggestion.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Regular order.

Mr. CANNON. My suggestion is that by unanimous consent this matter go over until to-morrow after the reading of the Journal, retaining all the rights it now has, and that to-day we go on by unanimous consent and finish the consideration of the conference report on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the matter now pending upon the count by tellers go over until to-morrow, and that this afternoon be given to the consideration of the conference report on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see what advantage is to be gained by allowing this matter to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON. We can probably finish the conference report to-day.

Mr. ROWLAND. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. CANNON. I will renew my request, Mr. Speaker, for unanimous consent at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again submit the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the business now pending go over until to-morrow after the reading of the Journal——

Mr. SPRINGER. And that the rest of the business of Monday go over also—the call of States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And retain its same position on tomorrow that it occupies to-day, the afternoon of this day being dedicated to the conference report indicated.

Mr. ROWLAND. If this evening is to be devoted to the consideration of the conference report exclusively, so far as I am concerned my objection will be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection?

Mr. WEAVER. Is it understood that the rest of the business of to-day, under the rules, goes over?

Mr. PAYSON. Let us understand this matter. That is not what was originally proposed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was not the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not understand that the suspensions are to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I object. That was not my understanding of the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. SPRINGER. We are now in the midst of the call of States for the introduction of bills. If this order goes over it takes the call of States with it, and all other business of this day.

Mr. WEAVER. And all the other business of to-day under the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. WEAVER. Then it must be so understood.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing to put the request in this shape, that the matter now pending go over until to-morrow, and all other matters pertaining to this day go over the same as if it was Monday, so that we may go on with the conference report to-day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see that we would remedy matters or gain any time by that. We would have the same contest to-morrow.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the regular order for to-day after the call of States?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Suspensions by committees. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois just stated by him?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is simply a loss of time, for we would have the same proceeding to-morrow; and I object.

Mr. DOCKERY. But, Mr. Speaker, if this arrangement were made we could dispose of the sundry civil bill to-day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to going on with the conference report on the sundry civil bill; but I understand that the request also embodies the suggestion that this matter and all other matters for Monday shall go over until to-morrow. We would then be in exactly the same condition as we are now in.

Mr. RYAN. But we lose no time.

Mr. BLOUNT. We will go on for three or four hours on to-morrow in the same way, and do nothing.

Mr. CANNON. Is a conference report not privileged; and can it not be called up any time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not when the House is dividing.

Mr. CANNON. It can interrupt a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been already decided once, but the Chair will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. CANNON. It is not necessary.

Mr. PAYSON. If it be in order, I ask unanimous consent that the pending order be postponed temporarily, and that the conference report of the gentleman from Alabama be taken up and considered, this order being resumed afterward by unanimous consent.

Mr. WEAVER. That will take the whole day, and then suspensions will be gone.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I object.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask that the Chair state the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the present question be temporarily laid aside——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have a proposition to make to my namesake, the gentleman from Missouri, who seems to be running the House to-day. I propose that the House take a recess until Friday next.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman may take a recess for himself.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not want a recess unless my fellow-members have the same privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's request is not in order. The gentleman can move to adjourn until Thursday.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will not do that, because there is too much public business pressing. I hope, however, the gentleman from Missouri will yield to let the conference report come up.

Mr. TAULBEE. I demand the regular order. This debate is out of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that three hours remain of this day's session I ask unanimous consent, in order to facilitate the public business, that the order of business prescribed for to-day be pursued for three hours to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, beginning at the call of States where we now are, and that the conference report be taken up for the remainder of the day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think we had better finish this matter as it is now pending.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I object.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his objection if a slight modification is made in the request.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to occupying two hours and three-quarters to-morrow to consider the business of Monday, with the understanding that we proceed with the conference report to-day and with other public business to-morrow after the time named.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I modify my request that we now take up the sundry civil conference report, and the same length of time to-morrow be devoted to the pending question and to the other business of this day that now remains of to-day's session.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I renew it. We might as well end this matter now.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to my colleague not to object, and I renew the request to resume the order of business of to-day——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Until it is disposed of.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). On to-morrow until two hours and three-quarters shall have been consumed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am willing to accept the suggestion of my colleague, if it be understood that on to-morrow I may be allowed to pursue this matter until it is disposed of; but I object to fixing any limit to the time allotted to it.

Mr. CANNON. That is all the time you have to-day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, then, if it is I will pursue it to-day until I secure some kind of action upon it.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman will be deprived of no rights whatever that he now possesses by acceding to the request I have made, and it will enable us to dispose of this important conference report.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, was received announcing to the House that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10931) to donate and transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, subject to reversion to the United States in the event of their non-usage for quarantine purposes, and requiring the proper Department of the United States Government to execute the necessary transfer to the State of Louisiana on the condition aforesaid; and that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the said bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. WALTHALL, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. BERRY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed House bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 8751) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lake Superior, Lakes Huron, Erie, and Michigan, and range-lights in Lake St. Clair and Detroit River;

A bill (H. R. 11336) a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 223) declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2877) authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes;

A bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120, in the city of Washington, on certain conditions; and

A bill (S. 3539) to amend an act to detach the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, from the eastern and attach it to the western judicial district of said State.

The message further announced that the Secretary of the Senate had been directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 186) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, etc.

LABOR MEASURES.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 29.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. SOWDEN. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and decided in the negative—yeas 37, nays 92, not voting 195; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DOCKERY. In view of the fact that the announcement of the call of the roll will disclose the lack of a quorum——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was about to suggest that——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand the regular order, and debate is not in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to know if by unanimous consent the announcement of the result of this roll-call was dispensed with whether it would not be in order to resume consideration of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly; but the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this vote should show that there was no quorum would it be in order to transact any other business during this day?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It is evident that the "noes" have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. No other business can be transacted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and the pairs will be announced, which is the regular order.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. LONG.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan.

Mr. MAISH with Mr. WOODBURN.

Mr. MATSON with Mr. HOVEY.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I see that I am paired with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], and I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIDSON], but I vote on all questions to make a quorum.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was called from the House on business during the roll-call, and was detained until after my name was passed on the call of the roll.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 47.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays.

The House again divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fourteen gentlemen have risen, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The other side!

The SPEAKER pro tempore, after counting the other side, declared that there were—ayes 14, noes 58; not a sufficient number.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (to Mr. WHEELER). No quorum having been developed, that motion would not at this time be in order.

The question on ordering tellers was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that but nine gentlemen had voted in favor of ordering tellers, not a sufficient number; and tellers on the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, and Mr. CHEADLE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 24.

Mr. SOWDEN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes 17, not a sufficient number; and the Speaker declared that the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. CHEADLE. The other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The other side will rise. [After a count.] Only sixty-nine gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. On the motion to adjourn the ayes have it.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule, private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 11447) for the relief of William M. Blye—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLMAN: A bill (H. R. 11448) for the relief of William F. Denmure—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUDD: A bill (H. R. 11449) for the relief of Andrew Schneider—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: A bill (H. R. 11450) granting a pension to James A. Patterson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 11451) granting a pension to Jesse Edwards—to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ENLOE: Petition of Henry King, of McNairy County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Petition and papers of William F. Denmure, in support of bill for his relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of surviving legatee of Mrs. Sarah E. Lynch, of Frederick County, Maryland, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROGERS: Memorial to prosecute the bagging trust—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. D. STEWART: Petition of heirs of Robert Jackson, and of Edward W. Reynolds, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. VOORHEES: Petition of the Tacoma (Wash.) Bar Association, and of practicing attorneys of Pierce County, Washington Territory, for two additional judicial districts in said Territory—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Tacoma, Wash., for certain public improvements—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, resolutions of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington Territory, for an appropriation for head-stones for the graves of Union soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of W. H. Baugher, of Madison County, Alabama, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, September 18, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF CUSTOMS TARIFFS AT BRUSSELS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a copy of a letter addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives favoring the establishment at Brussels of an international bureau for the publication of customs tariffs, and requesting that an item for this purpose be inserted in one of the appropriation bills which may now be pending before the Senate; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present the petition of Lucretia Ann Elliott, unmarried sister of E. B. Elliott, late Government actuary in the Treasury Department, who died on the 24th of May, 1888, together with letters of the Secretary and Dr. Lincoln of this city, recommending an allowance of one year's salary of Mr. Elliott to Miss Elliott, with other papers.

I wish to say that this is a case of peculiar hardship. Mr. Elliott had been for a long time, I do not know how many years, but certainly for twenty years, actuary of the Treasury Department. He was of immense service to both Houses of Congress, and I suppose that every Senator and every member is probably familiar with the nature and character of his services. He was purely a mathematician, and was called upon in all questions of doubt in settling amounts, etc. He was an invaluable officer. He died, leaving a sister unmarried in certainly very uncomfortable circumstances, without any means whatever.

This is an appeal to Congress to give to her as the only surviving unmarried sister of Mr. Elliott—the other sisters being married and consenting and joining in this prayer—such amount as Congress may think is proper on the occasion, and I sincerely trust it will be granted.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM BROWN.

Mr. FAULKNER. I was not present in the Senate when the Calendar was reached yesterday and the bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120, in the city of Washington, on certain conditions, was passed. That bill was passed on a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia made by myself as a member of that committee under its instructions. The passage of the bill had been indorsed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia. When I returned yesterday and looked at my mail I found that the commissioners had withdrawn their approval of the passage of the bill after further examination, and were of opinion that it would be against public and private interests to have the bill passed. I therefore move a reconsideration of the bill, and ask that it be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The order of reference will be accompanied by a request to the House of Representatives to return the bill to the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3450) granting a pension to Carl J. Chindblom, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3453) granting an increase of pension to Alfred T. McKinsey;

A bill (S. 2623) granting an increase of pension to James Patterson; and

A bill (S. 3462) granting a pension to John Watson.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3492) granting a pension to John Parkinson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3461) granting a pension to Harrison Lansdown, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3299) to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Navy to contract for certain guns and ammunition therefor, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3472) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit-pipes across the Ohio River, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2363) for the relief of John W. Combs, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

JAMES HARVEY DENNIS.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3140) for the relief of James Harvey Dennis, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3140) entitled "A bill for the relief of James Harvey Dennis," now pending in the Senate, together with all of the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1883, and an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, to find and report to the Senate the facts bearing upon the merits of the claim, including the loyalty of the claimant and all other facts contemplated by the provisions of said act.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3566) granting a pension to John Hicks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the bill I present a petition signed by many citizens of Dallas County, Missouri, in which county the beneficiary resides, urging the passage of a bill placing his name upon the pension-roll. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions to accompany the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3567) granting a pension to Mrs. E. C. Russell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3568) to prevent and suppress infectious or contagious diseases in foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PALMER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEORGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is absent this morning, but requested me to give notice that to-morrow morning, at the close of the morning business, he will ask the Senate to take up for consideration the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], to refer the President's annual message to the Committee on Finance, for the purpose of submitting some remarks thereon.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] having given notice that his colleague [Mr. JONES] will call up the President's message and make some remarks thereon to-morrow immediately after the morning business, I desire to give notice that I shall submit some remarks on the same subject at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the Report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the usual necessary sketches and illustrations showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1887, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for distribution by said Superintendent.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN September 17, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, with such measures as are expedient to promote friendly commercial and political intercourse between these countries and the United States, and for that purpose have leave to sit during the recess of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the recent message of the President recommending a line of retaliation against the Dominion of Canada involves the consideration of our relations with that country in a far more important and comprehensive way than Congress has ever before been called upon to give. The recent treaty rejected by the Senate related to a single subject affecting alone our treaty rights on her northeastern coast. The act of retaliation of 1887 was confined to the same subject-matter. This message, however, treats of matters extending across the continent, affecting commercial relations with every State and Territory on our northern boundary. Under these circumstances I feel it is my duty to present my views of all these cognate subjects, and in doing so I feel bound to discard as far as possible all political controversy, for in dealing with foreign relations, and especially those with our nearest neighbor, we should think only of our country and not of our party.

The problem before us would be much easier to solve if we could treat alone with Canada as an independent power, but this in form is impossible, though by the wise and generous policy of Great Britain the government of Canada has been practically committed to the Canadian Parliament. Our negotiations have been and must be with Great Britain, though our differences are with her dependencies, the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Newfoundland, which participated in the negotiation of the late treaty, and their consent to the treaty was necessary to its ratification. It can not be doubted that if the English Government was alone to be consulted, it would readily, in conformity to its avowed principles and modern practice, concede to American fishermen the right to enter its ports and harbors to purchase supplies and transship commodities. But, to use the language of the President, the Canadian authorities and officers deny us these privileges and have subjected our citizens engaged in fishing enterprises in waters adjacent to their northeastern shore to numerous vexatious interferences and annoyances, have seized and sold their vessels upon slight pretexts, and have otherwise treated them in a rude, harsh, and oppressive manner. He further says:

This conduct has been justified by Great Britain and Canada, by the claim that the treaty of 1818 permitted it, and upon the ground that it was necessary to the proper protection of Canadian interests. We deny that treaty agreements justify these acts, and we further maintain that, aside from any treaty restraints, of disputed interpretation, the relative positions of the United States and Canada as near neighbors, the growth of our joint commerce, the development and prosperity of both countries, which amicable relations surely guaranty, and above all, the liberality always extended by the United States to the people of Canada, furnished motives for kindness and consideration higher and better than treaty covenants.

Thus far I agree with the President. Not only was a harsh and narrow construction given to the treaty of 1818, but our fishing vessels were denied the benefit of the liberal and enlightened ideas and measures adopted in later years by commercial nations, and, especially, by the United States and Great Britain, of throwing wide open their ports and harbors to all vessels of friendly nations for the exchange of foreign commodities, subject only to such duties as by the public policy of each nation were deemed necessary, and without discrimination of country or vessels or mode of transportation.

Our policy has been especially favorable to Canada, as the duty on the articles she exported to the United States were exceptionally low. Her fresh fish were admitted free of duty into our country through our ports, harbors, and adjacent waters. This public policy was adopted not by treaty only, but by friendly laws, in harmony with the general good will of our people toward a kindred race in language, institutions, and origin, having a common boundary of 4,000 miles, and with whom it is our desire and hope to establish more intimate relations, and, in due time, a common union and destiny.

The President complains that on the part of Canada there was an entire want of reciprocity, that—

While keenly sensitive to all that was exasperating in the condition, and by no means indisposed to support the just complaints of our injured citizens, I still deemed it my duty for the preservation of important American interests which were directly involved, and in view of all the details of the situation, to attempt by negotiation to remedy existing wrongs and to finally terminate, by a fair and just treaty, these ever-recurring causes of difficulty.

I do not question the power of the President to negotiate a treaty subject to the advice and approval of the Senate, but I do deny that the treaty he negotiated would have remedied existing wrongs or terminated the causes of difficulty, or was in any sense a fair and just treaty. The more I have reflected upon it the more I am convinced that it was a one-sided treaty, that it would not have lessened but rather have increased the causes of irritation, and such, I believe, is the general sentiment of the people of the United States, and especially of those who are nearest in interest and in locality to the scene of the wrongs we complain of.

The exclusion of our fishermen by that treaty from the extensive waters and bays adjacent to the fishing grounds, on which they have the same rights as Canadian fishermen, admitted to be ours both by treaty and international law, should never have been conceded except for concessions of commercial rights of equal importance. When we look in the treaty for such concessions we find such trivial provisions as that our fishing vessels need not report to a custom-house when putting into the bays and harbors for shelter or repairing damages, or for purchasing wood or obtaining water. But even this concession prohibits our vessels remaining more than twenty-four hours. They were not to be liable for compulsory pilotage and are relieved from certain dues which are not enforced against any commercial vessel. In case of being driven into any bay or port under stress of weather they could unload when such unloading is made necessary as incidental to repairs, may replenish provisions or supplies damaged or lost by disaster.

In certain cases they could purchase supplies for the homeward voyage. They were promised that the penalties for violating the customs laws should not exceed the value of the ship and its cargo, that the proceedings should be as inexpensive as practicable, that reasonable bail should be accepted, and the usual incidents of a fair and speedy trial are promised. These provisions are not concessions. All these are rights which an Anglo-Saxon believes are inherent to man, as life, liberty, and property, rights which we have demanded from Algiers and Tripoli, which we have exacted from China and Japan when they opened their doors to European civilization, rights which Great Britain would not allow to be denied to Englishmen by any nation of the world. Any negotiation for such rights is a reproach to the framers of the treaty. The very fact of their concession by Canada and acceptance by us is an admission that they had been denied by the Canadian authorities, and that we had to buy these common rights by extending the local jurisdiction of Canada over vast bays where our fishermen had plied their vocation for more than one hundred years.

Nor does the fifteenth article help the treaty, for that is only an offer that, if we will repeal our duties on fish oil, whale oil, seal oil. and fish of all kinds (except fish preserved in oil), as well as on the usual and necessary casks, barrels, kegs, cans, and other coverings of the products named, whether these duties are necessary for revenue or for protection, then, and only in that event, they will allow our vessels to enter their ports for—

1. The purchase of provisions, bait, ice, seines, lines, and all other supplies and outfits.
2 Transshipment of catch, for transport by any means of conveyance.
3. Shipping of crews.

But even this article does not allow our fishing vessels to have any rights except those specially specified in the three clauses named. All and more of the rights proposed by this article have been freely granted and are enjoyed by every British and Canadian vessel, of whatever kind, whenever its owner wishes to enter the ports, harbors, or bays of the United States.

Why are not similar commercial rights conceded to our fishing vessels? Why should Canada refuse to allow American fishing vessels, engaged in a lawful and hazardous business on adjacent banks, to enter their ports and ship their catch over a railroad chiefly of American ownership to the American market? The denial of this privilege, which costs Canada nothing, has always seemed to me so inhospitable, unchristian, and selfish that I wonder that it has not long since led to violence and retaliation. The only answer is that the fishing banks lie nearer to Canadian shores than our own, and that they have therefore an advantage in shipping their catch that we do not enjoy; and yet, strange to say, we allow them to ship their fish free of duty into our market and thus take advantage of their own wrong. The President, as I will show, has the power under the act of 1887, by a simple order, to change all this by stopping for a time the importation of fish and other goods from ports from which our fishermen are excluded, and this alone would in all probability have secured justice, hospitality, and equal commercial privileges to our fishermen; but he chose to negotiate, and the result was a project of a treaty which secures none of these except upon a surrender of the taxing power of the Government.

The President complains that the treaty was rejected without any apparent disposition on the part of the Senate to alter or amend it. The only amendment that would make the treaty tolerable was one to stipulate for the entry of our fishing vessels into Canadian ports with the same commercial privileges that are now enjoyed by the British and Canadian vessels in our ports, but it was said in the committee and concurred in by all that such an amendment would not be accepted by the other contracting parties, that to adopt this amendment would be to defeat the treaty in an indirect way and be a concession of the delimitation of the bays mentioned, that it would be better for the United States, and the Administration as well, to reject the treaty entire, leaving the executive authorities to negotiate anew, or pursue the remedy provided by law, as deemed best for the public interest. These considerations induced me to withhold the amendment suggested, for it was perfectly well known that the treaty was rejected because it extended the exclusive waters of Canada without securing reciprocal advantages, and aggravated rather than lessened existing difficulties.

The President charges that it was the evident intention of the Senate, not wanting expression, that no negotiation should at present be concluded touching the matter at issue; in other words, that the Senate was governed by political motives. This is founded upon a single clause of the report of the committee, in which it is said:

Congress came to the conclusion that the period of negotiation and unavailing remonstrance had passed, and with almost absolute unanimity and without any party division enacted the act of March 3, 1887.

This was the statement of a fact absolutely true, and is not in any sense a denial of the right of the President, under the Constitution and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties. That Congress did expect him to pursue the course marked out by the law which he had approved is undeniably true, but it is equally true that he might, before resorting to the law, continue negotiations, and the same right was open to him after the Senate had expressed its disapproval of the treaty, and yet, in the face of this, the President says the Senate has declined.

The co-operation necessary for the adjustment of the long-standing national differences with which we have to deal, by methods of conference and agreement.

What were these differences? None were suggested by the treaty he sent us except those growing out of the treaty of 1818, which related alone to our fishery rights. These were not settled by the treaty except by new concessions and by a surrender of the taxing power. We believe they could have been easily and quickly settled by his executing the law of March 3, 1887. He seems to be unwilling to execute that law, which undoubtedly expressed the deliberate judgment of Congress without party division, and now that the Senate has declined to approve the treaty, he neglects the execution of the law, imputes to the Senate a declaration that it has not made, seeks to change the issue, sets out other causes of complaint, and invokes new and extraordinary powers to punish Canada for levying discriminating duties in the use of her canals.

A purely executive officer, charged with the execution of a law, places his opinion and his will above the law, declines to renew the negotiations, neglects to carry out the plan of retaliation provided by law, and says he will "therefore turn to the contemplation of a plan of retaliation" entirely different and distinct from the one provided by the law, and asks Congress to grant him the power of suspending a commerce stated by him to have amounted to $270,000,000 during the last six years. It is no wonder that this sudden change of base excites surprise in both countries and is regarded as a mere political movement to divert attention from the real issue, and, for party purposes, to broaden a local controversy into one that may involve the peace of two great countries.

This brings me directly to the consideration of the method of retaliation provided by existing law and that recommended by the President. The act of March 3, 1887, provides:

That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that American fishing vessels or American fishermen, visiting or being in the waters or at any ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied or abridged in the enjoyment of any rights secured to them by treaty or law, or are then or lately have [been] unjustly vexed or harassed in the enjoyment of such rights, or subjected to unreasonable restrictions, regulations, or requirements in respect of such rights, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, in his discretion, by proclamation to that effect, to deny vessels, their masters and crews of the British dominions of North America, any entrance into the waters, ports, or places of, or within the United States, and also, to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States.

That all the injuries to our countrymen recited in the act of Congress have been committed is admitted and strongly stated by the President in his recent message. The ground for retaliation is specifically pointed out by him, and the proper measure of retaliation was clearly and distinctly defined by Congress and is fully justified by the facts stated in the message.

Can there be a doubt that, if the President had promptly, after the passage of this law, exercised his powers, or even now, after the failure of his negotiation, should exercise either of the powers given to him by the law—that is to prevent the entrance of Canadian vessels into our ports or to deny entry into our ports of fish or other goods, the product of said Dominion—he would have secured to our countrymen the privileges referred to? And this would have been a just and proper measure of retaliation. He would have inflicted upon Canadian vessels the precise injury to the same extent that has been inflicted upon American fishermen.

But, not content with this, he proposes a measure of retaliation that will inflict great injury upon our own citizens, in no way connected with the fishery difficulties; will arrest a vast commerce beneficial to both countries, which has been conducted in peace and safety and without controversy for years, which furnishes occupation for our railroads and other modes of transportation, and to a vast number of our people; which causes no loss to our revenue; which will create damage and irritation along the whole length of our border, from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Straits of Fuca. It will, without furnishing a remedy to the fishermen employed upon our northeastern fisheries, inflict an injury to all engaged in commerce on the upper lakes, to several lines of railroads through New England States, will check the construction of railroads to and from the friendly province of Manitoba, probably lead to the suspension and breaking off of the exportation of coal from Ohio and the West to Canada, and the shipment of wheat from the Red River country to Minneapolis, to be ground into flour for re-export or home consumption. In other words, it will suspend or embarrass a commerce of exports and imports aggregating nearly $100,000,000 a year. A proposition like this, made without warning in the midst of a popular election, with all the air and surroundings of a sensation, is the response to an earnest demand made by the fishermen of New England that they should be secured in the enjoyment of what they believe to be their unquestionable rights.

On what ground is this recommendation made? If to secure the rights of our citizens it is necessary to make these sacrifices, a patriotic people will not for a moment hesitate; but if this is a mere expression of resentment because the Senate has not approved the treaty, or is a mere bluff to attract popular feeling in aid of a political canvass, in no way necessary to secure the object sought. the Senate should promptly deny the power asked for, and appeal to the sober judgment of our people to support them in resisting measures so dangerous to the peace and prosperity of the country. The broad question is presented whether it is wise to confer this power on the President of the United States under existing circumstances, and this involves the consideration of our commercial relations with Canada, their extent and importance both to Canada and the United States, and especially of the articles in the treaty of Washington of 1871 and the subsisting laws to carry them into effect.

Prior to the treaty of Washington there were many subjects of dispute between the United States and Great Britain in respect to Canada. That treaty was negotiated with the utmost care by eminent representatives of Great Britain and the United States, and was ratified on the 17th of June, 1871. It was a broad, comprehensive, liberal, and just treaty, fit to be made by two great friendly nations, and was designed to and did put all the controversies then existing upon a course of peaceful settlement honorable to both parties.

The first eleven articles relate alone to the Alabama claims. These have been fully executed. Besides settling these claims there were two clauses honorable to both countries and of good example to all nations. One was the expression by Great Britain in a friendly spirit of—

> Regret felt by Her Majesty's Government for the escape, under whatever circumstances, of the Alabama and other vessels from British ports and for the depredations committed by those vessels—

And, second, the three provisions in Article VI defining the duties of neutral governments to a friendly nation in war with another. These rules embrace the American idea in respect to neutral nations, and have been substantially adopted by other maritime powers.

The next six articles provide for a claims commission to adjudicate and settle mutual claims of citizens of the respective nations against each other. This is an effective form of arbitration, and these articles have been executed.

Article XVIII granted to fishermen of the United States the right to take fish of every kind except shell-fish on the seacoast and shores and in the bays and harbors and creeks of the maritime provinces on the northeastern coast of Canada, without being restricted to any distance from shore, with permission to land upon the shore for the purposes of drying their nets and curing their fish. This clause modifies the fishing rights granted by the treaty of 1818 by allowing our fishermen to fish within the marine league, but it grants them no commercial privilege of entering the port for provisions or supplies and transshipping their catch over the Canadian roads to the United States. This, however, is provided for in Article XXIX, to be hereafter discussed. The nineteenth article grants reciprocal rights to Canadian fishermen on all bays, harbors, and creeks on the seacoast and shores of the United States north of the thirty-ninth parallel of north latitude. These and the two following articles relate exclusively to the fishing rights of the respective nations.

The four following articles relate exclusively to the Halifax Commission, organized to estimate the difference between the concessions to the United States and to Great Britain in respect to the fisheries, and have been fully executed by an award that has always been considered in the United States as excessive and unjust; but the award was made and has been paid.

Article XXVI and several articles following deal with the coasting and transit trade along the rivers and lakes which form the border between the United States and Canada, a distinct subject-matter. Article XXVI declares that the river St. Lawrence, running through British territory, shall forever remain free and open to the sea for the purposes of commerce to the citizens of both countries. Article XXVII secures to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland, St. Lawrence, and other canals in Canada on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion, and the United States undertakes that English subjects shall enjoy the use of the St. Clair Canal and certain State canals on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the United States, and the navigation of Lake Michigan was to be free and open for the purposes of commerce to English subjects.

The twenty-ninth article relates to goods in transit arriving at ports of the United States destined for Canada, and, reciprocally, that goods from ports in the United States through Canada to the United States should be conveyed in transit without the payment of duties. I shall have occasion to call attention in detail to the provisions of this article.

Articles XXX and XXXI provide for the coasting trade in vessels of both countries reciprocally on and through the Great Lakes and the rivers connecting the same, free of duty. In other words, the coasting trade of the waters on the borders of the two countries was to be open to the vessels of both nations on terms of reciprocity.

The last articles from XXXIV to XLII relate solely to the boundary between the two countries on the northwestern coast. This controversy was referred to the Emperor of Germany, who decided it in favor of the United States. These articles were executed by his decision in our favor.

Thus it will be perceived that this treaty embraces four distinct subjects, each of which was of great importance, but not in any way connected with each other.

First. The settlement of the Alabama and other claims.

Second. The fishery controversies on the northeastern coast.

Third. The coasting and transit trade along the Great Lakes and rivers which formed a large part of the boundary between the two countries, and transshipment of goods in bond to and through either country free of duty.

Fourth. The boundary line on the Pacific.

The first and fourth of these, relating to claims and the boundary on the Pacific, were settled in pursuance of the terms of the treaty. The fishery articles gave rise to irritation and were terminated by the act of March 3, 1883. The articles relating to the transit of goods, providing for a vast interior commerce and the reciprocal use of the railroads and canals of each country, have been substantially observed by both countries, except as to the transit of fish belonging to American fishermen from Canadian ports to the United States.

The benefits conferred are mutual, and if any other complaints have arisen they have no connection with, relation to, or similitude to the fishery controversies. Why, therefore, blend this dispute about the transshipment of fish at local ports in Nova Scotia with the vast interior commerce of a continent? Why connect a controversy in the waters about the mouth of the St. Lawrence with the commercial relations along a boundary line extending more than 4,000 miles? No good can result from it unless it is desirable to establish non-intercourse between the two countries, and turn the minds of the two peoples from growing relations of friendship and good will to preparations for controversy and war.

When a nation is compelled by a sense of wrong to seek a remedy by retaliation it is bound to apply a remedy suitable to the offense, and not to resort to extreme or unnecessary measures. If it does so it becomes a wrong-doer. The rule is properly stated by the President in the following words:

> There is also an evident propriety as well as an invitation to moral support, found in visiting upon the offending party the same measure or kind of treatment of which we complain, and as far as possible within the same lines.

And yet at once he invokes a measure of retaliation far beyond the range and out of all proportion to the complaint. What we complain of is the denial of the right of American fishing vessels to enter Canadian ports to ship their catch to the American market.

The remedy provided by law is clear, simple, direct, and sufficient, visiting on the offending party the same measure or kind of treatment of which we complain, and there we should rest. They deny our vessels the right to enter their ports; we deny their vessels the right to enter our ports. They deny our right to transship our fish to our market; we deny them the right to bring their fish into our market. We base our right to enter their ports and transship our fish upon precisely the article of the same treaty upon which they send their fish to our market. If our claim is unfounded, then they should not enjoy the privilege they deny to us.

We believe that the right to transfer fish in bond free of duty through either Canada or the United States rests upon the same law as the transit of all other goods. Fish can be and are freely transmitted from any other port or place in the United States to or from Canada, precisely like other goods, wares, and merchandise, but it is claimed that fish caught on the fishing banks by American fishing vessels can not, under the terms of the treaty of 1818, be allowed to enter the Canadian ports in that region except for certain purposes, and that this traffic is not embraced in the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871. It would appear upon the face of the latter treaty that there is no ground whatever for this distinction. By the plain terms of Article XXIX, which supersedes prior laws and treaties, the goods, wares, or merchandise of American citizens arriving at any of the ports of Her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America and destined for the United States may be entered and conveyed in transit through said possessions without the payment of duties. There is no restriction as to the character of the goods, no exception made as to fish, or as to particular ports, or the character of the vessels, whether fishing vessels or commercial vessels, or as to prior rights. No reserve is made as to the treaty of 1818, and this right was enjoyed by our fishing vessels until 1886. The transit of fish stands on precisely the same basis as the transit of wheat, potatoes, or merchandise.

If the right to transship fish does not exist it is because Article XXIX is not in force. It therefore becomes important to determine whether this article has been in any way changed, qualified, or terminated by the notice given to terminate the articles of the Washington treaty relating to the fisheries by the joint resolution approved March 3, 1883. This resolution declares:

> That in the judgment of Congress the provisions of articles numbered XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and of Article XXX of the treaty between the United States and Her Britannic Majesty, * * * ought to be determinated at the earliest possible time, and be no longer in force; and to this end the President be, and he hereby is, directed to give notice to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the provisions of each and every of the articles aforesaid will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years next after the time of giving such notice.
> SEC. 3. That on and after the expiration of the two years' time required by said treaty, each and every of said articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and be of no force and effect.

Due notice was given by the President of the termination of the aticles named, and an act of Congress prescribed the mode of carrying it into effect.

Thus, by the plain terms of the treaty and in pursuance of a right reserved in the treaty, the fishery articles have been terminated, and by the common consent of both parties the fishing rights of the United States rest upon the treaty of 1818; but this does not affect any other portion of the treaty. This leaves the treaty of Washington, so far as it respects the navigation of the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes and the rivers that connect them, and the shipment of goods in transit under Article XXIX in full force.

The President admits the force of this position, but contends that, as the result of the termination of the fishery articles, Article XXIX has also been terminated. He, in his recent message, for the first time takes that position. He says:

There need be no hesitation in suspending these laws, arising from the supposition that their continuation is secured by treaty obligations, for it seems quite plain that Article XXIX of the treaty of 1871, which was the only article incorporating such laws, terminated the 1st day of July, 1885.

He supports this by a narrow and technical construction of Article XXXIII. It is not pretended that either country has taken any direct measure to terminate Article XXIX, but, as stated, it is a mere constructive repeal, for Article XXIX is not mentioned in the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, terminating the fishery articles. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] supports the President by a subtle argument, plausible upon its face but not satisfactory.

It is sufficient to say that all the contracting parties to this treaty have treated this article as in full force. It is a reciprocal arrangement upon a distinct subject-matter, beneficial to both parties, and of which no complaint has been made, either as to its fairness or its continuance. A repeal by construction is not favored in law. Since the termination of the fishery articles the great commerce conducted under the provision of Article XXIX has been continued and is annually increasing. When appealed to, Great Britain insisted it was in force. If violated at all it has been by the refusal of Canada to allow the transshipment of fish from American vessels in the ports on the northeastern coast, from Nova Scotia through the State of Maine to Boston and other points. But this grievance could be amply remedied under the act of March, 1887, by forbidding the entry of fish from Canada into the United States, or by forbidding Canadian vessels from entering the ports of the United States.

We are told by the President that—

In the year 1886 notice was received by the representatives of our Government that our fishermen would no longer be allowed to ship their fish in bond and free of duty through Canadian territory to this country; and ever since that time such shipment has been denied.

If this be so it is another reason why the President should have at once responded by a refusal to allow fish to be brought through Canadian territory to our country or the entry of Canadian vessels into our ports. This would be a plain, direct, and prompt remedy which the President, though armed with full power, has refused to exercise. To make this injustice by the Canadian authorities the ground for arresting the transit of goods between the two countries along the line of the frontier would be to inflict a vastly greater injury on our own people as well as upon the Canadians, to redress a local grievance for which he has an ample local remedy. It is retaliation against ourselves.

It was said in debate that President Grant in his message of December 5, 1870, recommended the identical measure of retaliation now recommended by President Cleveland. This is easily answered by the very different state of our relations with Great Britain then and now. All the many causes of complaint subsequently settled by the treaty of Washington were then pending and flagrant. But a better answer is that in spite of the many causes of complaint then existing, Congress refused to General Grant the powers he asked for and left him to negotiate as a better remedy. No party then proposed to comply with his request. No Democrat would then confer upon him such powers. Shall we now when our causes of complaint are infinitely less and have been localized give to President Cleveland powers we refused to President Grant?

It has been said in debate that the President has already the power he asks for, and sections 3005 and 3006 of the Revised Statutes have been quoted to sustain this view. I do not concur in this, but agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that no such power is conferred by these sections. It can not be based upon the power granted by section 3005 to the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe rules and regulations. This is merely directory to provide a proper mode for executing the law, but the law itself confers upon the owners of the merchandise the right to carry their goods through the United States free of duty, and that right can not be taken away by the regulations of the Secretary or by his failure to make such regulations. Nor does the authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by section 3006 to make rules, regulations, and conditions, limit or control the authority to import merchandise in bond or duty paid, to be transported from one port of the United States to another over neighboring territory.

The regulations must be in harmony with and not defeat the object of the law. Nor does it follow that powers given to the Secretary of the Treasury are conferred upon the President. A multitude of examples of this kind can be given where the head of a Department is clothed with independent power denied to the President. Nor has the President any dispensing power. He can not take advantage of the non-fulfillment of a treaty by a foreign nation. Congress alone can abrogate a treaty if it is violated by the other party. It may abrogate the treaty in whole or in part, but the President has no such power. If Great Britain has violated the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of Washington, or has failed in any respect to perform its obligations, as I believe it has in refusing the entry and transshipment of our fish, the Congress alone may prescribe proper remedies, either by abrogation of a part or the whole of a treaty or by retaliation in kind. In this case Congress has furnished the remedy, ample, complete, and specific. It has not undertaken to abrogate Article XXIX, but all the parties to the treaty have treated it as subsisting, and, according to my construction, it is still in full force and effect, and neither the interests of our people nor public policy demand that it should be suspended or evaded, but should be maintained and enforced.

Unfortunately the President is committed against this policy; and disappointed in the rejection of the late treaty and dissatisfied with the attitude of his administration on a question involving the rights of a large number of our people, he now, in his recent message, seeks to change the issue, sets up new grievances, asks for new powers to fight another diplomatic battle on another line. He says in his message of the 29th of August that the Dominion of Canada has not complied with Article XXVII of the treaty of Washington in allowing American vessels to use the Welland Canal on the same terms and conditions granted to Canadian vessels. This is quite a different subject-matter than Article XXIX. Article XXVII provides that—

ARTICLE XXVII.

The Government of Her Britannic Majesty engages to urge upon the Government of the Dominion of Canada to secure to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland, St. Lawrence, and other canals in the Dominion on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion; and the Government of the United States engages that the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty shall enjoy the use of the St. Clair Flats Canal on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the United States, and further engages to urge upon the State governments to secure to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty the use of the several State canals connected with the navigation of the lakes or rivers traversed by or contiguous to the boundary line between the possessions of the high contracting parties on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the United States.

Though Great Britain only engaged to urge Canada to secure citizens of the United States the use of the Welland and other canals on terms of equality with citizens of Canada, yet, considering their relations to each other, this constitutes a substantial obligation on the part of Great Britain to secure to citizens of the United States the use of the canals on the same terms granted to citizens of Canada. It is now alleged that such discrimination is made against the United States, but this is denied by the Dominion Government. It appears, however, that as early as the 28th of March, 1887, by an order of council, that Government did levy a special reduced rate of 2 cents a ton, merely nominal, on wheat, corn, pease, barley, and rye, all being food products, carried through the Welland Canal, when shipped to Montreal or ports east of that, while the usual rate when shipped to other ports is 20 cents a ton. This does not discriminate against American vessels, for they may carry these articles to Montreal; but it does discriminate against American ports, and is certainly a violation of the spirit of the treaty if not its letter. This discrimination has continued ever since. It appears also from the report of the Commissioner of Navigation that similar orders of council were in operation since July 4, 1885, during nearly the whole period of this Administration.

A memorandum taken from the Canadian report of canal statistics for 1886 throws some light upon the subject of tolls:

"O. C., 21st April, 1886.—On a memorandum dated 20th April, 1886, from the minister of railways and canals, submitting that, by an order in council dated 4th July, 1885, the Dominion canal tolls on certain food products shipped from Montreal or any other Canadian port east of Montreal were reduced, for the then current season of navigation only, to 2 cents per ton.

"O. C. 14th June, 1886.—Notice is hereby given that by order of his excellency the governor-general in council, dated the 14th June, 1886, the order in council, dated 21st April last, fixing at 2 cents per ton the Dominion canal tolls on certain food products, shall apply to the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals only."

Now, the first inquiry I have to make is if this discrimination is so grievous as to demand the extreme remedy of retaliation, why was it not sooner brought to our attention? The first we heard of such complaint were statements made by a Senator on this floor during the present session and by a bill introduced in the House of Representatives. If there was just ground for this complaint it was the duty of the President to inform Congress of it, and to call upon Congress without respect to the fishery controversy for power to enable him to meet this breach of the treaty. It is not mentioned by the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report. I need not say it was not mentioned by the President in his annual message. It is said it was mentioned in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation in December last, a document not likely to attract attention, and in a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, January 23, 1888. It does not seem to have been called to the attention of the distinguished negotiators of the late fishery treaty. It was not even called to the attention of Mr. Bayard, our Secretary of State, until the 10th of July, 1888, and then in a perfunctory kind of a way. He slept on this grievance until the 21st of July, when he addressed a note to the British minister at his summer retreat; even then did not treat it as a complaint against Great Britain, but closed his brief note with this request:

I will thank you to bring this matter to the attention of the Canadian Government.

No doubt in due time we will hear further from the Canadian Government through Mr. West and Mr. Bayard.

And yet this is the subject-matter of the message of the President of August 29, 1888, which has caused so much excitement in those countries, and even the facts which I state were not known to us until the 12th of this month of September—six days since—when they were communicated by the message of the President in response to a resolution of the Senate. And yet with the message of the President there came to the House by some grape-vine line the bill now before us. It was hurried through in hot haste to heal the wounded honor of our country, which had, according to the President, suffered almost unconsciously a grievous wrong for more than three years!

Mr. President, I have in my time seen many panics. I have seen the Senate and the House rush in hot haste through the forms of legislation under sudden excitement many foolish measures. I have seen mobs not so respectable commit violence and crimes against law and justice. I have read of panics in battle when the bravest of troops fled in a fright from imaginary dangers, but I have never known one so groundless as this. For us to set up these old orders of council of the Canadian Government now, here in the midst of the fishery controversy, as a ground for retaliation would be a departure from all the usages of friendly intercourse between friendly nations. It would be to seek a quarrel on a new pretext to fortify an old controversy. It would be neither manly, dignified, nor just. It is an afterthought. If not, why did not the President advise us before of the discrimination against us in the use of the Welland Canal? Why did he, in June, 1887, confer bonding privileges on the Canadian Pacific Railroad? Why did he not make a firm remonstrance against such discriminations? Why did he not give notice that if continued, like discriminations would be made on the St. Clair and Sault de Ste. Marie Canals? Why, after giving notice to the British minister, does he not await an answer? Can it be that he never heard of this grievance until now, and seized upon it to cover his refusal to obey the law fixing the measure and extent of retaliation for injuries done to the fishing rights? I can not resist the conclusion that this grievance, neglected or overlooked by the President, is now lugged into the fishery controversy to divert attention from the failure to enforce the retaliation authorized by law.

And yet, Mr. President, I believe the discrimination made is a substantial and, as the debate in the House of Representatives shows, an injurious infraction by the Canadian authorities of the treaty of Washington, and calls for a firm remonstrance by the President to Great Britain, and, if not heeded, an act of Congress authorizing a toll on vessels passing through the St. Clair Flats or Sault de Ste. Marie Canals to Canadian ports, or in the last resort authorizing specific retaliation. Upon the showing now made I will vote for such an act or acts after a fair notice and proper hearing. It may be, and has been contended, that the joint resolution of March 3, 1887, is broad enough to justify such retaliation, but if there is any doubt of it full and specific authority should be conferred upon the President to retaliate in kind. I can not doubt that Canada will on proper representation remove this cause of complaint. It is not to be supposed that any such discrimination would be made except by inadvertence, or continued after the attention of the Canadian authorities had been called to it.

We have no right to complain that Canada levies tolls on vessels passing through her canals, though we levy none on American canals, for that right is expressly recognized by the Washington treaty. All that we can ask is that no higher or other tolls are levied on American vessels than on Canadian vessels, that no discriminations are made under cover of drawbacks or bounties in favor of Canadian ports against American ports. If we object to tolls we should do what ought to have been done forty years ago, and for which I voted thirty years ago, build a canal around the Falls of Niagara on American soil.

I conclude, therefore, that it is not wise at the present time to give to the President the additional powers of retaliation he asks for as the case now stands. It is for Congress, the representatives of the States and the people, to judge of the necessity and extent of powers of retaliation demanded by national honor to secure national rights, and not for the President. If the object is to secure our fishery rights, the powers already granted are full, complete, and adequate. If it is to prevent discriminations against American vessels in Canadian canals, the foundation has not been laid by negotiation, remonstrance, and refusal to justify acts of retaliation. When that is done it will be time enough to provide such measures, and the patriotism of Congress may be relied upon, whatever party is in power, to assert and maintain the rights of our people.

That there is no haste about this matter is shown from the very cool and placid manner in which Sir John Macdonald treats the whole question. The Welland Canal will be closed for the season in sixty days, before we shall receive an answer from the Canadian Government or from Mr. West, and then we shall have a long season intervening. Sir John Macdonald is reported in the newspapers to have said yesterday:

The policy of the Canadian Government will be to await developments in the United States. By this I mean that the only question from which trouble can arise relates to the fishing. The fishing season has just closed, and it will not open again until May. In other words, it will be fully eight months before the United States will have any chance to bring up the question again.

That was not the view the House of Representatives seem to have taken.

And now, Mr. President, taking a broader view of this question, I submit if the time has not come when the people of the United States and Canada should take a broader view of their relations to each other than has heretofore seemed practicable. Our whole history since the conquest of Canada by Great Britain in 1763 has been a continuous warning that we can not be at peace with each other except by political as well as commercial union. The fate of Canada should have followed the fortunes of the colonies in the American Revolution. It would have been better for all, for the mother country as well, if all this continent north of Mexico had participated in the formation and shared in common the blessings and prosperity of the American Union.

So evidently our fathers thought, for among the earliest military movements by the Continental Congress was the expedition for the occupation of Canada, and the capture of the British forces in Montreal and Quebec. The story of the failure of the expedition, the heroism of Arnold and Burr, the death of Montgomery, and the fearful sufferings borne by the Continental forces in the march and retreat is familiar to every student of American history. The native population of Canada were then friendly to our cause, and hundreds of them as refugees followed our retiring forces and shared in the subsequent dangers and triumphs of the war. It was the earnest desire of Franklin, Adams, and Jay at the treaty of peace to secure the consent of Great Britain to allow Canada to form a part of the United States, and at one time it appeared possible but for the influence of France and Spain, then the acknowledged sovereigns of large parts of the territory now included within the United States. The present status of Canada grew out of the activities and acquisitions of European powers after the discovery of this continent. Spain, France, and England especially desired to acquire political jurisdiction over this newly discovered country.

Without going into the details so familiar to the Senate, it is sufficient to say that Spain held Florida, France held all west of the Mississippi, Mexico held Texas west to the Pacific, and England held Canada. The United States held, subject to the Indian title, only the region between the Mississippi and the Atlantic. The statesmen of this Government early discerned the fact that it was impossible that Spain, France, and Mexico should hold the territory then held by them without serious detriment to the interests and prosperity of the United States, and without the danger that was always present of conflicts with the European powers maintaining governments in contiguous territory. It was a wise policy and a necessity to acquire these vast regions and add them to this country. They were acquired and are now held.

Precisely the same considerations apply to Canada, with greater force. The commercial conditions have vastly changed within twenty-five years. Railroads have been built across the continent in our own country and in Canada. The seaboard is of such a character and its geographical situation is such on both oceans that perfect freedom as to transportation is absolutely essential, not only to the prosperity of the two countries, but to the entire commerce of the world; and as far as the interests of the two people are concerned, they are divided by a mere imaginary line. They live next-door neighbors to each other, and there should be a perfect freedom of intercourse between them.

A denial of that intercourse, or the withholding of it from them, rests simply and wholly upon the accident that a European power one hundred years ago was able to hold that territory against us; but her interest has practically passed away and Canada has become an independent government to all intents and purposes, as much so as Texas was after she separated herself from Mexico. So that all the considerations that entered into the acquisition of Florida, Louisiana, and the Pacific coast and Texas apply to Canada, greatly strengthened by the changed condition of commercial relations and matters of transportation. These intensify not only the propriety, but the absolute necessity of both a commercial and a political union between Canada and the United States.

The immense extent of our boundary line invites, has produced, and will more and more produce, as both countries grow, innumerable causes of controversy that would not exist if we were bound by the tie of a common government. Nearly all of the troublesome questions that have been the subject of negotiations with Great Britain have related to Canada. One fruitless war led to the invasion of Canada. More than once we have been on the verge of war with Great Britain as to the boundary line with Canada. Our present controversies as to the fisheries, canals, commercial and trade relations are with Canada. The similarity of our language and institutions makes intercourse easy and controversies frequent. Our proximity is more dangerous than if we were of different races, speaking different languages, and separated by old traditions and usages. We are essentially one people; but since the autonomy of the Dominion of Canada, composed of many provinces, we are two rival federal republics between whom union is the only safety, can we not therefore, as the elder and stronger republic, adopt a line of public policy that will peacefully and happily blend the two in one harmonious whole. Canada is now stronger, more populous and wealthier than the United States was when the Constitution was formed. In one hundred years our country has been increased fifteen fold in population, five-fold in extent, and twenty fold in wealth, productions, and resources. We may anticipate for Canada the same proportionate growth in population and wealth, but neither can grow in extent, for the continent is shared between us.

Shall each country protect itself from the other by lines of fortifications, dotted by custom-houses, carefully watched by smugglers, and expend their resources for armies and vessels of war? Shall we duplicate canals on our borders at every natural obstacle to commerce because we can not agree for their common use? Shall we, like unfriendly neighbors, build a mad-lane between us, because we can not agree to join our fences? One or the other of these lines of public policy will very soon have to be adopted, or, like the ancient English and Scotch, we will be in a state of continual controversy or warfare with each other. I prefer a kind and generous policy to Canada rather than one of retaliation and force. Nor will mere commercial arrangements, in their nature temporary, like the reciprocity treaty of 1854 and of 1871, liable to be set aside by the shifting exigencies of the political situation, meet or solve the problem we have before us. They only tend to emphasize our separation.

The way to union with Canada is not by hostile legislation; not by acts of retaliation, but by friendly overtures. This union is one of the events that must inevitably come in the future; it will come by the logic of the situation, and no politician or combination of politicians can prevent it. The true policy of this Government is to tender freedom in trade and intercourse, and to make this tender in such a fraternal way that it shall be an overture to the Canadian people to become a part of this Republic.

The admission of Canada into the Union divided into states and territories upon the basis of our Federal system would be of untold advantage to both countries. Four or five States could be admitted, each with an already established autonomy, defined boundaries, and a sufficient population, and the remainder divided into territories would have the benefit of local government and become the scene of a migration only exceeded by that of the Northwest Territory.

The natural advantages of the union would be in closing forever all controversies inseparable from a long boundary line, in giving the broadest free trade in the productions of a continent, in combining the interests and pride and achievements of a kindred population fairly represented in the Congress of the United States, in increasing the power and influence of republican institutions among the nations of the world, and in giving additional security against the aggression of European powers. This, as I have said, is no untrodden experiment in the history of American progress. The thirteen old colonies have absorbed under their flag and jurisdiction successive regions of vast extent and resources, some of which now exceed in wealth and population many times that of the old thirteen States at the beginning of this century. The settlement of the Northwest Territory, the Louisiana and Florida purchases, the annexation of Texas, and the acquisition from Mexico are examples of the adaptation of our form of government for expansion, to absorb and unite, to enrich and build up, to ingraft in our body-politic adjacent countries, and while strengthening the older States confer prosperity and development to the new States admitted into this brotherhood of republican States.

The Dominion of Canada is so situated that she would reap more advantages from this connection than any previous acquisition. Our great market will be at once open to her vast undeveloped natural resources. Her fisheries would find an undisputed and untaxed market. Her extensive forests, far greater than any now known, will be doubled in present value. Her wheat, barley, and other cereals will enter into our consumption or add to the store of food to be conveyed to other markets by modes of transportation always open, free of custom-house officers or tolls at all seasons of the year. The tide of emigration that has steadily passed through her borders into our more favored climate will turn northward to the forests of Columbia, to the vast plains of Manitoba and adjacent provinces, to the silver, gold, copper, iron, and nickel mines north of Lake Superior and to the still unsettled agricultural regions in the older provinces.

I know of no portion of the population of Canada whose interests would be injuriously affected by union with the United States except the favored few who enjoy titles or who, like their senators, hold offices for life; but even these will find compensation for their loss, but the public gain, by a broader sphere of ambition and influence. For the mass of their people the change would be imperceptible, while its benefits would be undeniably apparent. They now, under the British North American act of 1867, form a voluntary union into one legislative confederation. Under our system they would have this and greater security for perpetual union, growth, wealth, and strength, with all their local powers, autonomy, and government.

Nor is it likely that the British Government would object to the free and voluntary action of a dependency upon which it has already conferred substantially independent power; for the parent government will find in the extended union an enlarged market for its productions and will be relieved from the embarrassments under which they now labor of guarding and protecting interests of which they have no part. In any event, the independent action of two peoples, bound by so many ties of kinship, neighborhood, and interest could not long be denied their union under a common government.

And the advantages of this union will be fully shared by the people of the United States. Our manufacturing industries, now greatly developed, will find new markets in the Dominion of Canada; machinery, clothing, supplies will be needed with new developments. Has it not always been so? Has not the prosperity of the older States kept pace constantly with the march of prosperity westward until the shores of the Pacific have been reached? Every new clearing in the forest, every new opening in the prairie, every new ranch on the plains, every new mine in the mountains has contributed to the employment and wealth of the East; and so will it be when the Dominion of Canada is open for new explorers unchecked by rival lines of sovereignty and jurisdiction. The ports of the East will be open to their fisheries, the great rivers and lakes will be unvexed by rival interests and regulations, the canals of both countries will be free to all, and the common treasure of a greater country than now will enable us to overcome natural obstructions to our commerce.

And may we not hope that, with a broader area, the unhappy sectionalism of the past between the North and the South may be dissipated by new questions that will arise, by a more intense patriotism invoked by the expansion of our institutions? It has always been so in the past. The North watched with jealousy the annexation of Texas; the South resisted to the utmost the extension of free institutions over California, and sought to break up the Union when the North obtained temporary ascendency. Both sections found their greatest good in the defeat of their cherished wishes. Will not the South see in the extension of our domain the triumph of the principles their statesmen did so much to establish? Will it not invoke in the North a genuine sympathy for them in solving the grave problem they have of dealing with a rapidly-growing race in their midst, distinct and different from their own? Will it not make easier the blending and mingling of the different races and tribes and types of men that form our population?

I see in the success of this policy much that is good and nothing that is harmful to any part of our great country. Nor are there any difficulties that should deter us for a moment. The institutions of Canada are substantially like our own. The population is in the main of the same stock. Our proximity is such that while separated we may be enemies, if united we will be friends. The debt of Canada is no impediment, for our resources are such that it can be assumed without being a burden. It can only be accomplished by the free and hearty assent of both peoples. Any force used will defeat the object we have in view. It can only be approached by gradual measures that invite and tend to good will and intercourse. It can not be promoted by controversy or retaliation. These measures lead to others, and end in war. There are restless spirits in every generation that seek to rise by the misfortunes of their country. There are narrow politicians that seek by tricks and popular appeals to gain an advantage; but in the end they fall by their own devices.

True statesmanship consists in an earnest effort by honest means to promote the public good. No greater good can be accomplished than by a wise and peaceful policy to unite Canada and the United States under one common government, but carefully preserving to each state its local authority and autonomy. This controlling principle of blending local and national authority—many in one—was the discovery of our fathers, and has guided the American people thus far in safety and honor, and I believe can be and ought to be extended to the people of Canada. With a firm conviction that this consummation, most devoutly to be wished, is within the womb of destiny, and believing that it is our duty to hasten its coming, I am not willing for one to vote for any measure not demanded by national honor, that will tend to postpone the good time coming when the American flag will be the signal and sign of the Union of all the English speaking people of the continent from the Rio Grande to the Arctic Ocean.

I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN obtained the floor.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield for one moment that I may make a motion.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

LIGHT AT OTTER CREEK.

Mr. PALMER. I ask unanimous consent to move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 5716) for establishing a light at the mouth of Otter Creek, Lake Champlain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire action upon the motion now?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator desire made of the bill?

Mr. PALMER. I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. May I inquire what the bill is?

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5716) for establishing a light at the mouth of Otter Creek, Lake Champlain.

Mr. PALMER. If there is any interest felt I can make an explanation that will satisfy all Senators that it is the proper thing to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Alabama kindly yields to me for a moment. I wish to make a brief statement on a matter personal to myself.

I was not present when the vote was taken upon the Chinese exclusion bill yesterday. Before leaving town last Wednesday I had arranged a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. I desired to vote "yea" upon the motion to reconsider the passage of that bill. The Senator from Indiana, I understand, was to vote "nay." By some mistake, for which I blame no one, the Senator from Indiana being absent yesterday, a pair between him and some other Senator was announced, and I did not appear to be accounted for. I wish merely to say that if here I should have gladly voted "yea" upon the motion to reconsider.

I do not remember having ever heard of a bill, even in the agonies of war or expected war, in the face of any calamity, that was passed with such extraordinary haste and disregard of formality as that bill was originally. Considering the fact that we had then pending a treaty with China and that we then had in the hands of the President a bill unsigned which had just passed both Houses substantially providing, as I understood, for all that was needed to ward off Chinamen, I thought it a matter of propriety and proper respect to a foreign nation to reconsider our somewhat hasty action and refer the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that this important subject might take the usual steps of deliberate and dignified consideration.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when I heard yesterday the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, "that the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, with such measures as are expedient to promote friendly commercial and political intercourse between these countries and the United States, and for that purpose have leave to sit during the recess of Congress," I was very much puzzled to understand what it was the Senator from Ohio desired that that committee should do in the vacation of Congress. I was not aware that the Senate or the country was in need of any information of an accurate character or of a general character in reference to the actual state of the relations between the United States and Canada, either as it concerns their commerce or their intercourse of any description. I was not aware that there was any necessity for promoting the friendly commercial and political intercourse between those countries and the United States that had not existed always and would not continue to exist until the end of time, I hope.

I was quite surprised this morning to find the Senator come in with a prepared written argument, a speech in which he went into a post-mortem examination of the fisheries treaty, which has been denounced by the Senate. He has gone over the whole ground covered by the recent message of the President asking additional powers by way of amendment to the act of March 3, 1887, and has proceeded further to delineate in a more specific way a favorite idea that seems to have haunted the imagination of the Senator from Ohio now for quite a while in respect of a zollverein between the United States and Canada, which this morning seems to have matured into a settled purpose on his part to have Canada annexed to the United States.

I admire the reach of the Senator's statesmanlike genius and ability in thus grasping Canada around the waist and hauling her up into close embrace with the people of the United States, and I look forward perhaps at the end of another century to something like a realization of the dream of the Senator from Ohio which he has so beautifully portrayed this morning, of the admission of Canada into the United States, unless in the mean time the Federal party of the United States, who are very much in love with the ancient traditions of centralized power, should conclude that after all it was a better movement that Canada should embrace us in her union, should draw us back beneath the imperial crown of Great Britain rather than that we should absorb those provinces in this democratic Republic of ours.

I am a little at a loss to know, after the course that has been observed in political campaigns in the last few Presidential elections, whether we are not, after all, drifting into imperialism; whether we are not disregarding the injunctions of the Constitution of the United States, and whether we are not seeking a power higher than the Constitution continually through which we may work out the personal or political designs that seem so much to excite the minds of some of our leading statesmen in this country.

The Constitution of the United States was intended to confer upon the Government of the United States all the power necessary to promote the happiness of its people in accordance with the matured plan which had ripened through the experience of mankind after many centuries into what we conceive to be the best form of government for these purposes that could possibly be devised—a Government which, I think, will be very little improved even by amendments to the Constitution of the United States. But one of the chief means by which this thing has been accomplished was the division of power between the different branches of the Federal Government. It is a very curious, a very instructive, a very accurate, a very exact division and distribution of powers that has been placed in the Constitution of the United States, and we believe on this side of the Chamber that the religious observance of this distribution of powers and the refusal on the part of one of the departments of the Government to interfere with the duties enjoined by the Constitution upon another, is after all the very best guaranty that we are to have for the preservation of our liberties and the promotion of the great ends of this Government—ends that have been so remarkably illustrated in a hundred years' history of the people of the United States as being within the highest aspirations of the human mind in respect of government.

But of late years the Senate of the United States, which has a certain definite constitutional connection with the subject of making treaties, has been assuming to itself certain authority and certain powers over the diplomatic relations of the United States which, I beg leave to say, augur badly for the preservation of the proper constitutional distribution of powers between the different departments of this Government. The Senate has become in later years extremely aggressive in its endeavor to control by resolutions and through the action of committees the whole diplomatic relations between the United States and foreign powers. It seems entirely to discard the fact that the President of the United States is conjointly with it the treaty-making power, and that he has also resting upon him the duty, secured and sanctioned by the obligations of an oath, that he will see that the laws are faithfully executed.

The President of the United States, considering the relations of this country to Great Britain in respect of a matter which has been for seventy years in controversy, with a great many different, varying phases of the question from time to time, thought it to be his constitutional privilege and his duty to institute negotiations with Great Britain with a view of removing these troubles. It was not supposed until the present political campaign opened that the President of the United States did not have the power in virtue of the Constitution to enter upon such a negotiation. It was not supposed, so far as I know, that Congress had expressed any opposition to negotiation. It is true that in the act of March 3, 1887, provision was made by which the President could avail himself of certain powers granted by the Legislature of the United States for the purpose of bringing to terms Canada or Great Britain in respect of certain features of our fisheries controversy.

It is perhaps almost a waste of time after the long debate which has preceded the discussion this morning, upon the resolution on the fisheries treaty, to refer to the fact that the act of 1887 was a permissive act, an act that clothed the President with certain power to be exercised in his own discretion, an act which made it necessary for him to determine, first, the existence of the causes of retaliation; second, that they were then of recent date or that they occurred after the passage of the law; third. that they were of sufficient magnitude to justify the President in retaliation upon the commerce of Canada: and, fourth, that the remedy which was to be sought through retaliation was one which would not seriously cripple or embarrass the commerce and the financial arrangements of the people of our own country. All of these conditions, all of these considerations were left open for him to determine as the condition-precedent of his enforcing that act of Congress.

I repeat, Congress at that time had not only the full opportunity, but stood in the presence of the duty of declaring that the outrages committed on our fishermen by Canada justified and required the retaliation provided for in that act, if Congress was of that opinion. The Congress of the United States in dealing with a question of this kind, in avowing that wrongs and outrages had been committed, in declaring what those wrongs and outrages were, in declaring that redress was demanded, had not only the opportunity, but had the self-confessed duty resting upon it to provide adequate and sufficient means for resistance to or retaliation on account of these wrongs.

Do we suppose that the people of the United States intend to exonerate Congress from the performance of a plain and obvious duty which it has declared upon the statute-book, and that the Congress of the United States can devolve upon the Executive of this country a discretion which it refused to exercise itself, and hold him guilty of a delinquency in his public office because he did not do what Congress itself had the opportunity to do, declared ought to be done, and failed and refused to do?

We can not hold that relation towards the President of the United States without self-stultification. When we admit the wrong, when we denounce it, when we provide the remedy, and then instead of putting it into force throw the responsibility upon the shoulders of the President of the United States, we do something which I can not regard as highly creditable to the Congress of the United States.

Sir, that was not the intention of that law, or if it was it was so concealed as to make the law a snare and a pitfall for the President of the United States instead of an open, manly, brave declaration of the duty of the Government of the United States in respect of these vexed questions.

Having left the President in that attitude in regard to this question, he cast about for the best means of accomplishing a result which Congress seemed to desire, which it had indeed expressed a desire to accomplish. He looked over the powers of negotiation conferred upon him by the Constitution of the United States, and he did precisely what we did in 1871, in 1854, in 1818, in 1793; he invited the British Government to come into council with him to ascertain what were the causes of disturbance between the two powers, and to see whether or not upon just and fair terms those causes of disturbance could be removed.

He negotiated a treaty. In doing so he employed some of the very best intellect in this country. The Senate of the United States has borne witness to the capacity of the Secretary of State during many long years of faithful and able public service, and I dare say in his behalf here to-day that there is no American statesman who has had better opportunities for being informed in respect to the condition of his country, who treats them in a broader way than he does, or who has greater ability in their management. He then invited two very distinguished publicists, gentlemen learned in the law of treaties, one of them a Republican, an experienced negotiator, who had been sent by Republican administrations to China, there to negotiate in respect to some of the most difficult problems that we have ever yet had to deal with; another a Democrat, a man of eminence, of high reputation, of such character as recently justified the people of his State in conferring upon him the honor of a candidacy for its chief executive office, a man who lived almost upon the very shores of the Bay of Fundy, whose very life had been spent in close practical study of the facts connected with the fisheries, and whose legal attainments, bright and splendid as they are, were brought to bear in their full force, not merely in the diplomatic way, but before that he had been engaged in the courts defending the cause of the fishermen, seeing that their rights were protected under the treaty and under the laws of Canada and the United States. This trio of able negotiators commenced last November to negotiate about this matter, and after a long discussion they brought forward the treaty which was signed by them and submitted to the Senate of the United States.

For thus engaging in this negotiation, for presuming without the consent of the Senate of the United States to initiate this negotiation, the President of the United States has been censured upon this floor in terms that I should almost hesitate to repeat. No epithet, it seems, has been sufficiently strong to characterize the contempt Senators on the other side of this Chamber have desired to express because the President of the United States availed himself of these high functionaries, these able men, and under his constitutional privilege and prerogative went forward to make a negotiation to be submitted to this body for its consideration.

Now, sir, had the President of the United States chosen to deal with this question in any mere political sense, he would have withheld this negotiation in order to win certain votes that seem to have been up to to-day the prize that is contended for by political combinations and politicians generally, the President would have commenced a retaliation that would have provoked, if not war, a very serious and intense state of hostile feeling between the United States and the people of Canada and the people of Great Britain. How easy was it for him to have availed himself of the act of March 3, 1887, to have carried forward this particular class or species of retaliation that Senators insist he was confined to by that act and that he shall be confined to now. How easy would it have been for him to have denied intercourse between the people of Canada and the people of the United States. What would have been the result of that? Friction, anger, outbreak, collision, hostility, ultimately war, unless the good sense of these peoples on both sides of the line had held themselves in check until a better time and a better temper could characterize their action. That was easy enough.

But the President of the United States, disregarding all the contemptible tricks of a politician, resorted to his high constitutional powers to negotiate, as General Grant had done, as Mr. Pierce had done, as Mr. Fillmore had done, as John Quincy Adams and Mr. Monroe had done. He resorted to the high constitutional power of negotiation for the purpose of presenting this question to the consideration of the American people, knowing that he had to come before a Republican Senate, and that it required a two-thirds majority of this body to ratify his act.

Sir, in the presence of a political campaign, where there was eager searching for votes and earnest and impassioned appeals to the rankling prejudices of classes and of races, the President of the United States found himself possessed of sufficient statesmanship, sufficient honor, sufficient strength, enough of the confidence of the American people, to enter upon this negotiation, lay it before the Senate of the United States and the people of the United States, and ask them to consider it dispassionately even in the tumultuous time of a great political campaign.

I hold, sir, that there has been no higher example in this country in all of its history of true, honest, sincere statesmanship than that which has characterized the conduct of the President of the United States in bringing this subject freely, openly, and fairly before the attention of the American people. When he is condemned for that he will not be condemned by the honest men of this nation. He will be condemned only by those men who prefer the success of a political party to the success of our country in the promotion of its interests and in the maintenance of its honor.

The debate upon the treaty was long and arduous, but it was not fair. The treaty came in here under the condemnation of a party caucus. It was the first treaty that was ever hauled out of the Senate of the United States and carried into the curtained recesses of a party caucus. It came back into this body stamped with the disapproval of the Republican caucus of this Senate, and from that time until this time we knew then just as well as we know now that the treaty was to be condemned, it made no difference how strongly it might appeal to the American people for the principles upon which it was constructed, and for the justice that it secured to all persons concerned in it.

Departing from a usage that had characterized the history of the Senate of the United States without a single break for one hundred years, this treaty was thrown into the arena of politics by a vote which required its open discussion, and yet we had proceeded but a little way in the discussion of it when the very majority which required that it should be so discussed refused to allow the facts to come out before the American people upon which its discussion alone could be conducted with safety and with propriety. There were letters written to the Department of State by no less a man than Edward Everett when he first considered the effect, bearing, and meaning of the treaty of 1818, which Mr. Calhoun, as Secretary of State, declined to publish, because those facts could not be put in the reach of the British Government without serious detriment to the American people. Those facts have remained buried in the archives of the State Department until this moment. They were important facts, and the Senate knows it. They were facts that the people of the United States ought to have heard if they were allowed to hear any part of the case.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question: whether it is not entirely within the competency of the executive department of the Government to publish those facts?

Mr. MORGAN. It is entirely within the competence of the executive department of the Government.

Mr. BLAIR. Then, if those facts are essential and would have thrown light upon this treaty and the discussion of it favorable to the Administration, why were they not given to the American people?

Mr. MORGAN. Because this Administration determined it would do nothing to injure the American people even for its own salvation.

Mr. BLAIR. Not even in self-defense?

Mr. MORGAN. No; not even in self-defense.

Mr. BLAIR. The American people will be glad to hear that excuse.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, some of them will and some of them will ironically pretend that they are. The great body of the American people will rejoice in the fact that they have a President who is willing to withhold from the people of the United States anything that would damage the country in respect of a foreign negotiation.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not wish to get into any debate about it.

Mr. BLAIR. I leave the matter with this suggestion, whether this repetition of matter so libelous to this country and so disgraceful to this country, if it exists, as the withholding of this secret knowledge and secret weakness of its case from the world—whether this general charge of dishonor to the country be not a great deal worse for the country to endure than to give the contents of that letter to the world?

Mr. MORGAN. Not one word has been said about the honor of the country. It is the interests of the country that have been spoken of and not its honor at all. Not one word has been said that Mr. Everett had put into a state paper anything that was libelous—not a word.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator evades the point.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not evading anything, but I decline to be interrupted, if the Senator will excuse me, because I have something else to do besides swapping words with the Senator from New Hampshire this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair.) The Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I repeat, sir, that the people of the United States, if they had the right to hear the open discussion of this treaty, had the right to hear all the facts upon which it proceeded; but the very party which compelled the open discussion withheld the facts. Now, let the people judge about that, where the sincerity of action is in this matter. Let them judge whether or not this proceeding in respect of the whole progress of the discussion upon this treaty has been with a view to its possible effect upon the existing political campaign, or whether it has been with a view to the permanent interests of this great Republic of ours.

There stands the record, sir, and it will speak trumpet-tongued through ages yet to come, and it will speak in vindication of the President of the United States, and it will speak in condemnation of that party maneuver which took this great subject into a party caucus and made it, from the time of the beginning of the discussion down to this morning, a matter of pure political exploit.

I have not time this morning, neither have I the inclination, to go over the features of the treaty for the purpose of undertaking to justify the whole of it, as I think I should be very able to do, to the mind of any impartial, sincere man. But there are one or two matters referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who is absent from the Chamber at this time, in which I totally disagree with him upon the facts. The Senator evidently felt embarrassed that the majority of this Senate had not availed themselves of their opportunity in this case, as they did in the case of the Chinese treaty, to improve the treaty by amendment; to make it, in other words, conformable to the wishes of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish ——

Mr. MORGAN. I beg pardon. I did not see the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish the Senator to know that I am listening to him with great attention.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator felt the embarrassment of the situation. He knew very well that no important treaty had come into this Senate since the beginning of this Administration that the Senate did not take—I will not call it the liberty to exercise its privilege—its right of amending that treaty to suit itself—to perform its duty, suggests the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and I accept the suggestion, of amending that treaty to suit itself. I could go over a number of treaties that we have ratified here, I could go over some that have been postponed, in respect of which there was the exercise on the part of the Senate of its duty of amendment so as to make the language of the treaty and its provisions conform to the Senatorial will.

The power of amendment and the duty of amendment rest within the grasp of the Senate and upon its shoulders, for we, sir, let it be reiterated again, are a body of negotiators; we are exercising, conjointly with the President of the United States, the power of negotiation, and that is all that we do. We have no power but that of negotiation. By voting with a two-thirds majority to put the treaty into effect we can not ratify it so as to make it obligatory upon the country, for after we have cast our vote—two-thirds—in favor of a treaty, then it turns out that the President of the United States has the perfect constitutional right to withhold the exchange of ratifications, and thereby the treaty falls.

So the Senate of the United States in its constitutional relation to the subject of making treaties is simply a body of negotiators. It has no other function but that. The Senator from Ohio well understood that fact, and now he says that an amendment was proposed in the Committee on Foreign Relations to this treaty. I suppose the honorable Senator refers to an amendment offered by himself, and it was conceded on all hands he says that if that amendment had been put upon the treaty there was no chance for its ratification. Sir, I am at the first of that. It is news to me that any such concession as that was made by any Democrat upon that committee. It made no difference to us whether we supposed the amendment would be accepted by Great Britain or not. If it was an amendment that was meet for the occasion, one proper to be put upon the treaty in our judgment, it was our duty as negotiators to put it there and let Great Britain accept it or refuse it, as she might see proper to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope I shall have the opportunity of continuing my remarks to-morrow.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator at this moment. If he desires to go ahead now I am willing that the special order shall be laid aside until the Senator concludes his remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. There are some points in the speech of the Senator from Ohio that I wish to read. I confess that I was greatly surprised at that speech, at the breadth of treatment he gave to this question; and, if the Senate will excuse me, I prefer to break my remarks here and to take up the subject to-morrow morning.

I should like to observe, if the Senate will permit me a moment further, that the Committee on Foreign Relations meets to-morrow, and House bill 11309 has been before that committee since the 10th day of September, and I confess that I was greatly astonished that the Senator from Ohio should deliberately get up here, before the committee have had a chance to argue the case in the slightest degree, before the subject has even come up for consideration, and make an argument with a view of defeating that bill. If that committee have made up their minds, as I suppose they have, that the bill shall not be reported back at this present session of Congress, I desire to-morrow after the committee has had its session to bring the subject to the attention of the country, and therefore I prefer that this resolution should go over for to-day.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. C. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5092) for the relief of Charles L. Bradwell.

The message also returned, in compliance with the request of the Senate, the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 5716) for establishing a light at the mouth of Otter Creek, Lake Champlain; and

A bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10931) to donate and transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, subject to reversion to the United States in the event of their non-usage for quarantine purposes, and requiring the proper department of the United States Government to execute the necessary transfer to the State of Louisiana on the condition aforesaid.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3539) to amend "an act to detach the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, from the eastern and attach it to the western judicial district of said State."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 13th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 3304) to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States.

The message also announced that the following bills having been presented to the President on the 1st instant and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, the same have become laws without his signature:

An act (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs; and

An act (S. 2899) granting a pension to Harriet Welch.

The message further announced that the President had, on the 14th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2716) granting a pension to Carl M. Schwantes;

An act (S. 2371) granting a pension to Jacob Pitner;

An act (S. 2871) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah J. Martin;

An act (S. 3035) to grant a pension to William Thields;

An act (S. 3118) for the relief of Mathew O. Reagan; and

An act (S. 3178) to remove the political disabilities of William L. Bradford.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to strike out section 5.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not wish to prolong this debate, but I wish to have the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] for a moment.

Mr. BLAIR. Unless it is apparent that there is a quorum present, I move a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that a quorum of the Senate is not present, which fact is quite evident upon a count by the Chair, and asks a call of the Senate. The roll of the Senate will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Berry,	Coke,	Hawley,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Manderson,	Teller,
Blair,	Davis,	Mitchell,	Turpie,
Bowen,	Dolph,	Morgan,	Vest,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Payne,	Walthall,
Call,	Evarts,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chace,	Frye,	Plumb,
Chandler,	George,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Sherman,

Mr. COKE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. REAGAN] is detained at his house by sickness.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. BECK] is detained from the Chamber by reason of sickness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the call of the Senate, thirty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. FARWELL, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. PALMER, respectively, entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

Mr. HARRIS. Is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no quorum present. Thirty-seven Senators have now responded to their names.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. BATE and Mr. PASCO, respectively, entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

Mr. HARRIS. If that makes a quorum, I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee withdraws his motion, a quorum being now present.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, yesterday, in undertaking from memory——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will announce the result of the call. On the call of the Senate thirty-nine Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, yesterday in giving from memory the origin and history of the Signal Service Bureau I seem to have fallen into an error and unintentionally done injustice to an exceedingly worthy and scientific gentleman who was actually the originator of it. I had in mind myself only what passed between me and the then Representative from the Milwaukee district, Hon. Halbert E. Paine. What I said yesterday has attracted Mr. Paine's attention, and he has written me a letter which I desire to have read in order that full justice may be done to the persons who did actually originate this matter. I ask the Secretary to read that letter. I do not desire to participate in the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 18, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In the remarks relating to the Signal Service which you made in the Senate yesterday, you unintentionally failed to do justice to the late Professor I. A. Lapham, of Milwaukee, Wis., who originated the Weather Bureau.

I was chairman of one of the House committees in 1870, and received my morning mail at the committee-room. One morning I was pleased to find among my letters a communication from my esteemed friend, Professor I. A. Lapham, of Milwaukee. He inclosed two numbers of the Milwaukee Sentinel, setting forth in detail the losses of life and property occasioned during two successive years by storms on the northern and northwestern lakes. There were hundreds of casualties, and the aggregate was appalling. He suggested that Congress should do something to prevent these disasters.

My first impression was that he wanted Congress to restrain the winds; but, upon perusal of his whole letter, I discovered that his plan was to take daily meteorological observations throughout the United States and give notice on the lakes and seaboard of the approach of storms. I had studied the movements of cyclones in the United States, and it seemed to me that observations taken in the West and communicated by telegraph would enable the authorities to give notice of approaching storms on the lakes and on the Atlantic coast in time to mitigate the losses which they caused. After a few minutes' consideration I concluded that the War Department, having military stations and men and money, was at the time better equipped for the service than any other.

Within thirty minutes after I opened Professor Lapham's letter I draughted the joint resolution under which the Signal Service was organized. It is printed on page 369 of volume 16 of the Statutes. I made several ineffectual attempts to secure the passage of the joint resolution by unanimous consent. There was always an objection from some quarter, generally from Indiana. At length I called upon my Indiana friend and explained my measure, begging him to permit it to pass. He feared that the little mustard seed planted in my joint resolution would, sooner or later, develop into a large and very costly tree, but at last very kindly, and yet very reluctantly, promised that when I should again ask the unanimous consent of the House to the passage of the resolution he would interpose no objection. As soon as I could obtain the floor I again asked the House to pass the resolution.

To my great astonishment my Indiana friend instantly objected. I hastened across the Hall and reminded him of his promise. He said he had forgotten it, and shouted, "Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection." That was decisive of the fate of the resolution. If the gentleman from Indiana did not object nobody could. The resolution was adopted by unanimous consent. I then went over to the Senate and requested Mr. Wilson, afterwards Vice-President, to engineer the measure through the Senate. He earnestly approved Professor Lapham's plan, and secured favorable action in the Senate at once. The President approved the joint resolution on the 9th of February, 1870. Soon after that date I met Professor Henry, of the Smithsonian Institution, at a public reception. He congratulated me on the passage of the resolution, but said he apprehended that my troubles would commence when I reached the Committee on Appropriations with my prayer for money to meet the incidental expenses of the service.

But Professor Henry's predictions were not verified. Mr. DAWES and his committee promptly decided in favor of an appropriation. The money was appropriated by the act approved April 20, 1870. (16 Stat., 90.)

The modesty of this first appropriation is almost ridiculous in view of the munificent appropriations of modern cities. The appropriation for 1887 amounted to $269,000. (24 Stat., 532.) The appropriation for 1870 was only $15,000. (16 Stat., 90.)

Before I finally obtained the unanimous consent of the House to the passage of the joint resolution, a stranger called upon me and introduced himself as Colonel Myer, of the Signal Corps. He exhibited the most intense anxiety for the success of the measure. It seemed to me that his zeal and enthusiasm marked him as the fit man to launch the new enterprise.

As soon as the joint resolution passed, I called upon General Belknap, then Secretary of War, and suggested that he should consider the propriety of assigning Colonel Myer to the duty. He said at once that he had already in his own mind fixed upon Colonel Myer as the officer to commence the work under the joint resolution.

Very respectfully,

HALBERT E. PAINE.

Hon. H. L. DAWES, U. S. Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. This question, Mr. President, has been before this body on a former occasion. On the 23d of February, 1887, the Senate passed a bill sent to us from the House of Representatives substantially, and in fact literally almost, the bill which we now have under consideration, with the exception of the fifth section.

The Senate after long debate, participated in by Senators on both sides, agreed to an amendment to that bill, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHACE in the chair). The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4 of House bill No. 190, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, it was proposed to strike out section 6 and insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 6. That the Weather Service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture and Labor, to take effect July 1, 1887, and shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary to efficiently manage said bureau. Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau, including the second lieutenants now in service, shall continue as at present: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps. The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; and the compensation now paid to the employés and enlisted men of said service shall continue as now; and the moneys appropriated for said service and hereafter appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture and Labor.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed, within thirty days of the passage of this act, to appoint a board of three Army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member. The duty of said board shall be to make an inventory of all property now in the control and possession of the Signal Service Bureau, and shall separate and turn over to the Department of Agriculture and Labor such portions of the property as the said board may determine to be suitable for the work of the Signal Service Weather Bureau. The remainder of the property shall remain in the control of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BUTLER. As I stated, that bill was adopted by the Senate in February, 1887, in precisely the words of the House bill which we are now considering, with the exception of perhaps some verbal changes which were made by striking out the word "labor" and making the department a Department of Agriculture alone. That bill, with the amendment—an amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and amended in the Senate after it came from the committee—was adopted by the Senate after a long and exhaustive debate.

I find that in the vote on the bill the yeas were 37 and the nays 15, and among those voting in the affirmative was the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I will read the names of the Senators voting for and against on that proposition:

YEAS—37.

Allison,	Dolph,	Mahone,	Ransom,
Beck,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Sabin,
Berry,	Evarts,	Miller,	Sawyer,
Blackburn,	Fair,	Mitchell of Oregon,	Sherman,
Blair,	Frye,	Mitchell of Pa.	Van Wyck,
Brown,	George,	Morgan,	Vest,
Cheney,	Harris,	Morrill,	Walthall.
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Payne,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,
Conger,	Kenna,	Pugh,

NAYS—15.

Bowen,	Hampton,	Platt,	Whitthorne,
Dawes,	Harrison,	Saulsbury,	Williams,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Spooner,	Wilson of Iowa.
Hale,	Manderson,	Teller,

As I have remarked, Mr. President, this amendment which the Senate Committee on Agriculture now strikes out was adopted in the Senate on the recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture or the leading members of that committee; so when the House of Representatives passed this bill which we are now considering it incorporated the amendment literally, with the exceptions to which I have called attention, and it is sent back to us. In the debate, which I will not trouble the Senate with reading, it was insisted that the amendment was crude, imperfect, and unsatisfactory—precisely the arguments that we have heard on this bill. It was stated that a commission, of which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] were members, had labored for three years to reach a solution of this problem and had failed, and it was urged in debate that the matter had better be postponed and passed over for an occasion when the Senate could more deliberately provide for a more satisfactory assignment or transfer of the Weather Service Bureau to the new Department of Agriculture—precisely the arguments we had here yesterday. And yet in the face of these arguments the bill passed by a vote of 37 to 15.

The House of Representatives has now sent us this bill with precisely this amendment in it, and our Senate Committee on Agriculture turns around upon its own record, reversing its own action in this regard, and strikes out that provision of the House bill. I have not called attention to this with the view of convicting anybody of inconsistency, but it does seem to me that it is a game of shuttlecock and battledore.

The other House passed a bill simply organizing the Department of Agriculture. The Senate put the amendment on and sent it back to the House, and from some difficulty in reaching it it failed to become a law. The House at this session has passed identically the same bill, and in deference to the wishes of the Senate has put the amendment on that we put on it before and sent to it, and now our committee strikes it out.

Perhaps some of those Senators who have been insisting that this amendment shall not be put on may be able to explain this inconsistency. I confess I do not see how it can be explained.

Mr. PALMER. The argument that the Senator from South Carolina advances as giving solidity and strength to this fifth section, it seems to me, will not produce that effect. He says it was incorporated in deference to the views of the Agricultural Committee four years ago. Am I correct?

Mr. BUTLER. I so understand it. The amendment was offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. PALMER. I do not wish to dispute that; but now the committee almost unanimously—with only one exception—are opposed to section 5, and it is a very remarkable thing that the only three practical farmers upon the committee are the most strongly opposed to this section 5.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the committee, let me ask the Senator, had any additional light by which they should so suddenly change their position on this question?

Mr. PALMER. The committee is not the same that it was four years ago, at least as far as I am concerned; there are some other members that have been added to it and some have gone out. I do not know what proportion of the present members were on the committee four years ago, but the members of the committee now are not unalterably opposed to the incorporation of this Signal Corps with the Agricultural Department. What they wish to do is to make haste slowly, and, in the transfer, not to involve in demoralization a great interest which is now recognized as one of the most important factors of commerce, and if they were of the opinion that it should be incorporated with the Agricultural Department they would ask that the matter should go to the Committee on Military Affairs to have a proper section drawn. The thing is so crude now that I imagine there would be no Signal Corps left after this section took effect.

My opinion is, taking a cursory view of this question, that the agriculture of the country is deriving all the benefit that it can derive from the present management in regard to cold waves, predictions of storms, and things of that kind. But there is another very important matter that if it was known that this matter was being discussed here would flood this Senate Chamber with remonstrances against the transfer from the marine and commercial interest. As far as the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate is concerned, we have not had one single petition for the incorporation of section 5. Therefore we who have probably a greater practical interest in the agriculture of the country than other members of the committee are opposed to this transfer at this time, and wish, if the Signal Service Bureau is transferred, that it should be transferred properly and the organization or frame-work be preserved so that it may be properly built up in the new department.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the Senator indicate in what respect he would modify the provisions of section 5 in order to accomplish what he thinks ought to be accomplished? He must have reflected about it. I must confess I do not discover anything at all.

Mr. PALMER. I have here a memorandum of my objections. I do not know that I have the requisite knowledge to prepare a proper section to take the place of section 5 in order to intelligently modify it. Therefore I propose, as far as I am concerned, that it shall be stricken out, and that was the view of the committee.

1. The bureau named in section 5 is not known to the law.
2. It leaves the Chief Signal Officer of the Army without a force.
3. There are 2,300 miles of military telegraph lines disconnected from the weather service. The bill leaves these and all military signal duty unprovided for.
4. To keep faith with the men transferred Congress must establish a civil pension list and provide medical attendance.
5. The present pay is fixed by time of service and is fixed now by the War Department rules and regulations. The present bill does not so provide.
6. The Signal Corps of the Army is entirely neglected or ignored.
7. The bill provides for discharge of the enlisted men.
8. Section 5 provides that the compensation of enlisted men shall remain as now. Will this not carry with it a civil pension list?

Mr. PLUMB. Let me interrupt the Senator right there. He is reading from a memorandum that he got undoubtedly from some member of the Signal Corps of the Army. Let me say that I would rather have his own judgment on those points than to have him repeat objections made from that corps; and I would like the Senator to take up that fifth section and justify any single one of his statements in regard to it.

Mr. PALMER. Is the Senator certain of what he states when he says that I get that from some member of the Signal Corps of the Army?

Mr. PLUMB. I assumed so because it only puts in more compact shape what the Senator read yesterday from Captain Dunwoody.

Mr. PALMER. I took that letter and drew my deductions from it. The very fact that we are so dependent on outside information on the subject shows to my mind that to pass this bill with section 5 would be a very crude, dangerous, and improper piece of legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Michigan may speak for himself when he speaks of depending on outside knowledge, but I hope he will not use that expression with reference to other members of the Senate. I will ask him to take up the objections numbered from 1 to 8, which he has just read from manuscript, and which I said (wrongfully, no doubt) that he got from the Signal Service Bureau, and I ask him to take up section 5 and justify a single one of those objections that he has made by reading the section.

Mr. PALMER. Would it not be more proper for me to catechise the Senator from Kansas and ask him to show me wherein any one of these objections is faulty?

Mr. PLUMB. I think, on the other hand, the onus is on the Senator from Michigan. Here is a proposition which comes from the House of Representatives, which has had the sanction of a practically unanimous vote of that body. It is a proposition which also passed this House four years ago by a large majority, and it is, I think, proper for the Senator to show wherein its provisions are defective.

Mr. PALMER. I do not suppose it is proper for us to discuss the legislation of the other House.

Mr. PLUMB. We can discuss what took place there four years ago.

Mr. PALMER. We can refer to a matter of legislation——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hopes the Senator from Michigan will not violate the rules by making statements of what occurs in the other House.

Mr. PALMER. I was going to make a suppositious case, Mr. President. I did not intend to violate the rules.

Mr. PLATT. May I rise to inquire whether there is any impropriety in referring to the action of the House of Representatives taken at a previous session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Kansas is right, I ask him if it is not true that the bureau named in section 5 is not known to the law? I am so informed.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think it is, but——

Mr. PALMER. It is known as a signal corps.

Mr. BUTLER. Here is the information which the Senator is seeking on this subject:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, October 12, 1885.

By direction of the Secretary of War the following Regulation is published, and will be numbered paragraph 2574½ of the Regulations.

2574½. In times of peace a detail of not less than one officer and three enlisted men will be kept constantly under instruction and practice in military signaling at each post in the United States, until the officers and all men who have sufficient intelligence are proficient in the use of the general service-code with flag, torch, and heliograph, and homographic code with disks. The post commander will detail an acting signal officer at each post to give the necessary instruction and supervise field practice. The monthly reports of instructions and practice will be rendered to the Chief Signal Officer through department commanders.

By command of Lieutenant-General Sheridan.

R. C. DRUM,
Adjutant-General.

That extract is taken from the regulations of the War Department in regard to the Signal Service Bureau of the Army proper. All the Army officers, I take it, are instructed and these posts are established by order of the War Department at various points in the Union for the purpose of instructing certain officers and men in military signaling. I do not understand that this transfer interferes with them in the slightest degree. It simply takes the weather portion of that service, if I may use that expression, and transfers that to the Agricultural Department, and leaves the Army part where it is to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say, Mr. President, by way of enlargement of what the Senator from South Carolina has said, that the language of this section is explicit, as he stated yesterday, that the transfer is only of the weather service; that is to say, so much as relates to the indications and prognostications, or actual existing facts of the weather pertaining to the United States Signal Service Bureau. That is all that is transferred. The Senator from Michigan makes the point that that is not in the statute; that is to say, that that does not transfer something which the statute recognizes; but if it does not, no harm can be done.

Mr. BUTLER. We recognize it in this act.

Mr. PLUMB. I was going to say that we go on and prescribe in detail, a little later, enough to cover all that, if it should lack in definite description in the first part of the section, by saying that—

The present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau, including the second lieutenants now in service, shall continue as at present: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps. The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The Senator knows exactly what that means. The officers who would have the execution of it would know exactly what that means. I think there could be no doubt of what the effect would be of a bill that should be passed in the language proposed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. PALMER. I can not deny that I know what I think it means, but whether it would be so construed by the technical officers of the Government is another thing. But that is not so material as the fact that there is a difference of opinion on many of these points, and I think that no Senator here will deny that the section is crudely drawn, and that if it is to be incorporated in the bill it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs and be properly drawn, and as a matter of courtesy they should consider it.

The benefit, as I say now, to be derived by the commerce of the country beyond what it derives at present is from the collection of data from which conclusions can be deduced. The delay of a couple of years in the transfer of this bureau or of its weather branch, which we all recognize as of great value, can not inure very seriously to the detriment or to the lack of dignity of the new department.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Michigan assumes that some of us who are in favor of not concurring in the amendment of the Agricultural Committee agree that this provision is crudely drawn. I do not make any such admission, and while I have no desire to show any want of courtesy to the Committee on Military Affairs, I do not believe that if that committee had this matter under consideration for two years they could improve upon it in the slightest degree. The whole matter was discussed elaborately in the last session of Congress, and while I admit that that is not conclusive on us now, it ought to have some potency, it seems to me, on the action of the Senate in regard to this bill, particularly as the House of Representatives on a subsequent occasion have adopted the amendment which the Senate adopted by an overwhelming majority, and have sent it back to us as a part of our action, not theirs, in deference to the wishes of the Senate. If I believed that this provision would lead to any confusion or would work injury to anybody, I should be as much opposed to it as the Senator from Michigan.

I must confess, Mr. President, that while there has been a general charge of crudeness, a general arraignment of this provision because of its crudeness and imperfection, I have failed to hear a single suggestion from any Senator pointing out wherein it is crude and imperfect and likely to work injury to any person. As the Senator from Kansas has pointed out again and again, and as I have attempted to do, it simply proposes to transfer the weather service of the Signal Service Bureau of the Army to the Agricultural Department, which we are creating by this bill, and it leaves the Signal Service of the Army precisely as it is. If there is nothing left of it, that can not be the fault of this provision of law.

Mr. PALMER. I did not wish to attribute any undue ignorance to the Senator from South Carolina. I merely included him in the category of most of us—that we did not know much about it.

Mr. BUTLER. Well——

Mr. PALMER. And I will withdraw him from that category if he makes any dissent.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not profess any profounder knowledge on the subject than the Senator from Michigan, and perhaps not so profound. As he is the leading authority upon agricultural subjects in the Senate, I shall not undertake to put my judgment against his. All I have to say is that, in my judgment, if this provision were committed to the Committee on Military Affairs, as able and distinguished and well informed on military affairs as the members of that committee are, I do not think they could improve on this measure.

Mr. PALMER. Is the Senator through?

Mr. BUTLER. For the present.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the telegram that I hold in my hand has just been delivered to me, and it is an indication of what we should receive in a perfect storm if it were known throughout the country that there was any serious danger of the transfer.

I look at the thing in this way—that the agriculture of the country is dependent upon cheap transportation for its prosperity, and this is a recognized factor now in the great commercial interests of the country. I will ask the Secratary to read the telegram which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be read from the desk, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

NORTH FIELD DEPOT, MINN., September 17, 1888.

Senator C. K. DAVIS, Washington, D. C.:

It is the desire of the meteorological committee of the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce that the United States Signal Service be not transferred from the War Department.

WILLIAM M. PAYNE.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. PALMER. One moment, if the Senator pleases, I think I have the floor; but I will give way to him if he wishes.

Mr. BUTLER. I was simply going to interject the remark that there is no proposition in this bill to transfer the Signal Service of the Army to the Department of Agriculture, so that the dispatch has no reference whatever to what we are considering.

Mr. PALMER. The country understands that the Weather Bureau and the Signal Service are identical. We look upon it on the shores of the Great Lakes as particularly important as a weather barometer where the commonest sailor may look at the signals in every port and see what the weather is to be. If it had been supposed that there was going to be any serious attempt to transfer that to a new department with the risk of demoralization, instead of having one telegram here this morning I have no doubt we should have had a thousand.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan why we did not have them some years ago when the Senate actually adopted, after long debate and prolonged investigation by a committee of this body on the subject, this very proposition?

Mr. PALMER. From the very fact, I imagine, that the commercial men of the country hardly ever read the discussions in Congress unless their attention is particularly called to some imminent danger. They had reason to believe undoubtedly that there was danger of this provision becoming a law and this transfer being effected.

Mr. BUTLER. This subject has been under discussion here for several days, and the Senator from Michigan can produce but one single dispatch protesting against the transfer, and, as I insisted a while ago, that has no reference whatever to the subject under consideration, except incidentally.

Mr. PLUMB. I will venture to say that that dispatch does not reflect the action of any meeting of the St. Paul Board of Trade at all, and it was sent by some understrapper who has chosen to use the imprimatur of that board of trade to bolster himself up.

Mr. BUTLER. Very likely.

Mr. PLUMB. I will wager a good farm that the Board of Trade of St. Paul has had no meeting on that subject.

Mr. PALMER. If the telegram means nothing, then nothing is to be said. The Senator from Kansas seems to think that it comes from no one; that it practically originated nowhere, and will end without effect. I do not suppose it will have a great deal of effect. I am going to let the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] speak.

Mr. DAVIS. I have nothing to say except——

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Kansas please listen to the explanation of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DAVIS. The matter of the Signal Service has been a subject of continued debate from year to year by that body, and it has taken a great deal of interest in it. I have no question, indeed I personally know, that the dispatch represents the sentiment of the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce on that subject. I was told a month ago that it was a subject of conference in that body.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator may speak of the occult thing by which he knows, but I speak of the actual fact. I venture to wager a good prairie farm in Kansas on the proposition that the Board of Trade of St. Paul has had no meeting recently at which it has given any expression of that kind.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know whether it has had any meeting recently, but I know perfectly well that the matter has been under discussion for the last two years. In regard to the wager of the farm, I should make some question about the gentleman's title and preliminary requisites before accepting it. So far as the sentiments in that dispatch are concerned, I personally know, if I know anything, that it does represent the sentiments of the community in which I live.

Mr. PALMER. As the Senator from Kansas seems to be a little doubtful about any feeling upon this question, I suggest to him that we defer the discussion of this matter one week and invite an expression of opinion from the different quarters of the country, of the boards of trade, in which the farmer is just as much interested almost as he is in the practical growing of his crops.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Kansas will pardon me, I will say that I of course do not want to defer the consideration of the bill any further, but if I had the privilege of doing so I would accept the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, with the understanding that the boards of trade and various other organizations in the country be informed specifically exactly what the bill proposes, and I would be quite willing to risk its passage upon the replies which we should get from those organizations. If we would demonstrate to those organizations that we simply propose to transfer the weather service of the Signal Service Bureau of the Army to this new department, I am quite willing to leave it to a vote of those organizations as to whether it should be done or not.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say one other thing in that same connection. The Senator from Michigan says that these boards of trade represent the farmers. They represent them just as the wolf represents the lamb. They represent them to rob them. They represent them to plunder them. They do not stand for anything that is useful to the farmer, but are destructive of every interest he has in view. If they come here after consulting that constituency which is behind them, and which they evidently assume to represent, they would not tell the story as told in that dispatch. But they would be prompted to send dispatches here which are stimulated by Army officers whose only fear is that they will be sent back to their commands, and who want to live in Washington at the public expense, performing social duties and all that sort of thing, and neglecting the military duties for which they were educated.

If the Senator makes the issue between the boards of trade, the packers, and the trusts and combines that plunder the farmer, he can do so, but he shall not here without challenge set them up as the representatives of the men whom they have made poorer every year that they have operated.

Mr. PALMER. It is not my mission to defend boards of trade or transportation lines. I recognize the disadvantage of corners, of eveners, of all those things which the Senator from Kansas so graphically described some time ago; I do not remember their technical names. I believe with him that the farmer is burdened by their exactions oftentimes. At the same time there is a great underlying interest which, although it may be distorted and warped by their machinations, the farmer is dependent upon, and that is cheap transportation. The cheaper the farmer can have his grain transported the less the exaction of these boards of trade and transportation lines which the Senator stigmatizes so cruelly. Underlying all these exactions and extortions there is some great want, and the want here is the want of transportation. Everything that conduces to cheap and safe transportation helps the farmer. If it does not, we ought to legislate so that it may.

The Signal Service upon the shores of the Atlantic and upon the borders of the Great Lakes is a very important factor. It makes transportation cheaper. It is one of those factors that have brought the transportation of wheat down from 20 cents a bushel from Chicago to Buffalo to 2 and 2½ cents a bushel. No man can say that that is an exaction upon the farmer. That is attributable to these various factors, river and harbor bills and the Signal Service, which have conduced to safe navigation.

This service may be conducted just as well under the Agricultural Department—I do not contend that it will not be—but I say that we ought to pause before we take so radical a step without getting the opinion of practical men. I know that the information of the Senator from Kansas is great and varied, but there are some things that specialists know better and more exactly than he does in a general way. I say that we should hear from these transportation lines and from these boards of trade, and if they give us proper reasons we can take and use those reasons to sustain our argument or else to detract from the argument of our opponents.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator from Michigan really believe that any number of men in this country engaged in agriculture would object to the transfer of the weather service of the Signal Service Bureau of the Army to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. PALMER. I think at first blush——

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator believe that any material number, any number that would amount to anything, would object to such a transfer? Does the Senator believe that there is a single scientific man in this country who has given this subject any consideration whatever who would not advocate the transfer, from the General of the Army down?

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator asked me if the farmers would object.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask as to both.

Mr. PALMER. We will take one at a time, if the Senator will permit me. I think at first blush it might gratify the pride of the farmer to have this great department created, which I am anxious to see created and made an executive department. I think that he would like to see it graced with all the adjuncts possible. I have no doubt that the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from South Carolina, with their facility of expression and with their imaginative way of talking, could make the farmer believe that the Signal Service or the Weather Bureau appertained to nothing but the growing of corn and oats and potatoes; but other men could come in and show that it was just as essential to the farmer after his corn, potatoes, and wheat were raised to have them safely transported to market.

Mr. BUTLER. Right there, does the Senator believe that that service can be as efficiently rendered under the Agricultural Department as under the War Department?

Mr. PALMER. I am not prepared to say now. I do not think it could be unless the service was thoroughly organized and put in perfect working order, so that it could be worked when it was transferred. The fear that I now have is that you would demoralize the whole service.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator if the bureau is not organized now?

Mr. PALMER. I think it is.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, how is the organization going to be affected by a transfer to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. PALMER. You are going to take away the Chief Signal Officer, who has information on these points. You are going to take away four Army officers, who have been making weather predictions, and who are educated as far as men can be in making predictions. You are going to take them away and send them to their respective regiments.

Mr. PLUMB. No.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I understand the Senator from Michigan to take the position that this service can not be efficiently rendered by gentlemen selected from civil pursuits—by scientific men?

Mr. PALMER. I think it can be; but I doubt whether you can take any gentlemen from civil pursuits and put them into this service and have it done as successfully as by the men who have been for fifteen years engaged in the Signal Service Bureau, and whose tastes and inclinations are in that line. Another thing which has to be regarded is the uncertainty of the civil service as contradistinguished from the War Department.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator, I believe, introduced a letter yesterday. I certainly heard extracts read from a letter from Captain Dunwoody, who is high authority in the Signal Service Bureau of the Army, in which he stated that it was inefficient as at present organized. I believe that is true. I can not understand what higher authority——

Mr. PALMER. I do not think he said that.

Mr. BUTLER. What did he say? The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] read from it.

Mr. PLUMB. I read from it. It is contained in the RECORD of to-day. He said it was inefficiently organized, and that was one of the objections to transferring it; that it ought to be properly organized before it was transferred.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, the Senator from Michigan says that the organization is perfect, as I understand him.

Mr. PALMER. No, I did not say anything of that kind. Nothing is perfect in this world.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, as near perfect as human nature can make it.

Mr. PALMER. I do not think the RECORD will bear the Senator out.

Mr. PLUMB. Here is what Captain Dunwoody says on that point:

It is only urged that no transfer, in block, of a badly arranged, and in some respects inefficient, personnel be enacted.

Mr. PALMER. That is the point. The process of eradicating that inefficiency is now going on.

Mr. PLUMB. In other words, a badly arranged and inefficient personnel would be worse in the Agricultural Department than in the War Department.

Mr. PALMER. But we are not going to amend it by transferring it in block. We are going to interrupt the process of renovation that is now going on.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think any process of renovation is going on.

Mr. HAWLEY. The expenses have been largely reduced.

Mr. PLUMB. What does the Senator say?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is claimed by the present administration that the expenses have been very largely reduced, and the Chief has plans before Congress for still further reducing them.

Mr. PLUMB. Senators talk about inefficiency of the bureau. It will get all the appropriations needed whenever Congress sees fit. The Senate will bear in mind that this favors the transfer. Captain Dunwoody only opposes a transfer in block of the present organization. The Senator's authority is Captain Dunwoody for the effect of section 5. He ought not to object to that, for the language of section 5 itself is sufficiently explicit on that point:

Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization * * * shall continue as at present.

Then a special provision is made for the use of the services of the Chief Signal Officer until the President shall in his judgment send to the Senate the name of a person who he thinks is better qualified than the present head of the bureau. We therefore simply changed the department in which this bureau shall render service; and inasmuch as by the confession of those who are interested in it and yet who oppose the change the bureau should be reorganized, where is the best place to reorganize it, in a department in which it can not stay permanently, as everybody here admits, or in that department in which it can and ought to stay permanently, and in which the purpose of its usefulness is more fully understood than it can possibly be in the War Department?

Mr. BUTLER. It is so admitted on all hands.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, it is so admitted on all hands. The fact is really that the Senator from Michigan is contending, not that it shall not be transferred now, but he is contending that it never shall be transferred. I do not mean to say that he believes that is the effect of his course. These military officers have been enjoying so long the delights of Washington life that they never will go back to their regiments if they can prevent it. They are begging of Congress not to transfer them to-day, hoping that new conditions will arise next year whereby we shall not transfer them at all. That is all there is about it.

Mr. PALMER. That is collateral.

Mr. PLUMB. It is good collateral, notwithstanding. [Laughter.]

Mr. PALMER. I do not think I can be accused of officer-mania or officer-phobia. I am now speaking for delay in this matter that we may have time to discuss it and get the opinion of our constituents. I am certain that I have heard from none of mine in regard to the propriety of this proposed transfer. The Senator is speaking of a transfer in block. He imagines that we are going to take up this whole system of four hundred and ninety men and lift it right over and put it into the Agricultural Department without the suspicion that there are certain parts that will drop out—for instance, the four experienced regular Army officers who will go back to their regiments.

Mr. PLUMB. Not necessarily. The President can detail them just as well for service under the civilian head of the Agricultural Department as he can under the civilian head of the War Department.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question. He speaks about delay and making haste slowly. Will the Senator inform the Senate how much longer time he would like in order to perfect this organization and secure the transfer which he says ought to be made? This whole matter was discussed in the last Congress—exhaustively and elaborately discussed. The very same arguments were used against it then that are used to-day.

Mr. PALMER. In the Senate?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir. It was claimed the proposition was crude.

Mr. PALMER. I can say that I never heard a word of it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator was a member of this body at that time. A long, elaborate, exhaustive discussion took place, and the very same argument that he is offering to-day was offered then, that we ought to postpone the transfer, that we ought to delay it, in order that the Military Committee might incubate upon it. Well, sir, we have been incubating over this thing from that time until now. The other House has adopted the suggestions of the Senate. The proposition has been before the Committee on Agriculture. They have reported on the bill and have suggested no remedy, and now as we put the bill upon its passage and propose it, in order to give effect to the organization of the Agricultural Department, the Senator comes in and says, "Let us make haste slowly; let us go slow; it is crude; it is imperfect."

Mr. PALMER. The Senator forgets that the committee who had this matter under consideration and who weighed it carefully were almost unanimous against retaining the fifth section.

Mr. BUTLER. It is very singular what a change has come over the spirit of their dream, when the committee in the last Congress reported upon it to this body, when amendments were made in the Senate and the bill was passed by a vote of 37 to 15, and went to the other House. The other House have adopted what the Senate then proposed, and now it is suggested that the Senate shall turn right back upon its own action.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator, when he says it is so easy to take all these Army officers and put them down into the Agricultural Department, what beneficial result is to come if the same men are to carry on this work? Why will they not carry it on just as well where they are as when they are moved over to the Agricultural Department? Is it not an absolute necessity, if you are going to produce different results, to change entirely the whole organization?

Mr. BUTLER. In the first place, I have made no such statement as the Senator from Massachusetts assumes that I did. Nor do I understand that the Senator from Kansas has made any such statement.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know what it means, then.

Mr. BUTLER. Nobody makes any such proposition as to transfer the Army officers to the Department of Agriculture. The provision of the bill itself makes no such proposition. On the contrary, the bill provides that the Chief shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The presumption is that the President will select a gentleman of scientific attainments in civil life. There is no proposition in the bill to transfer the Army officers, certainly not permanently, to the Agricultural Department. It provides in terms that the subordinate force, including the lieutenants and the enlisted men, shall be transferred temporarily until a board to be appointed by the Secretary of War can devise a method by which this service can be assimilated with the Agricultural Department, and that is all.

Mr. DAWES. It means either taking this work out of the hands of the persons who are now carrying it on, or it means to keep it in their hands, one or the other. If it means to take it out of their hands and put it into more efficient, more scientific hands that will insure better results, the suggestion is that that will come better after you have reorganized the bureau and put it in such shape that new men can take it along. Then the answer comes. But there is no need of that; we are going to transfer the Army officers, the lieutenants, and we provide that the existing Chief himself may be utilized for that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. Temporarily.

Mr. DAWES. Our friends do not mean to put this service into new hands, or else they do. If they mean to put it into new hands, they ought not to put it in at once, but should wait until it is reorganized on a basis that will carry out that purpose. Then they turn around and say that we can carry it on with the existing officers just as well until after it is reorganized.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator suggest some plan by which we can accomplish the results which he says he desires to accomplish?

Mr. DAWES. I am, in common with my friend, seeking the best possible results. If I knew to-day what that plan may be, I could suggest possibly an amendment to the bill that would carry a new organization along with it; but I do not profess to know.

Mr. BUTLER. We can not live always; that is very certain.

Mr. DAWES. Will my friend tell me the necessity of doing to-day, on this 18th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1888, this instant, this new and radical overthrow of a system which has during its existence in its present organization, though defective and not producing the best possible results, achieved more than any other system in the world of that kind? There is in no other country such an organization that has accomplished such marvelous and useful results as this. Now, it seems that my friend from South Carolina and my friend from Kansas can not wait over night, but it must be upset and put into new hands.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; we are not simply waiting over night; we have been waiting more than three years.

Mr. DAWES. You would not have waited over night if you had found a quorum yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER. That may be; a quorum might be sufficient to settle the question; but I do not think there is any good reason to prevent action. The absence of a quorum might.

In any observations I have made in regard to the Signal Service Bureau of the Army I have not made the slighest reflection upon it, and I do not intend to do so now. I have no doubt in the world that the Army officers have done as well as they could, perhaps, under the circumstances. But the Senator himself admits, as I understand him, that the bureau is not as efficient as it might be. He himself admits that it ought to go to the Agricultural Department; but he says, "wait." If the Senator would just intimate the ground upon which he asks this delay I would acquiesce with him; but in view of the action of Congress upon this subject I must confess that the argument strikes me with no force whatever, and no sufficient satisfactory reason has been assigned why this provision should not be adopted now.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I did not desire to take part in this discussion, and certainly should not but for the criticism upon the Agricultural Committee, of which I am a member, which has been indulged in by Senators, and but for the repeated questions which have been repeatedly put with emphasis by the Senator from South Carolina, calling for reasons why the committee's amendment, striking out the fifth section of the bill, should be sustained; and for the further oft-repeated assertion by Senators that the Signal Service can be transferred as an entirety, in its present shape, without inconsistency, from the military to a civil department.

Mr. President, I am in favor of this bill which creates an Agricultural Department as one of the Executive Departments of the Government and want to see that great interest represented in the Cabinet of our Chief Executive, and it is in part for the reason that I wish this done that I oppose the fifth section of the bill.

The committee gave it careful consideration, sent for the Chief Signal Officer, General Greely, and heard his statement as to the existing organization, and wherein embarrassments would arise in its transfer to the civil Department of Agriculture.

He gave such reasons as were satisfactory to the committee, and the committee amended the bill by striking out the fifth section, and this action was concurred in, as I remember, by all but one of the committee, the Senator from Kansas, who has just taken his seat after vigorously opposing the action of the committee. Now, sir, I will not, in this running debate, turn from the issue to indulge, in this presence, in a general discussion of agriculture, but adhere to the issue in question.

This fifth section proposes to transfer in block the entire Signal Service from where it now is to another department foreign to its present organization. It proposes to take it up, root and branch, and plant it, as a whole, into a department not yet created, and with which, as this Signal Service is now organized, it could not be homogeneous. The inconsistency of mixing the military with the civil departments is apparent. But it is denied by Senators that the Signal Corps, as it now exists, is a military organization.

Why, Mr. President, you may trace this service from its inception to the present, and you will find it in all respects essentially military. If it is not military, it is nothing. Indeed it had a strange beginning for a great organized service. It seems to have been created by virtue of no regular legislation, but out of appropriations on bills to which it did not directly relate. It rode into existence on other bills. Beginning in 1860, with a small appropriation, it was organized in the simplest form, purely for Army purposes, by a surgeon of the Army, Dr. Myer, who originated it.

It was, if I may so speak, a legal bastard, as it was really without legislative parentage until subsequently adopted. As the war demonstrated its utility other small appropriations were made. In 1866 it was enlarged, and I think by Army regulation was ingrafted as a part thereof. Not till 1870 was the Weather Bureau established as a part of it. In 1873 a larger appropriation was made, by which its numerical strength was greatly increased, and it became an acknowledged success—of wonderful advantage to both the commercial and agricultural interests of the country.

We are asked by more than one Senator what is to be done by way of reformation? I will read a short sentence from the chief of this corps, General Greely, which was addressed to the Secretary of War. It makes some suggestions at least of what changes should be made. He says:

> To cut off fifty of the men now authorized by law; to simplify the methods of payment; to insist that skill, capability, and fitness shall be the tests for positions in the Signal Corps, and that useless expenditure of public money which now obtains in the present organization shall no longer continue.

Let us consider for a moment what is the present organization for the Signal Corps. Is it civil or is it military? It is essentially military. This is denied by Senators, who claim it to be more of a civil than military organization; but when you look for a moment at its history, its components, and existing relations you can not doubt.

Now, it is proposed to take it up, root and branch, and throw it into the midst of the Agricultural Department, a civil department. It is a military organization. Why do I say it? Who is its chief? A brigadier-general who belongs to the Army of the United States. Who are its officers? There are fourteen second lieutenants, recognized upon your Army rolls as officers belonging to that peculiar duty.

Is that all? No, sir; there are four here. And I was surprised to hear the Senator from Kansas make rather a fling at those gentlemen who have been here in Washington attending to this duty by saying they had easy berths and desire this service, referring of course to Lieutenant Dunwoody, who wrote the letter read yesterday morning, and Lieutenants Craig and Thompson, and Captain Jones, the two former having made almost life-service of this specialty, and the two latter have been so engaged for a few years.

Before I was here in the capacity of representative I had occasion to know somewhat of the operations of this institution. I had occasion to know from the place I held in my own State, having frequent correspondence with those here connected with the Weather Bureau, and it was exceedingly gratifying to me to know that it was gradually increasing toward a practical perfection, if I may so speak. Those who are at the head of it, strange to say, by the fifth section of the bill, I say to the Senator from South Carolina, are the very men who have been excluded now from the benefits of this, if benefits there are.

For sixteen years, if I understand his history, Lieutenant Dunwoody has given his time to this service. He has been twenty-one years a lieutenant in the Army. He was detailed to this service without his request, and he is now here acting as one of the chief signal officers, and kept here for his superior capacity and efficiency in this line, and is perhaps the best weather indicator in this country, and, besides, is known to be a worthy and accomplished gentleman. Who are his associates here, or who have been for the past sixteen years? Lieutenant Craig is also here, and worthy, as are others, of the highest commendation.

It is perfectly well known to the country that those two have conducted these indications and this foretelling of the weather for this long period. They are the men who seem to be practically acquainted with it. They are scientific men. They have associates, too, who have been assigned to duty more recently—Captain Jones and Lieutenant Thompson, successful and deserving officers. Yet every one of these four has been left out in this fifth section. All the lieutenants, competent, no doubt, have, however, come in.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee if the officers to whom he refers are officers of the regular Army, with their commissions?

Mr. BATE. They are; yet they have been under this detail, and it is a life-time service. They, of course, could return to the Army; so, I suppose, could the lieutenants who are there and who are kept in by the fifth section, and so, I suppose, could General Greely return to the Army; but if I understand the object of this service it is to get the best and most perfect work from the best sources that you can, and who are they?

Will you take up a raw recruit and put him there and bring down anew the criticisms of the Senator from Kansas, with all his ability and his vigilance, and hold up as a subject of ridicule certain bulletins that may come forth? If you trace those bulletins thus criticised you will find perhaps it was at a time when neither of these gentlemen was off duty, for it is a conceded fact and has gone into current history that 80 per cent. of the predictions have turned out to be correct.

It is true that they can not make predictions with perfect accuracy. They may not tell the exact momentum of the storm; they may not tell its exact movements, but they can sound the note of warning, which they have faithfully done, and been the means of saving many a human life and millions of property. They understand the currents of air, the disturbances of the atmosphere, which can be obtained only by practice and strict observation and by an analysis of the mass of information which they are able to gather from every point of the compass within their circuit.

Mr. BUTLER. Will it disturb the Senator if I interrupt him?

Mr. BATE. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I was going to inquire whether the Senator from Tennessee was in favor of the transfer of the weather service to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. BATE. I will tell you in a moment with a great deal of pleasure, and I thank the Senator for the suggestion. I am in favor of this bill for the establishment of the Agricultural Department as an executive department, and I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that one of the reasons why I oppose the fifth section is because I believe it will jeopardize the success of the bill proper and the establishment of the Agricultural Department of the Government. I believe section 5 handicaps it and that if that section is retained the bill will not become a law.

Mr. HARRIS. If my colleague will allow me, I will suggest to him that the other House incorporated the fifth section in the bill and so passed it. They sent it here. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry recommends as an amendment to strike it out. We may jeopardize the bill if we strike it out. We pass the bill and it becomes a law if we refuse to agree to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BATE. But my colleague forgets that there are Senators upon this floor who have the say-so first, before the bill goes back to the other House, and here is where I believe it is going to fail with the amendment rejected and the fifth section retained in the bill.

In further response to the interrogatory put to me by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] I will state that I desire not only to see this service established, and I do not know but that the Agricultural Department is the proper place for the service. I rather believe that the Agricultural Department when established will be the place for it, but my point is that this is not the time for it. When we are seeking to establish that Department it is not the time to push this military organization right into its bosom as it goes along.

It is taking, if you please, those who belong properly to the barracks and putting them in the cornfield. I object to it. I want it to go there properly organized, and I believe that when it is so organized and the proper time comes that is the place for it, because the agricultural interest connected with the weather bureau service is perhaps more vast than that of any other interest in this country, although commerce is a vast one.

How, then, will that be done? is the pertinent question which has been put here by more than one Senator, but especially by the Senator from South Carolina. How will that organization take place? I have read what was said by General Greely, the chief of this service, which is only partially in explanation of it; but it must be remembered that there are $100,000 worth of property which belongs to the Signal Service Corps. What are you going to do with it?

Is there any satisfactory provision made for it in this bill? I know it was said awhile ago that part of it belongs to the Army. It all belongs to the Army. You would only want that part of it which is connected with the Weather Bureau. What becomes of the balance? In that connection will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to say that the military part of this service can not be conducted with less than fifty men, as is stated by its chief. Where are you going to get the fifty men from? Does section 5 provide for them?

Mr. BUTLER. There is no trouble about that. As I understand it, the Secretary of War can detail fifty men to attend to the duty perfectly well.

Mr. BATE. Not at all. Not only that, but look at the danger of having raw recruits in a matter like this. I think not less than the fifty sergeants would be necessary for the proper conduct of this service upon the plains, from whom daily telegrams now come as a part of the matter from which forecasts of weather are made.

What do we find in addition to what has been stated here? There are 2,300 miles of telegraph line under the direction and reporting daily to the chief of the service. Those telegraph lines have their operators there; they belong to this peculiar service; they have wires, batteries, and all necessary equipment, wagons and drivers, and stock, with all other material that is necessary to run that institution among the plains and the mountains where storms generate.

This amount of property is also made up of such things as torches, signal flags, and the heliograph, that wonderful instrument that is being so rapidly developed. That is one reason perhaps why it ought to be kept in the Army, or at least ought to be put under scientific hands, where they can with a "sun-flash" communicate for 160 miles with the means of a lens, and even at night by calcium light, or electric light, they can communicate 40 miles. How remarkable.

All this property belongs to this service, and what are you going to do with it? Is there anything in the fifth section of this bill which provides for it properly or for the men who operate it? I say not.

Not only is General Greely a part of this organization, but I believe that a man like him, who has gone amidst the hazards of the Arctic circle for scientific purposes, and that he might serve the interest of his race; a man with his force of character, who has capacity for organization, and who has shown such efficiency with the material he has, can reorganize this service better, perhaps, than any other man, especially when we consider his familiarity with it.

He knows what is necessary in order to perfect it. He knows where the rub is. He knows who are the efficient and who the inefficient officers under him. His proposition to the committee was that he could run the service efficiently with six lieutenants, a field officer, besides himself, and with fifty men less than now in its service. Not only these fifty sergeants, but the three hundred and fifty men are enlisted and sworn into the service.

What becomes of them as soldiers if you transfer them to a civil department? Is it not a violation of the contract? Have they not some vested rights that should be respected? Can they be turned loose at will, if you transfer them to a civil department when they belong to the military? Have they not then a right to leave at will? Dare they desert, however, if they belong to the military?

I see, therefore, another serious embarrassment that might grow up in this relation. This service can be better organized with its existing relations than it can be under those which will be created by its transfer to the Agricultural Department. This is a service that is too valuable to the country not to be treated with the proper care and attention. Let us reorganize it where it can best be done, and after it is thus reorganized, if it is thought proper, then let us transfer it to the Agricultural Department. That is the idea I have; and we can meanwhile save the $112,000 a year and have a more perfect organization.

I insist that those who have charge of it have a better opportunity to know what is necessary, and hence can reorganize it better and more efficiently than can be done by others.

This service is looked to with the greatest interest. It is a growing institution, and we should foster and encourage it in that manner which will best produce the ends and objects for which it was created. If it needs reorganization, that reorganization should be perfected in the manner that will accomplish the most good.

The proposed transfer is crude and incongruous. Here are the military and the civil mingled; here is property you can not tell to whom it belongs, and here are three hundred and fifty men, besides the fifty sergeants, and you can not tell, should they be transferred under this fifth section, whether they belong to the civil department or to the military. I hope this is a matter which my military friend from South Carolina will take into consideration.

Mr. BUTLER. Just there may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Can these three hundred and fifty enlisted men, as the Senator designates them, and the fifty sergeants, be ordered to any military duty now in the Army?

Mr. BATE. They can be ordered to do anything within the line of the Signal Service, as I understand.

Mr. BUTLER. But may they be ordered to go on a scout or to perform any purely military duty?

Mr. BATE. I will say to the Senator that, as I understand it, they have been enlisted, and they are sworn in as regularly enlisted men of the Army of the United States, assigned to this duty; and whenever you transfer them to a civil department you have violated the contract of enlistment, and the men have a right to leave. If such soldier belongs to a military department it would be called desertion, but if to a civil department he will have a right to leave with impunity, and you would have to supply his place with a raw recruit with whom to conduct this scientific duty.

Mr. BUTLER. But I do not understand that the fifth section of the bill proposes to absolve him from the obligation of his contract. He still remains an enlisted man and gets the same pay.

Mr. BATE. Exactly so, but there may be many of them who want to get out of the service, and they are now bound for five years by virtue of the terms of their enlistment; and to transfer them to a civil department would be embarrassing.

Mr. BUTLER. I should think the Government would be very glad to get rid of them if that is the case.

Mr. BATE. I do not know. It ought not to be glad to get rid of those who render the most efficient service and who are almost the only men who can do the work. I think in the reorganization of this service there ought to be some mode of enlistment and some term of service observed like that, for instance, in the Senate. They should not go there for life, but one-third might come in after two, three, four, or five years, and others for a less or a longer period, so as to have at all times some persons in the service who are familiar with its peculiar and scientific duties. I think that would be an improvement.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Tennessee, with his permission.

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I have listened to this debate with a good deal of interest, and I have heard a good deal said about the reorganization of this service, but I wish some one to tell me what is the matter with the organization as it exists, whether the plan of the organization is not a good one, whether there is anything else needed than improvement under the present organization to make it more efficient?

Mr. BATE. In response to the Senator from Connecticut, I will state that I think the service is quite efficient now, but I think it can be bettered. I think it is a growing institution. Those who have had charge of it, like General Greely, know exactly how and when to bring about a reorganization. I have given some reasons and read from his letter to the Secretary of War in regard to that. It would be economical; there would be fewer men engaged in it. He says the service would be equally as efficient as it is now, and he could save $112,000 per annum.

Mr. BUTLER. May I make another inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask him if, in point of fact, the men who are now in the Signal Service Bureau, who the Senator informs us are enlisted for five years, would not have the right at the expiration of the five years to abandon the service entirely, and therefore we should lose the experience and qualifications which they have acquired by the five years of enlistment from the Signal Service Bureau, and defeat the very end which he says he desires to attain?

Mr. BATE. That is why I suggested that perhaps a reorganization was necessary and why additional legislation should be had so as to regulate the time and period of enlistment, and keep certain men there under an obligation to remain.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that in the civil departments of the Government, when the services of a scientific man are secured, he is there for life or during good behavior, and the efficiency of the service is not jeopardized by the termination of a term of enlistment.

Mr. BATE. Who will feed these men when they come to the Agricultural Department under the provisions of this bill? Who will clothe these men that you place under the provisions of this bill? Who will give them that medical attention under its provisions to which a soldier in the Army of the United States is entitled? It shows that the bill itself needs remodeling if the amendment of the committee should not be sustained and the fifth section is to become a law.

Therefore I say the proposed transfer is crude and incongruous when you take into consideration the antagonism of the military and civil elements. That is the idea I have in regard to it. I believe that the Weather Bureau is of the greatest benefit to both commerce and agriculture. As I said, it is a growing institution, and we must make it practical, extend its area, multiply its stations, and give strength and vigor to the organization, until it may permeate the whole country and give notes of warning at every point where commerce is likely to touch upon the seacoast of our country. We need it there.

Have I not witnessed at this session appropriation after appropriation, by the million of dollars, for the purpose of establishing light-houses upon the coasts, and that coast the Senator from South Carolina represents so faithfully? Though those light-houses may be the eyes of the ocean, yet they are near-sighted, and near-sighted to see the coming storm.

Sir, we need an institution like this Weather Bureau to give the note of warning. It overtops the light-house. It tells whence the storm comes and where the danger is. I say it should be fostered and cared for, and this can best be done by reorganizing it with its existing relations before it is placed in relations that it knows not of and which are unfamiliar to it. That is the idea I have about it.

Look at the influence of this service. You can not get the sailor to go to sea if he looks at the signal flag and it indicates a storm. The farmer is governed by it to a great extent, for he is told of the coming of the approaching frost. It is true you can not by this means regulate the temperature of the atmosphere and prevent the frost, but you can give the note of warning, tell that it is coming and prepare against it, and build a barrier for your defense.

The sailor can keep from going upon the vessel, whether upon the Lakes or upon the Gulf or upon the rock-bound dangers of the Atlantic. That is a part of the utility of this service.

I want to see the day come when this service will permeate the whole country, when every railroad will carry its signal-flag along, when every post-office will have it up, in order to benefit the common people of the country, especially the agriculturist, and likewise upon the coast to benefit the commerce of the country. I want to see that done, and to do that we should reorganize the service and put it in proper shape before it is transferred to the Agricultural Department or anywhere else.

Mr. President, I have made these suggestions, belonging to the Committee on Agriculture as I do, because I want to justify its action. It reports almost unanimously, I believe with one exception, in favor of striking out the fifth section. I ask the Senate to sustain the action of that committee for the reasons I have urged. This is a matter of organization. I say do not take it up root and branch and throw it into the heart of a civil department of the Government, crude, incongruous, and not thoroughly organized.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I rose at the same time with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], and I am happy to say that he has said better than I could have said many of the things that were in my mind. We are asked to point out the crudities of this provision. I read a line or two:

That the weather service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture.

I do not see what good there is in ordering a transfer of the weather service unless you transfer the men who have been in the habit of doing the weather service and giving it to us. They must go there.

Mr. BUTLER. That is provided for lower down in the section.

Mr. HAWLEY. The weather service thus transferred—shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary to efficiently manage said bureau. Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau * * * shall continue as at present.

It seems to be taken for granted that the men are to go over to the Agricultural Department as well as the service. Then these military persons, officers and privates, will be under the command of the Department of Agriculture, though still remaining a part of the Army, for it says that the present organization "shall continue as at present" and "nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps."

What is to be done with the work that these men have been performing, not only in the service of the Weather Bureau but in the service of the Army? There is a double function which they have been performing. You are going to split them in two. You are going to leave them undisturbed in the Army to perform their Army duties, and yet you are going to transfer them to the Department of Agriculture, there to be subject to the control of that department.

They are to be paid rates that they are now receiving under Army regulations, but this section says that the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture shall direct their payment. Is he to take the payments out of the hands of the paymasters of the Army and pay them upon rates of his own as civilian employés? Then he is certainly changing their status very considerably.

Again, they are in the service for five years. They can be tried for desertion, for disobedience of orders. They can be sent to the penitentiary for a term of years for desertion. Is that to continue? Is the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture to order a court-martial to sit upon the desertion of a soldier put on duty at the top of Pike's Peak? It is a very singular piece of business.

Mr. PLATT. How is the Secretary going to prevent desertion?

Mr. HAWLEY. My colleague inquires, how is he going to prevent it? The Secretary of the Department of Agriculture will have no more control over those men than he has over his own clerks. As the Senator from Tennessee has very well explained, if a clerk of a Department says he will not serve the Government any longer, out he goes. He refrains from coming in the morning, and that is the end of all the Government has to do with him, and it settles his account. If in the Signal Service in a dangerous and disagreeable place a man on duty runs away or deserts, he is liable to punishment precisely as a soldier in the Army is. But he has to remain with all his present rights. Among his rights is one that is of very considerable importance, is very highly valued by the private soldiers of the Army, by a large number of them, at any rate—those who have served many years. They have the privilege at the end of thirty years of retiring upon a pension. Some of them have been in the service ten, fifteen, or eighteen years now. Are you going to forfeit that accrued interest, if I may so speak, that accruing right to be retired upon a pension? This matter is not so simple as you suppose it is when you simply order the Weather Service to be sent over to the Department of Agriculture and leave the men with all their rights in the Army, the Secretary of Agriculture to order a court-martial, the Paymaster-General of the Army to pay these men, and the Secretary of War to commission them, and the subordinates of the Secretary of War to swear them into the military service.

It takes more than the dash of a pen to break up these men. They have been performing a double class of duty, partly civilian and partly military. If you try to execute this law, I do not see what is to prevent taking these men wholly away from whatever military duty they have been performing, deserting 2,300 miles of telegraph, and turning that over to somebody else—employing civilians for it or detailing privates of the Army for it and incurring a very considerable expense.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], I think it was, said that the board provided for here would adjust the details of this transfer and reorganize the service. It can not organize the new civilian corps. That is not provided for, as he thinks. He is mistaken. If he will look at this paragraph, he will see that this board of three is to make an inventory of all property now in the control and possession of the Signal Service Bureau, and separate and turn over to the Department of Agriculture such portions of it as may be suitable for the work of the Weather Service. It is merely a property board to give prices and catalogues of the present property, and divide it between the War Department and the Department of Agriculture. It is easy to do that, because that is a matter of figures—of counting; but it is by no means easy to divide functions of men, to retain them in one place and retain them in another—continue them in the Department of Agriculture and continue them a thousand miles away in the War Department at the same time.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the only serious aspect of this question, for it is not very important it seems to me who shall conduct this Signal Service Weather Bureau, providing it be efficiently done, and it scarcely is worthy of argument to say that no ability can be found to do it outside of the military circles of the country. That can hardly be a proposition to discuss, that a military man as such, quoad hoc, as the lawyers say, as to this matter, has anything whatever to do with it.

It is not military. He can not know anything of it by virtue of his military education. If he has any knowledge of it it is because it is outside of his avocation, and he has followed some pursuit that qualified him for a civil pursuit. He may be the greatest engineer or the greatest general or the best disciplinarian in the world, and yet that gives him no knowledge of meteorology, it gives him no capacity to deduce the conclusions which result from a mass of observations relating to the weather. Certainly that is apparent, and if General Greely is so distinguished from his short experience in this service, as I think he is, it is by virtue of his adventures in the North, in the polar regions; it is because of a capacity that is not military, but civil and scholastic and scientific.

Now, Mr. President, the serious portion of this question is the disposition on the part of the Senate of the United States to enlarge the emoluments or civil appointments which are perquisites of the Army; to make high civil place a mere perquisite of the military position; to forget that this is a government in which the civil are superior to the military and the military subordinate; that there is danger in enlarging the number of people who are subject to military law and not to civil law.

It is the disposition to subordinate the civil departments to the military. I respect the officers of the Army and Navy and their attainments and qualifications, and I am willing to be just and even generous with them; but I am not willing to make this a military government, to exclude the people of the country from civil appointments in order that they may be held by military men. I am not willing to enlarge the number of civil appointments to which military men alone are eligible.

To me it seems a mockery to talk about generals and lieutenants and enlisted men charged with the sole duty of making observations about the weather and making clerical calculations and as telegraph operators, and speaking of their special fitness and efficiency for this simple duty because of their military capacity. If it be true of this class of clerks and telegraph operators it is equally true of all the others, and we had better enlist them all in the Army, both men and women, and assign a general and lieutenant to their command; but it is not true; on the contrary, it is untrue and unreasonable in any respect, and it is a subject of surprise that the retention of this purely civil non-military and peaceful service in the War Department should be so strenuously insisted upon.

We have already too much of this exclusion of the great body of the people from offices and pursuits which are purely civil. We have $20,000,000—more than ten millions annually of money expended by engineer officers of the Army in the improvement of rivers and harbors, a very important work, and while I respect the qualifications of these officers, it is not saying too much to say that they are in no way superior to the engineers who are not in the Army.

Why shall a clerk who has no other employment than that of a clerk, who engages in nothing that imperils his life, be allowed a pension after thirty years' service for performing clerical work in the Weather Bureau and all other Government clerks be denied it?

Mr. President, this whole thing is entirely unreasonable. The proposition that the military are better qualified for this has nothing in it, because a military man can not by virtue of his military avocation have any knowledge of meteorology or of weather indications; he can have no knowledge which relates to the efficiency of this bureau. On the contrary, his military capacity is an obstacle to his scientific knowledge and value to this service.

What has the fact that this service has grown up under certain exigencies in the military department to do with its efficiency, either present or future? Here is the express company, extending all over this country and the world, conducting its business with the greatest efficiency; here are the great corporations, telegraphic and railroad, civil bodies entirely, and yet conducting their business with the greatest efficiency and success.

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, that this service can not properly be an attachment of the military department of the Government and that I favor, and decidedly favor, the placing of these men entirely under civil rule. I do not wish to see any American citizen subjected to martial law unless there be public necessity for it. I am not willing that the clerks in this department shall be tried by court-martial and deprived of their rights of citizenship. I am not willing under any pretended necessity of the public service, which is entirely unreal, to enlarge the number of men who are subject to a despotic government. It is all a mere delusion in regard to this service being promoted by or in any wise benefited by being connected with the military organization under which by chance it has grown to its present importance.

The value of this service I think has been very much exaggerated, still it is an important one. It is very important to the farmers, the garden farmers, the truck farmers, the fruit growers, to those persons who require knowledge of cold and of wind that they may gather their fruit, that they may avoid planting their vegetables, that they may take advantage of the seasons in the short space of time that is allowed to them between the receipt of information of coming changes in the weather and their arrival, and in my own section of the country, I wish to say in reply to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], where the farmers can get this information, they form clubs and they are everywhere now petitioning Congress to establish stations, telegraph stations, signal stations, at which the intelligence may be communicated, and to which they resort daily or whenever they are in sufficient nearness to it to send daily for information as to the predictions of the weather. It is for that reason that I desire that this service, which is valuable alone to the commercial and agricultural interests, especially to the garden-farming and the truck interests, shall be conducted under the civil department of the Government.

So far as commerce is concerned, if you see fit to do so, put it in the Treasury Department, which is the Department specially assigned to commerce; but whether this service is conducted under the Treasury Department or under the Agricultural Department or the War Department, the intelligence that is obtained will inure equally well to either of these two occupations. The state of the weather, if it be important for the farmer to know it, will be communicated to him, and whether it comes through the War Department, through the Treasury Department, or the Agricultural Department, it will be equally available; and so in regard to commerce.

Therefore there is no reason, no even plausible reason, for the continuance of this bureau in the military department of the Government. It can just as well be transferred to-day, whether they are enlisted or unenlisted men; and as to that, I presume there is not an enlisted man in this service who would not to-day gladly exchange it for a civil employment, retaining his pay and his position and employment which he has, and I think the Senator from Tennessee may spare himself any uneasiness as to the permanency of the service. They will stay just as long as they can. There need be no restrictions as to their giving it up. The number of those who leave the Government service when once employed in it are comparatively few. Very few die and none resign, as General Jackson said years ago.

So, Mr. President, these are mere unreal delusions. This is an important service and it is a strictly civil service, and it can not in any wise whatsoever be connected with any military employment or any military knowledge, or any interest of the Army or for the Army, even the most remote.

As to its efficiency, to say that an organization of this sort can not be efficiently conducted by the civil department of the Government is to say that neither the Treasury nor the Interior Department, nor the Presidency, nor the Senate, nor the Post-Office nor any other Department can be efficiently conducted unless it is by a man who has been taught to maneuver troops and taught the qualities of gunpowder and steel and the methods of warfare, all of which have nothing whatever to do with these pursuits and these qualifications. You may transfer to-day every man under this bill to the Agricultural Department, and there will not be the slightest inconvenience or the least difficulty, and if it be desirable, if the Senate think they ought to grant a pension to every person who sits at a telegraph wire and gives information as to the state of the weather or to every clerk who makes calculations in the office here after thirty years' service, you can attach it just as well to this service in the Agricultural Department as you can to the Army. All this is so manifest that it is a matter of surprise that it should even be a subject of debate in the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I wish to offer one or two observations before the vote is taken upon the amendment of the committee.

This Signal Service, growing up under the auspices of the War Department and originating in the necessities of the war, gradually developing and spreading out into a career of usefulness in the arts and employments of peace, has nevertheless retained within its scope of operations all of its original elements. Being originally designed to facilitate the purposes of war and to give the necessary training to a body of men which under the conditions of modern warfare is indispensable to its successful prosecution, it has come to embody in the same organization superadded labors and efficiencies, but all are still performed by the same body of men, and the necessities which led to the original creation or organization of this body still remain. They may slumber to some extent in time of peace, but it is only in peace that we properly can prepare for war; and the education, the training, the efficiency of a signal corps in actual warfare must emphatically be acquired by prior training in time of peace, unless the war is prolonged for such a period as to give within its own duration the necessary training, and in that case in the earlier stages of war the nation which is without the efficiency is placed at a great disadvantage.

So now it has come to pass, Mr. President, that the Signal Service Corps as it actually exists performs all the functions appertaining to a military organization so far as it is necessary that they should be performed, and we have an army, as you know, of 25,000 men constantly employed, always in readiness for war, and also the same body of men performing functions which are of great service in commerce and in agriculture superadded to its other duties, and it is the same men who are doing all this work.

But when you come to make a provision of law by which, as in the attempted transfer by this bill, you carry from one Department—that is, from the War Department—to another Department and place under the control of another Department, under the order and command of another Department, simply one function which is jointly performed by all these men as one organization, you undertake what seems to me to be an utter impossibility.

The fifth section of this bill proposes to transfer the weather service of the Signal Service Bureau of the country to the control and place it under the command of the proposed Department of Agriculture. If we undertake to analyze this thing we shall find it to be, I think, an utter impossibility. We can not do it. The same men do these three functions. Here is a given signal station. The observations made at that station, the identical individual observations made on any particular day at that particular station, are made use of for commercial purposes, for agricultural purposes, and for the purposes of war. How are you going to transfer the third part, if you choose to divide it mathematically, of the function performed at that particular station, and place it under the command of the Agricultural Department and leave the other two-thirds of the control there, of the commandership there, under the orders of the War Department? And you must do it if you undertake to carry out the provisions of this proposed bill.

What confusion there will be of control! How would it be in war supposing the same army should be placed under the control of two different commanders, two generals, one wanting this thing done and the other wanting that thing done, disagreeing as to the plan of action? But this, if possible, would be still more impossible than that. Here is a united function which is to be divided by three, and one of the three given mathematically over to the Agricultural Department and the other two to remain, as now, under control of the Department of War.

I admit if you could separate this function geographically that there might be a possibility of carrying out the provisions of the section; but at every single station all over the United States the thing done is precisely the same thing, and then its uses are applied in their different directions.

It seems to me, from the very nature of things, we have got to keep this Signal Corps under one control, as it is now, in the War Department. We do not undertake to transfer anything but the Weather Service, it is said, but in transferring the Weather Service or the service to be rendered with reference to a knowledge of the weather and observations of a climatic character, but one-third of the service to one Department, we necessarily transfer the individuals who render not only that service but the other two-thirds of the aggregate which is rendered and for which the public pay. But, on the other hand, in undertaking to do that we leave the law in force so far as the control of the War Department is concerned, as to the uses of the same identical act which are appropriate to commerce and to war.

Mr. PLUMB. Will it disturb the Senator if I call his attention to a fact?

Mr. BLAIR. Not the slightest. I know more than I did two years ago. The difference between the Senator and me is that he does not. During the last two years I have learned something, and the Senator from Kansas has failed in that regard.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator is learning in that direction, of course he will be opposed to this transfer always.

Mr. BLAIR. No; I may learn more next year, and by two years from this I may, if I have much to do about this—my attention has never been particularly called to it before, although I was on the committee—I assure the Senator that if this matter passes over and I have occasion to discuss it two years from now, if I am here, I shall know more about it than either of us at the present time.

Mr. PLUMB. I have never heard turning one's coat called a process of education before.

Mr. BLAIR. I will ask the Senator right there to withdraw the expression about turning one's coat.

Mr. PLUMB. No, I will not withdraw it.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well, sir, then consider that our acquaintance is at an end. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the Senator's attention in relation to the great hardship he is speaking about, that, like the Senator from Mississippi, he has gone off to this military view all at once and in place of being a bucolic advocate, he is an advocate of Mars, and he is afraid we shall not have a Signal Service Corps when we get into war. I will call his attention to the fact that one officer and three enlisted men——

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senator that unless he is willing to withdraw the expression in regard to my coat, I shall not feel justified in further extending my courtesy to him in using my time. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLUMB. I did not want to reflect on the Senator's coat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call his attention to the fact that under the orders of the Secretary of War and the regulations of the War Department——

Mr. BLAIR. I shall make one condition, and that is that the Senator shall give us information if he is to occupy my time.

Mr. PLUMB. All there is, according to the Senator's own statement of the case, would be the loss to the military service of one officer and three enlisted men, and I do not think so ill of our military establishment, badly as I regard it, that it would collapse if they should happen to be removed.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's remarks and deductions and assumed facts are of such a character that I do not think they ought to be introduced. I do not think he has said anything to justify the waste of five minutes of my precious time. However, I have not intended to be understood as saying——

Mr. CALL. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BLAIR. In a moment. I have not understood myself as saying that this act was proposing to injure the efficiency of the Signal Service of the Army. I have not understood myself as saying that I was not in favor of extending all the benefits of weather observations, and greatly increased in scope and thoroughness and efficiency and minutiæ in every regard, to the Agricultural Department. I only desired to say, and did say yesterday, and I say it now, that this thing shall be done with such due conservatism and discretion as not to encumber the statute-book with a very discreditable bill.

I will now yield to the Senator from Florida for a question.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from New Hampshire said there were three uses of this Signal Service, one military and the other civil.

Mr. BLAIR. That makes but two. If the Senator will quote me accurately he will get the other.

Mr. CALL. Commerce and agriculture.

Mr. BLAIR. I said military, commercial, and agricultural.

Mr. CALL. Very good. We will consider it that way. I should be very glad for the Senator to tell us what military function this weather bureau has, or the Signal Service Bureau? I ask what military function it has?

Mr. BLAIR. There are almost 25,000 miles of military telegraph in this country which are still made use of.

Mr. CALL rose.

Mr. BLAIR. Let me finish one sentence before the Senator interrupts me with additional questions.

There are nearly 25,000 miles of military telegraph actually in use on our frontier and throughout the whole Western territory, utilized by the War Department in its care over our Indian wards, and at military stations along the shores of oceans and the boundaries between ourselves and other countries that have got to be maintained as part of the military establishment. But it is still true of them that it is essential that the observations taken at these stations shall be utilized for the purposes of study in climatology and for the necessary forecasting of the approach of storms, even though those may be uncultivated regions, which when they reach cultivated portions of our country may have a destructive effect, and also in order that the approach of these storms may give the agriculturist due warning in proper season as to the planting of seed and the performance of the other functions of his great employment.

So every one of these stations now used at military posts—for it is quasi war—is still of as much service to the rest of the country in regard to the approach of storms and the acquisition of that knowledge which would be of benefit in the cultivated regions as in the uncultivated regions to the future agriculturist when he comes to cultivate them—whether they may be made useful by irrigation or by other means—those, I say strictly military posts of observation are just as necessary as the other posts and signal stations in other parts of the country where there is no actual work for the Army to perform. Then when you come to the settled and civilized portions of our country, if you please, where observations are necessary for the protection of commerce, especially all along the coasts, the coasts of the Great Lakes, the Atlantic and Pacific coasts—there these same observations made in remote portions of the country as yet uninhabited, if you please, are just exactly as essential, because it is only by virtue of their collection here at a central point that we are able to give to the man who is to sail from New York City with a great cargo of wheat for Liverpool—it is only by reason of these distant observations that we are able to inform him of the approach of storms, and just so this observation which is taken on the Atlantic coast, which you might say is more particularly for commerce, or taken at a commercial depot or station, a life-saving station, or whatever you please, or in one of the great cities, specifically you might assert that they were of special benefit to the commercial interest, yet they are just as essential to agriculture and to the War Department if this sort of knowledge is necessary by reason of actual war on the frontier. Storms come from all directions.

Thus it is that I think I was justified in saying that here are three functions combined in one and just as indissoluble in their union as the three persons in the Trinity; but unless you yield to the disadvantages of a divided commandership, a divided generalship, I do not see how you are going to place one function of the weather service of this bureau under the command of the Department of Agriculture absolutely, and yet, so far as the other two functions are concerned, having exactly the same personnel, leave it under the command of another Department.

Mr. CALL. The question I asked the Senator was what was the military service this bureau performed, and I understand him to say it is operating a line of telegraph.

Mr. BLAIR. And giving observations at signal stations, of course.

Mr. CALL. Giving intelligence to commerce. Now, I want to know if the Senator maintains that it is a military function to operate a line of telegraph?

Mr. BLAIR. Just exactly as much as it is a military operation or function to manufacture gunpowder. It does not follow that that is not a military business, because you may use gunpowder to explode a rock in time of peace. The telegraph is as much a part of the art of war as it is a part of the art of peace.

Mr. CALL. So is the farmer. You can not have an army unless they have something to eat, and they can not have anything to eat unless it is grown out of the ground.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not careful as to what may be proven provided it be true. Does the Senator controvert my statement that the telegraph is part of the art of war as well as of peace?

Mr. CALL. Unquestionably so, beyond a doubt.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well. Then what is there between us?

Mr. CALL. A telegraph line may be useful to the military service, but it is certainly not a military art or a military function.

Mr. BLAIR. Is a gun a military weapon.

Mr. CALL. Yes.

Mr. BLAIR. And yet it may be used to shoot a partridge. Is that a military operation?

Mr. CALL. That is no analogy and is not in the line of the proposition.

Mr. BLAIR. That is what I said to the Senator. There is the point between us. If the Senator consents to the truth of my proposition it is not necessary to argue it.

Mr. CALL. The proposition is that there is a military function attached to this bureau. I say there is not; and when called upon to specify what it is, the Senator says it is operating a line of telegraph.

Mr. BLAIR. The Signal Service Bureau, so far as I have been able to learn of its statutory organization, is to be found under the head of "Department of War," on page 36 of the Revised Statutes, and there it is provided:

SEC. 221. The Secretary of War shall provide for taking meteorological observations at the military stations in the interior of the continent, and at other points in the States and Territories, and for giving notice on the northern lakes and seacoast, by magnetic telegraph and marine signals, of the approach and force of storms.

SEC. 222. The Secretary of War shall provide, in the system of observations and reports in charge of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, for such stations, reports, and signals as may be found necessary for the benefit of agriculture and commercial interests.

SEC. 223. The Secretary of War is authorized to establish signal stations at light-houses and at such of the life-saving stations on the lake or seacoast as may be suitably located for that purpose, and to connect the same with such points as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the Signal Service by means of a suitable telegraph line in cases where no lines are in operation, to be constructed, maintained, and worked under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, or the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury; and the use of the life-saving stations as signal stations shall be subject to such regulations as may be agreed upon by said officials.

I think that is the substance of the statutory provision establishing this Signal Service. There is also a statutory provision, which I have at hand here, but will not trouble the Senate by delaying to read it, which gives the Department of Agriculture the right to call upon the War Department or the Chief Signal Officer for such information as may be serviceable to the interests of agriculture. I think that is the substance of all the statutory law upon the subject.

If any one will take the appropriation bills of any year and read them and note the items of appropriation which apply to the Signal Service, some twenty or more in number, it will be seen that nearly all of them appear naturally to be connected with the sort of service rendered in the War Department.

I have been kept on the floor longer than I expected. The point I rose specifically to make is this: That here is a service which is a unit. It is rendered by certain individuals who are now a part of the war-making power, or rather a part of the Army of the United States, enlisted, sworn, examined, qualified, and experienced in this particular department of service; and so far as we know they are the only efficient body which can be rapidly summoned and concentrated for this work.

They have these three separate functions to perform, and I do not see myself how it is possible to take the Signal Service any more than it is proposed to take from its existing organization and place it under the control of the Department of Agriculture. The other elements of the service must remain where they are; and this bill does not propose to do anything more; and if the thing is to be done, I can see no reason why it is not necessary, after mature and careful deliberation, to organize a signal service specifically and specially for the Agricultural Department.

It probably would need nearly as large a number of men as are now found in the corps which performs this joint service for these three great interests of our country. Probably that will be the result, but it may not be. It is possible that by careful and judicious statutory enactment this whole body of men and all that it performs for the Army, for commerce, and for agriculture can be placed under the control of the Department of Agriculture; but I submit, Mr. President, that that is a thing that can not now very well be done, and this bill only proposes to go so far as to have a divided control, which must result in inextricable confusion and in injury to the service as it is now rendered to all three of these great interests of our country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to strike out the fifth section of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, when the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] was addressing the Senate I put an inquiry to him which I think he did not fully answer, namely, what was the matter with the organization of the Signal Service, considering it as an organization solely? I have heard a great deal said about the necessity of the reorganization of the Signal Service, and no one yet, unless it be in some remarks which fell from the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], in relation to weather prediction in Missouri, has said or indicated anything which shows that there is any fault with the organization of the Signal Service.

Mr. PLUMB. I quoted, as all the authority I thought necessary on the subject, the letter of Captain Dunwoody, who signs himself "Acting Chief Signal Officer," in which he says it is badly arranged and in many respects inefficient; but I may say, if further testimony is needed, that General Greely said in his testimony before the Agricultural Committee that the bureau was in a very bad condition, something which I think he has since emphasized by a letter which he has published, in which he reflects very seriously upon some members of the organization.

Mr. PLATT. But that does not touch the plan of organization.

Mr. PLUMB. Captain Dunwoody says it is inefficient and badly arranged.

Mr. PLATT. When we talk about reorganization we talk about whether this is a good system or not, not whether the system is properly carried out, whether it is as efficient as it might be, whether the conclusions and results might not be improved by weeding out the inefficient men. But the question, as it seems to me, which touches this transfer is whether the organization as a whole, the plan, the system, is going to be any better in the hands of the Agricultural Department than it is under the control of the Army. For there has got to be an organization, a plan, a framework, through the agency of which these results are to be obtained. It is perfectly apparent that if the Signal Service goes to the Agricultural Department, which is to be created, one of two things must happen: the present military organization must be retained, simply putting at the head of it a chief signal officer who is a civilian, or there must be a reorganization purely through civil appointees—one or the other.

If the military organization is all right, then I see no occasion for transferring it from the Army to the Agricultural Department. If it is not all right and you propose to reorganize when you get the subject-matter into the hands of the Agricultural Department, then we have got to have a new organization with civilians. The organization will then consist of the Chief Signal Officer and all his subordinates, which means, I suppose, chiefs of bureaus, chief clerk, clerks of the first, second, third, and fourth classes. Either one thing or the other: The military organization is to be transferred to the Agricultural Department, or it is to be abandoned. If it is to be abandoned, then the reorganization means an organization such as we have in any of these Departments to carry on any particular bureau of the Government. I apprehend it is the latter that is meant, that it is meant to take away entirely from the military service of the country this business, that it is to take it away from the military officers, and from the enlisted privates, and is to reorganize the service with civilians. That is what this means, perhaps not in the immediate but in the near future; and the clause in the bill which says that the Chief Signal Officer shall go over, as it were, to the Agricultural Department and take charge until a civilian Chief Signal Officer can be appointed, shows what the intention is.

The intention is to take this service entirely out of the hands of the men who are now carrying it on. Otherwise there is no sense or reason in transferring this service to the Agricultural Department, and it was in view of what I thought was the manifest purpose of this bill that I asked what was the matter with the present organization? I did not ask what was the matter with the operations of the organization, whether they were as perfect as they might be, but with the plan of organization. I think that I know where this matter started, Mr. President.

There was a time when some people in the country conceived a very great dislike, not to say prejudice, to the Chief Signal Officer, and that dislike led to an effort to get the whole business out of the hands of General Hazen. Whether there was foundation for it or not I do not know. There was a special committee, as I remember, raised to investigate General Hazen and his conduct of this office. It was while that dislike was strong, while the prejudice, if it was prejudice, was exceedingly strong against the Chief Signal Officer that this idea of transferring the Signal Service to the Agricultural Department sprang up.

Now, I apprehend that is all gone; that the thing which really was the motive for this suggestion is all gone. I apprehend that nobody says that the head of this service now is not as good a man for the place as can be found, whether in military or in civil rank, for scientific attainment, for discipline, for executive ability. Nobody questions the capacity, the integrity, the skill, the learning, the scientific attainment, or the executive ability of General Greely; so that so far as the head of the organization is concerned it is admitted to be in good hands.

Well, let us look a little at what has been accomplished. This is a growth of nineteen years. Nineteen years ago we knew very little about these matters, which have now become part of the scientific knowledge of the country and of the world. We knew very little about the movement of storms—very little about the laws of climatic changes. Perhaps we know very little now about the causes of atmospheric and climatic phenomena; but we have learned a great deal, and learned more, I think, here in the United States than anywhere else in the entire world.

I think the result of the knowledge which has been attained through the deliberations and the studies and the experiments of this Signal Service is in advance of the knowledge of all the rest of the world at the present time. I think we may boast ourselves that we are a step further along the road to knowledge in this subtle realm than any other people. How has that been brought about? It has been brought about through this misrepresented—I will not say abused—organization. It has been brought about through this military service, and the men who have made these attainments are now in the service to a large extent. Possibly there has been occasionally a displacement of an officer and another officer put in his place, but largely the very men who have contributed to the wonderful advance in scientific knowledge in this direction are still in this service.

Is it according to the dictates of common sense to take away from them this matter to which some of them have now devoted half of a lifetime, and put it into the hands of men who have had no experience, whatever of theory they may have, on this subject? Largely whatever scientific knowledge there is upon this subject outside of the military service has been derived through the aid which these very men have given to students.

Now, shall we take away from the very men who have thus become accomplished this work and intrust it to the hands of those who have had no experience in it, who will rely purely upon theory resulting from a superficial study and of the knowledge which has been acquired as amateurs, for I take it that is what this means. It means that we are to have a new set of men to make these observations, to study these difficult scientific problems, and that they are to be civilians and not military men.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that if there were no question here except the bare question of whether, in the organization of a new department, we should transfer to it this scientific work which has heretofore been done by the military branch of the Government, that of itself ought to determine the matter. But, Mr. President, I think there is a wider question involved in the passage of this bill than the question whether we shall transfer to this new department a service which, with all its faults, has accomplished so much for agriculture, for commerce, for scientific knowledge. To the discussion of this wider question I beg the attention of the Senate for a few minutes.

This is a bill the intention of which, and the only intention of which, is to protect, and conserve, and develop a certain portion of the capital of the country.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut yielding the floor for that purpose, I rise to ask unanimous consent that after the routine morning business on the day after to-morrow, Thursday, the Senate proceed to the consideration of such pension cases on the Calendar as are unobjected to.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that, provided always the present order is disposed of, but I do not think it would conduce to the proper disposition of business to lay aside the pending bill until it is concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. Subject of course to the present order.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next at the conclusion of the routine morning business the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported, to which there is no objection, subject to the now pending unfinished business.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] gave notice that he desired to make some remarks on that day immediately after the morning business.

Mr. DAVIS. Then, of course, I will modify my motion. I was not aware of any notice of that kind, except the one given on behalf of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Nevada to object?

Mr. STEWART. I do not object. I merely make that suggestion.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask whether it was not agreed by unanimous consent yesterday, on the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], that pension bills should be proceeded with this afternoon after the consideration of the Agricultural Department bill? If so, as this bill is certainly not to be concluded this afternoon, I hope the Senate will take up pension bills and go on with them for an hour now, pending the consideration of this bill, and to-morrow if the Senator from Connecticut does not object he can conclude his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It all depends upon the Senator from Connecticut, who is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLATT. It is a matter entirely immaterial to me, except this: I had no thought of making any remarks on this bill until I got upon my feet, and I can go on now or I can wait until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield for the purpose of enabling the Chair to submit the request?

Mr. PLATT. I do.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I ask that the request be submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside for the purpose of considering private pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported to which there is no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not object if there is an understanding that the pending bill shall come up as the unfinished business at the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resumption of the consideration of the Agricultural Department bill to-morrow at the conclusion of the routine morning business?

Mr. HARRIS. I want to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that, in addition to the request that he has suggested, he fix an hour to-morrow at which we shall take the vote upon the pending amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I will, then, amend my request so that the consideration of the bill shall be resumed to-morrow at the conclusion of morning business, and that the Senate will vote upon the bill without further debate at 2 o'clock, or earlier if the debate is sooner concluded.

Mr. BERRY. I gave notice this morning on behalf of my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] that he desired to submit some remarks on the tariff question to-morrow immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, and I can not consent to any arrangement that would interfere with him, because he expects to address the Senate then.

Mr. PLUMB. I will then modify my request. If the Senator from Arkansas will take the floor at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow, then I will say that at the conclusion of his remarks the consideration of the pending bill shall be resumed and that the Senate will vote on it at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] gave notice that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] he would take the floor to submit remarks upon the same subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to agreeing upon a time for voting upon this bill. It seems to me that debate ought not to be limited upon it at once.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I shall object to anything interposing now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I want, in connection with this matter, to say, as it is impossible to come to any agreement by unanimous consent, that whenever I can get the floor to-morrow I shall move to lay the amendment of the committee on the table and endeavor to get a vote upon that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. On reflection I renew my request that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] on Thursday the pension bills may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that, at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Oregon to be submitted on Thursday next, the Senate will proceed with the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not object, provided——

Mr. HARRIS. I thought the Senator had asked that we proceed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was objected to.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not suppose there was any objection to that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was objected to.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas did not object, but wanted another agreement about another matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the consideration of pension bills at this time, unless there can be unanimous consent as to the disposition of the Agricultural Department bill to-morrow.

Mr. PLUMB. If there can be no arrangement that debate on this bill shall be concluded at some reasonable period, then I shall insist, so far as I can, that the debate go on until it is finally talked out.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it is entirely right that the Senator should make that request, but I do not consider it a fair offset to a request that pension bills shall be considered to insist that there must be an agreement that the debate on a bill of this importance should end and the vote be taken at a particular time. I have no more interest in the passage of pension bills than the Senator from Kansas, but I certainly think, as this debate is not to be concluded to-night, that we might let the consideration of pension bills go on for an hour at this time without insisting on bringing debate on the other bill to a close.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it will conduce to the final and early disposition of this bill to have it go on continuously until it is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PLATT. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next, at the conclusion of the observations to be submitted by the Senator from Oregon, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the private pension bills upon the Calendar favorably reported to which there is no objection. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 5092) for the relief of Charles L. Bradwell;

A bill (H. R. 8751) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lake Superior, Lakes Huron, Erie, and Michigan, and range-lights in Lake St. Clair and Detroit River;

A bill (H. R. 10931) to donate and transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, but subject to reversion to the United States in the event of their non-usage for quarantine purposes, and requiring the proper department of the United States Government to execute the necessary transfer to the State of Louisiana on the condition aforesaid;

A bill (H. R. 11336) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 223) declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888.

THE CHINESE TREATY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I herewith transmit, in reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 11th instant, a copy of a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying documents, relative to the pending treaty with China.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, September 18, 1888.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 124) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser;

A bill (S. 186) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, etc.;

A bill (S. 576) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co.;

A bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to Henry R. Blakiston:

A bill (S. 2713) granting a pension to Pierre Bottineau;

A bill (S. 2938) granting a pension to James McDonald;

A bill (S. 2951) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Morrison Elliott;

A bill (S. 3130) granting a pension to Patrick Welch; and

A bill (S. 3236) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn, late major Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of House bill 8191.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this is a bill the intention of which and the only intention of which is to promote, to conserve, to develop a portion of the capital of this country, namely, that portion engaged in agriculture or invested in agricultural business. There is nowhere in the bill a suggestion that any body except the farm-owner, the man who is carrying on the business of farming, is to be affected by the bill or is to be represented in the councils of the President by the new Cabinet officer who is to be appointed. It is to enable those who have invested their money in farms and agriculture, in cattle-raising, in growing wheat and corn and cotton to get more profitable returns upon their money so invested, to develop their business, to find out new methods by which their business may be made more lucrative. It does not contemplate that the great number of men who are employed by the year, the month, or the day upon the farms of the United States shall receive any benefits from the measure.

They are to have no voice, they are to have no representative, in the Cabinet. The great underlying interest of agriculture is not to be heard through this new Cabinet officer. The agriculturists who are at the top, not the agriculturists who are at the bottom, are to be peculiarly and particularly benefited by the passage of this bill. The man who works in the great wheat-fields of Dakota for the Dalrymples, the thousands of men who are there employed are not thought of.

The men who take from the cotton-planters of the South the little holdings upon leases of 25-acre farms, of one-horse farms as they are called, and take them on shares, are to receive no particular benefit from this bill. The wage-earner agriculturists are outside of the province and pale of this legislation. They are a very considerable portion of the agriculturists of this country. I find by the last census, which has been brought to me while I have been talking, that the number of farms in the United States is 4,008,907; the number of those employed in agriculture is 7,670,493; so that approximately the wage-earning agriculturists of this country are 3,662,486. Probably that is not exactly accurate, but sufficiently so to illustrate what I am saying.

This bill is not for their benefit. It is for the benefit of men who own farms, who have invested their capital in land, whether they own large farms or small farms; and, to a great extent, it is for the benefit of the men who own the large farms, and not the men who were once, in a former period of our history, called the "small-fisted farmers." I have no objection to doing this service to the capital invested in agriculture. Agriculture, to be sure, is the foundation of the wealth and prosperity of the Nation, but, down underneath the men who own the farms are the men who work upon them for wages. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] the other day called such of our citizens the substratum of our society, and intimated that they constituted an inferior and humble class. Let me refer to the remarks of that Senator for a moment.

The Senator from Alabama said, in making a speech on the Chinese question, I think:

> There are in the Senate Chamber, I dare say—I think I know there are—Senators who have come up from what are called the inferior or humbler class of society, whose fathers and mothers, with themselves, toiled in the field for the bread of life until perhaps fifteen or twenty years of age.

I should be the last man, Mr. President, to object to dignifying agriculture.

I am one of the men who commenced this life in what the Senator from Alabama is pleased to call the inferior or humbler class of society. I worked with my father in the field for the bread of life until I was more than fifteen years of age. Some of the time I worked for other farmers for wages, and I wish right here to enter a protest against that life being called inferior or humbler in any sense than life in any other occupation, profession, or calling.

Mr. President, agriculture is honorable, it is dignified, it is a noble employment. If I were to go back to my native town and attempt to tell its citizens that when I left the farm and its hard labor I went up into a higher station or a more honorable position I should be laughed at, and justly laughed at. There is no higher or more honorable or more dignified station than that of the man who cultivates the farm or the one who works for him who owns and cultivates the farm. I do not feel that my position as Senator is more worthy of respect and honor than was my position on the farm.

It is because this class of men, these agricultural wage-earners, are not thought of in this bill that I think the scope of it is entirely too narrow. It is too narrow in another sense—I will speak of the interests of labor further on; but if we are to legislate in a way to develop, to conserve, to protect, to amplify a portion of the capital of the country, why not all?

Why should we seek out the capital which is engaged in farming, in wheat-growing, raising cattle or corn or cotton, and give that capital a representative in the councils of the President—make a Cabinet officer in order that he may call to the President's attention the means by which the farmers can make money on their investments, and leave out the other capital of the country engaged in business? Why not pay some attention to the mining interests of this country and the capital invested in such interests?

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator is offended at the idea that the farmers should have this representative he can easily move to create a Cabinet minister for just as many other interests as he wishes. It is no argument against this bill that it does not embrace every other legislative subject in the universe.

Mr. PLATT. When this bill was before the Senate on a previous occasion I made some of these suggestions, and the bill went back to the Committee on Agriculture, as I supposed, for the widening and enlargement of it. Now it comes back in the same limited shape; so I am bound to believe that there is a studied purpose to keep out from its sweep and scope all the capital of the United States except the capital which happens to be invested in farming, and also to keep out from its scope all the interests and demands of labor whether engaged in agriculture or in other branches of industry.

It is no answer to say "pass this bill now and then enlarge its operations by and by." As I said, I am the last man who would by any means disparage agriculture. If it were possible for me to realize in my declining years the dream of my life, I would find that realization in being permitted to leave public life, professional life, and seek once more the pleasure, the independence, and quiet to be found only in agricultural pursuits.

So I say nothing against the farmer, nothing against helping him; but why this neglect of the other industries of the country? Why the neglect, as I was saying, of the mining industries of the country? The mineral production of the country for the fiscal year 1887 was greater than the mineral production of any country on the face of the globe.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes; but if it is a question of comparisons, will the Senator call attention to the fact that the eggs produced in this country were worth more than all the gold and silver of the country?

Mr. PLATT. I am not speaking about gold and silver alone. I am speaking of the entire mineral production of the country—the coal and the iron, the copper, and all the other minerals, their value exceeding that of the minerals of any other country in the world. Yet we must have a department for the agricultural capitalist, and not for the capitalist engaged in the development of the mineral resources of the country.

I have had no time to collate statistics. I did not expect to speak to-day. I can not say how much capital is engaged in the production of our minerals or how it compares with that invested in our farms, but it compares favorably in amount. Why, if we are seeking to benefit capital, should we neglect it?

Take another branch, the commerce of the United States, foreign and domestic, by land and by water. Think of the investment in it! Why, in the railroads of this country there is more money invested, squeezing all the water out, as I remember the statistics, than in the farms of the country. I may be mistaken about the exact amount, but at any rate the amount is vast, $7,500,000,000, as I remember the figures. Add to that all the shipping plying along our seacoast and on our rivers and such foreign shipping as we have. Why is this great commercial interest of the country and the capital invested in it—for this is a capitalistic bill alone—shut out from this new department and to have no voice in the Cabinet?

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator if he does not think the railroads of this country have pretty good care taken of them by law—if he thinks it necessary to have a department in the Cabinet to take better care of them than is taken of them now?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I am not to be diverted from the line of my argument into a discussion of the railroad problem. I have discussed that question here very often, and I think my views ought to be pretty well known. I am prepared to say, however, that it would be a good thing that in this new departure there should be a Cabinet officer with whom the President of the United States could confer in relation to restricting the powers of the railroads. For this should be a department where restriction may go along hand in hand with development, where the Executive may lay its restraining hand upon things that are wrong as well as its fostering hand upon the things which need to be helped.

Then there are manufactures, Mr. President. Why should not they have some voice in this matter? I know that it has become the fashion of late, even in the highest official circles, to rail at manufactures. I know that some people affect to believe a manufacturer to be a public enemy, but manufacture is a part of the business of this great country just as much as agriculture and railroading and mining and commerce are a part of the business of the country. All go to make up the sum of our wonderful wealth and wonderful prosperity, and all branches of business work together for national development. Why should any be shut out? The investments in manufactures in the year 1880 would compare very favorably with the investments in farming. Since capital alone is to be conserved by this bill, why should we turn our backs upon and shut out from our sight all capital engaged in prosperous industry except the capital used in agriculture?

If this is a Nation of diversified industries, why take one of those industries and make a Cabinet office for it to the exclusion of all others? If this measure were truly what in various quarters of the country it is supposed to be, a bill for the creation of a department in which all the industrial interests of the country should be considered and protected and fostered, that would be another thing.

But it touches neither the agricultural laborer, the laborer who is engaged in developing and carrying on the commerce of the country, the laborer who is engaged in producing the vast mineral products of the country, nor the laborer who is engaged in the vast manufacturing production of the country. My objection to it, so far as it is a capitalistic bill, is that it is a discriminating capitalistic bill, discriminating in favor of a certain class of capital and against all other classes of capital. But my greater objection to it is that it is a bill which ignores an interest in this country which not only underlies but is greater and more important than capital.

Mr. President, our civilization and progress rest upon one fundamental idea, and that is the idea that work is honorable and dignified and blesses instead of curses where it goes. It is a civilization dissimilar from that of any other country in the world in this respect, that in our system the man who labors with hands or with brain shall lose thereby nothing of dignity and honor. It is a civilization founded upon the reversal of all ideas in the world previous to the settlement of the United States.

The old idea was, and it has not been entirely eradicated yet, that the man who worked could not be a gentleman; that the thing that distinguished the gentleman from the fellow was leisure and idleness on the part of the gentleman, and work and toil on the part of the fellow, illustrated in that old couplet when Wat Tyler marched on London and sang:

> When Adam dolve and Eve span,
> Who was then the gentleman?

Showing that the idea was the man who worked could not be a gentleman. This civilization of ours, our Government, all our institutions were founded upon the idea that the man who did work might be a gentleman, and was not an inferior or humbler member of society than the man who had leisure and lived in ease and idleness.

That—

Worth makes the man and want of it the fellow.

Right at the foundation of republican government lies the principle that the man who works shall be honored—that his position shall be one of dignity, that no man shall have a right to despise him in this free land; and not only that, but that he shall have such wages as will enable him to elevate both himself and his family and those dependent upon him in the scale of moral, social, and financial well-being.

The great underlying force of America is the workingman—the man who labors and toils, the man who receives wages, and just as he is elevated, just as a condition of things exists which lifts him up and makes him more and more a man, enables him to ascend in the scale of manhood, a republic grows strong; and just in proportion as any policy exists which beats him down and degrades him in the scale of manhood the republic grows weak.

With us, this is a Government of the people. It is more than that, it is emphatically a Government of the common people. It is a Government of the men who work. More than that, it is a Government of the men who work for wages.

They are the majority of its voters. They set, or ought to set, the policy of the Government in finance, in education, in civil rights, in all that goes to make a Nation great and honorable, prosperous and beneficent. The common people for once in the world here on these shores, away from the tyrants and kings, were given the reins of government. Whatever we have of government we are indebted to them for. Whatever we are to have in the continuance of free government we shall be indebted to them for.

What, then, should be the policy of the Government? Simply to build up the common people. The very integral idea of our system is that every man who works votes, and votes intelligently, knows enough of our system, has aspiration enough to rise and grow and develop so that he shall vote wisely, and thus we shall be governed wisely.

As I said, this is the day of the common people. It is the day of the workman, and the time is coming when more and more he is to be recognized not only as the gentleman but the sovereign. Is there discontent among the men who labor? I do not fear it. It signifies aspiration, and is full of promise and hope for mankind.

Let nobody delude himself with the idea that capital is going to govern this country. There is a great ground-swell of humanity in the world. You can see it abroad in foreign lands, in monarchical governments; but more here in the light of our free institutions this great ground-swell means that humanity is taking an upward step, and that the man who works is to rule, and he is to rule wisely.

You need have no fear of him. You need have no fear that he is going to tear down and destroy free institutions. He is going to conserve and preserve them, because he knows that they are the outcome of the principle which makes him what he is and what he wants to be.

If we are going to have a new Cabinet officer; if we are going to have a new department; if we are going to have eight departments instead of seven, let us have one which will be wide in its scope, which will be embracing in its purposes, which shall not single out a portion of the capital of this country and elevate that, giving it a prominence over other capital, which above all things shall not neglect the great labor interests of the country.

Whom does the President need to consult most if he is to have advisers? Is it the men who represent merely capital, or the men who represent that greater, nobler, holier force in the world, labor? Time and again there has been an effort to incorporate into a new Executive Department which was spoken of, the interests of labor. By some mysterious process they have been overlooked. The Senator from Kansas says, make as many Executive Departments and Cabinet officers as you please, have a department of mining, have a department of commerce, have a department of manufactures, have a department of transportation, have an executive department for each of these industries, and an executive department of labor also.

Oh, no, Mr. President, we shall not create more than one additional Executive Department in fifty years. If we do not do it now we never shall within the life of the present generation. It is the one opportunity to recognize this great upheaving force of society and civilization and government—the labor interest of this country.

I have therefore felt that this bill ought to be wider, grander in its purposes, more elevating in its aims, more beneficent in its operations than it can possibly be by confining it to the enlargement and benefit of a portion of the capital of the country, to wit, the portion engaged in owning and cultivating farms.

I have felt that the question as to whether the Signal Service should be transferred to it was a mere bagatelle. There is an opportunity now, if the time has come for another Cabinet officer and another Executive Department, to look out for all these interests of the country, and above all for this greatest of our national interests, labor.

There is an opportunity now to weld together, to blend into one harmonious whole, all the capital and all the labor of the country, to put them where they will have a representative in the Executive council, where friction and contest and conflict between them may be avoided, where their interests shall be treated as mutual interests, as they are, and where, represented in the Cabinet, having the ear of the President, they may go on hand in hand to the future development of this great Nation and to the uplifting of humanity the world over.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Senate having devoted the last two or three days to making stump speeches upon the grave and important question as to whether the Weather Bureau of the Signal Service should perform its functions and duties under the control of one or another of the Executive Departments, I think the subject well-nigh exhausted, and desiring, as I do, that this bill shall pass with or without the amendment of the committee, but preferring that it should pass without it, I move that the committee's amendment be laid upon the table.

Mr. PALMER. I hope that the Senator from Tennessee will not press his motion. It will merely lead to the showing that we have no quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. I make the motion. I am quite satisfied we have no quorum to do anything but to adjourn after the motion is made.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. I should like to have a short executive session.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I withdraw it if the Senator from Connecticut desires.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 19, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 18, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU FOR PUBLICATION OF CUSTOMS TARIFFS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with accompanying letters of the Secretary of State, communications from the Belgian minister at Washington and the United States minister at Brussels concerning the proposed international bureau at Brussels for the translation and publication of the various customs tariffs of the world, and submitting an estimate of an appropriation to pay the share of the United States in the annual expenses of said bureau; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF POSTAL LAWS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following communication from the Postmaster-General; which, on motion of Mr. BLOUNT, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

LETTER FROM THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL, IN RESPONSE TO A RESOLUTION OF THE HOUSE RELATIVE TO THE ALLEGED DISTRIBUTION THROUGH THE MAILS OF THE TAX-REFORM ADVOCATE, IN VIOLATION OF THE POSTAL LAWS.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., September 15, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted on the 13th instant, and which is in these words, namely:

"Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to communicate to this House whether it is true that an enormous edition of a certain publication called the Tax-Reform Advocate has been sent and distributed, in violation of the postal laws, through the mails being sent out from Columbus, Ohio, to all or nearly all the post-offices of the State, and if such is the case, whether any officers or officer of the Post-Office Department has been guilty of such acts, or has known of the same and has not taken any steps to prevent the same; and also what further legislation by Congress is necessary to enforce the laws of the United States in regard to the postal service, and to prevent the repetition of such offenses; and also the honorable Postmaster-General is requested to report what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to punish such offenses and to prevent their recurrence."

I have the honor to comply with the resolution, as follows:

I. It is not true that "an enormous edition of a certain publication called the Tax-Reform Advocate was sent and distributed in violation of the postal laws through the mails, being sent out from Columbus, Ohio, and to all, or nearly all, the post-offices of the State."

II. It follows that it is not true that "any officers or officer of the Post-Office Department have been guilty of such acts, or have known of the same and have not taken any steps to prevent the same."

III. It is not necessary that there should be any "further legislation by Congress to enforce the laws of the United States in regard to the postal service," and to prevent such offenses or the repetition of them, for the reason that no such offenses have occurred; and the resources of the Department and the laws now in force are entirely adequate to promptly detect such offenses, and to punish them, if they ever should occur.

IV. As will fully appear, steps have been taken by the Department to investigate the truth or falsity of complaints of offenses of the nature described in the resolution, but as no such offenses have occurred, no "steps have been taken by the Department to punish such offenses, or to prevent their recurrence."

Inasmuch as every complaint or suggestion of a complaint touching the subject-matter of the resolution and heretofore filed in the Department or coming to its notice has been thoroughly investigated and reported upon, and inasmuch as all the evidence offered has heretofore been examined, and every source of evidence suggested by any person has been heretofore followed up and reported upon, I am enabled to report exhaustively on the whole subject without delay.

The attention of the Department was not in any manner directed to the subject until the resolve was offered in the House of Representatives by a distinguished member from Ohio. Shortly thereafter, for reasons which will appear by the accompanying correspondence, which also sets forth the principal charges against the service subsequently investigated and covered by this report, I detailed a sufficient number of reliable and competent men in the inspection service of the Department to investigate all the evidence presented, to seek all other evidence suggested, to institute prosecutions of all violations of the law discovered, and, laying all other business aside, to proceed with this duty forthwith.

CHARGES.

On the afternoon of August 21 I received the following communication:

Mr. Grosvenor to the Postmaster-General.

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
"Washington, August 20, 1888.

"SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the resolution introduced by me in the House of Representatives to-day, looking to an investigation of the alleged abuse of mails in Ohio by the chairman and managers of the Democratic executive committee of that State.

"The honorable chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads informed me to-day that it might be impossible to procure the attendance of a quorum of the committee, and hence advised me to address you officially upon the subject-matter of the resolution.

"It is alleged in the public prints of Ohio, and by numerous letters now in my possession from gentlemen of high character in Ohio, that a pretended newspaper called 'The Tax-Reform Advocate,' a copy of which is in my possession, has been circulated far and wide through the mails of Ohio without the payment of postage.

"The paper purports to have been published at a certain number, to wit, Rooms 53 and 55 Wesley Block, in the city of Columbus, and the subscription price is placed at 10 cents for the campaign and 25 cents for annual subscription.

"It is alleged, and I believe the truth to be, that there is no such place of publication, nor is there such a publication within the meaning of the law. It is claimed, and I have in my possession written statements abundantly proving it, that great bundles of this publication are sent from Columbus to the various post-offices throughout the State, and, by the postmasters, addressed to all or many of the patrons of the office, and copies of the paper thus addressed, without any payment of postage, are placed in the boxes and personal mails of the persons so addressed, and in this way a fraudulent circulation of the paper has been procured.

"It is stated to me by an authority, which I can not decline to recognize as truthful, that the postmaster at Columbus, whoever he may be—I do not happen to know him—has forwarded these packages through the mail knowingly, and has loaned himself and the agency of the United States mails and the facilities of his office to this unwarrantable and unlawful distribution of these prints. It is within my personal knowledge, that at one post-office in Athens County a large package of this paper made its appearance on last Wednesday, and was distributed to the patrons of the office in their mail, in the handwriting of the postmaster, when, in fact, there were no subscribers to the publication at the office, and the papers thus distributed had no postage-stamps or other indication of prepaid postage upon them. I have information based upon reliable authority that large packages of this publication have been sent by express to the local offices, and thereupon the same process of distribution has been carried on. I can not vouch personally for any of the allegations except the one heretofore referred to, but I state that the information comes to me from so many highly respectable sources, officers of the State government of Ohio, and persons known to me to be credible, that I can not doubt the truth of the allegations.

"I do not know that there is no such office of publication at Columbus as that alleged, but I do not believe that such a one exists. I do believe that the pretended newspaper publication is brought from a distance in large numbers, and is being thus surreptitiously placed in the mails. Believing, as I do, that the Post-Office Department is wholly without knowledge of these violations of the postal laws of the country, I beg to call attention to the existing facts as claimed, and leave the matter in your hands. I have a statement from a high authority, which I am willing to submit to you, that no lawful application has been made to the Columbus post-office for the transmission of this alleged newspaper, and that that fact is well known to the postmaster, but it is said on his behalf that a temporary permit has been issued by him pending the creation of facts to justify the distribution of the paper in gross quantities to the various post-offices of the State.

"I respectfully call your attention to these facts, and remain,

"Your obedient servant,

"C. H. GROSVENOR.

"Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
"Postmaster-General."

On the same day I received the following telegram:

Mr. Grosvenor to the Postmaster-General, covering charge of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

[Telegram. From House of Representatives; time, 4.20.]

"WASHINGTON, August 21, 1888.

"To Hon. DON M. DICKINSON:

"I have just received following from Hon. Richard Smith, proprietor Commercial Gazette, Cincinnati:

"'We have evidence that our paper is opened at post-offices in Ohio and Democratic campaign documents stuffed in paper and thus delivered to our subscribers. This clear violation of law in every way. If we inserted such documents and sent it through the mails, paying postage at pound rates, it would subject us to heavy penalty. In all my experience I never before heard of such an outrage. Proofs are at hand.'

"C. H. GROSVENOR."

On the same day I replied to Mr. GROSVENOR as follows:

The Postmaster-General to Mr. Grosvenor.

"POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
"Washington, D. C., August 21, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 20th instant, delivered by special messenger this afternoon, and I will give the matter the same attention and full reply as I would in reply to the resolution if passed. You are entirely correct in your courteous assumption that the Post-Office Department is wholly without knowledge of the alleged violations of the postal laws referred to, and is indebted to you for your full statement in regard to them.

"I also beg to acknowledge your Departmental telegram of this afternoon, transmitting a copy of the complaint of Hon. Richard Smith, proprietor of the Commercial Gazette, of Cincinnati, addressed to you.

"These are the first complaints I have received on the subject, and I can assure you of their prompt and vigorous investigation.

"Very truly, yours,

"DON M. DICKINSON,
"Postmaster-General.

"Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, M. C.,
"House of Representatives."

I immediately directed Inspector Maxwell to call upon Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR for such evidence as was in his possession and for such information as he could afford, to make the investigation effective. In accordance with such request Mr. GROSVENOR furnished the written statement which appears by the report of Inspector Holmes, hereto appended, and entitled "Case No. 103706 C," in which Mr. GROSVENOR states, it will be observed, "I have now given to the Post-Office Department all the information in my possession, and turn the matter over to the action of the Department."

The details of the investigation entered upon under the matter furnished by Mr. GROSVENOR, together with the report thereon (except with regard to the charges made by Hon. Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, and in regard to the Newark (Ohio) American, which are made the subjects of separate investigations), appear in the appended report under the title "Case No. 103706 C," aforesaid.

THE CHARGE OF HON. RICHARD SMITH, OF THE CINCINNATI COMMERCIAL GAZETTE.

The complaint appears in the original telegram of Mr. Smith, furnished the Department by Mr. GROSVENOR, a copy of which is here repeated, and is as follows:

Mr. Smith to Mr. Grosvenor.

[Telegram. Received at corridor House of Representatives, August 21, 1888.]

"CINCINNATI, OHIO, August 21.

"To Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR:

"We have evidence that our paper is opened at post-office in Ohio and Democratic campaign documents stuffed in paper and thus delivered to our subscribers. This is clear violation of law in every way. If we inserted such document and sent it through the mails, paying postage at pound rates, it would subject us to heavy penalty. In all my experience I never before heard of such an outrage. Proofs are at hand.

"RICHARD SMITH."

It will be observed that Mr. Smith states in his telegram that proofs are at hand, and the inspector in charge of the investigation was instructed to call at once upon Mr. Smith for the proofs or for any evidence that he might be willing to furnish, and for the names of post-offices and names of their patrons whose papers have been treated in the manner described in his complaint. The inspector called personally upon Mr. Smith, and all the data that he could obtain from him on such application was the accompanying slip of paper, in the words following, to wit:

"Free-trade paper. Jerry Beck, Aaron Beck, Louis Fagaly, Levi Mattox, Joseph Clare, folded in Weekly Gazette; Jacob Easter, folded in National Tribune, Bethel, Clermont County, Ohio."

And two other letters which are returned with "Case No. 103706 C," above referred to. The affidavits of persons named by Mr. Smith on that memorandum appear in the accompanying report of Inspector Holmes, hereto appended, entitled "Case No. 103707 C;" but as they are brief I transcribe them in this place:

"STATE OF OHIO, Clermont County, ss:

"Personally appeared before me the undersigned authority, Levi Mattox, who, first being duly sworn, says that for the past three months he has not been a subscriber for the Weekly Commercial Gazette, published at Cincinnati, Ohio, and within that time has received no paper in which was folded or found any matter foreign to original publication. Further deponent saith not.

"LEVI L. MATTOX.

"Sworn to in my presence and subscribed to before me this 30th day of August, 1888.

"A. R. HOLMES."

"STATE OF OHIO, Clermont County, ss:

"Personally came before me the undersigned authority, Jacob Easter, who, being first duly sworn, says that on the 17th day of August, 1888, he received the National Tribune, for which he is a subscriber, from the post-office at Bethel, Ohio; that with said paper he received a supplement entirely foreign to the original paper; that while such supplement was inside of said Tribune as he received it, yet he does not believe the paper had been unfolded for the purpose of inclosing the additional sheet, but from the manner of its inclosure the same was due to accident of distribution.

"STATE OF OHIO, Clermont County, ss:

"Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, J. L. Fagaly, who, first being sworn, says that with his Cincinnati Weekly Gazette of August 15, 1888, he received a supplement, a portion of which is hereto attached.

"Affiant says he does not remember just how this supplement was folded, and can not now say whether same had been folded in with the original publication or its presence there was due to manner of handling in transit or at the post-office.

"STATE OF OHIO, Clermont County, ss:

"Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Jerry M. Beck, who, first being sworn, says that with his Cincinnati Weekly Gazette of August 15, 1888, he received a supplement that was foreign to the original publication, as he believes that such supplement was folded in with said paper, but as he does not recollect whether in a manner to indicate intent or an accident of handling in transit in the post-office,

"J. M. BECK.

"Subscribed to before me and sworn to before me this 30th day of August, 1888.

And also the following from the postmaster at the place named in Mr. Smith's memorandum:

"STATE OF OHIO, Clermont County, ss:

"Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Charles E. Manning, who, first being sworn, says that he was, on August 15, 1888, and still is, postmaster at Bethel, Clermont County, Ohio; that on August 14 he personally made distribution of the entire package of Cincinnati Weekly Gazettes bearing date of issue of August 15, 1888; that the said papers were properly distributed in said post-office, and that no copy of the same was opened by him or by any clerk in his office; that no matter foreign to original publication was inserted in any of said papers, and if such matter was found therein it was an accident of distribution.

"Affiant further says that said package of papers reached his office in a compact roll with wrapping intact, and so put up that in his opinion the removal and return of any portion of the package would have been impossible without breaking the wrappings.

"CHARLES E. MANNING.

"Subscribed to before me and sworn to in my presence August 30, 1888.

"R. M. GRIFFITH,
"Justice of the Peace."

On the inspector's request for further evidence, or for any clue to further evidence, Mr. Smith kindly caused to be inserted in the Commercial Gazette of Thursday, August 23, 1888, in its editorial column, the following:

"We referred yesterday to the violation of the postal law by interior postmasters. The matter has been taken up by the Postmaster-General and an investigation ordered. The inspector at Cincinnati will undertake the job. People who have evidence of frauds should send their names at once to the Commercial Gazette Office, and we will see that the statements are placed in the hands of the inspector. It will thus be made lively for the offending officials."

It is to be regretted that even this widely disseminated call for information did not result in any more substantial evidence than the telegram of Mr. Smith himself, heretofore quoted, as will appear by the report of the inspector, with accompanying documents, entitled "Case No. 103707 C," as aforesaid.

OTHER COMPLAINTS

On or about August 28, 1888, Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR kindly furnished me with a complaint of Mr. W. D. Bickham, proprietor and editor of the Dayton (Ohio) Journal, appearing by a printed "Open Letter" to the postmaster at Dayton, charging that a copy of the Tax Reform Advocate had been "doubled in with the Dayton Weekly Journal addressed to one of my old Republican subscribers, whose name I have at hand on the Tax Reform Advocate as well as on his own paper."

It appears that both papers were entitled to be sent through the mails, and were properly addressed to the same person with postage prepaid, and, of course, it is no violation of the rules for any postmaster for the convenience of handling, to put them together.

I append hereto the report of the inspector, with accompanying papers, entitled "Case No. 103920 C."

THE COMPLAINT OF THE EDITOR OF THE NEWARK AMERICAN, REFERRED TO IN THE COMMUNICATION OF MR. GROSVENOR.

The report of the inspector on this case is hereto appended, entitled "Case No. 103634 C."

Another charge having been extensively circulated in Ohio and repeated and re-repeated throughout the State, which originated in the Seneca County Record on June 28, 1888, and which has served as the text of attacks upon the postal service in Ohio in a large number of publications, and is still going the rounds of the press in that State, it was thought to be worth while to order an investigation in connection with the suggestion of the resolution when offered in the House of Representatives, as to whether further legislation by Congress was necessary to enforce the laws of the United States in regard to the postal service. The charge is as follows:

"A number of parties here have lost amounts ranging from $3 to $10 by inclosing postal notes in letters. Several instances of this kind have happened recently when letters were sent only to Tiffin or Mansfield, and our people are becoming aroused. The postal department should be informed of the situation and the mail thief brought to justice. Our people have a holy horror of one of the mail clerks on this route, and when they are locked up in their closets quietly censure this fellow. Ere this complaint has been made against this chap for his fault-finding, carelessness, and negligence. It is high time that the Department was looking after him."

The result of this investigation is the usual one. The attack upon the service was not sustained, nor could the person who originated it suggest a shred or shadow of evidence to sustain it. This person has acknowledged that there was no foundation for his charges, and I append the report of Inspector Townsend to A. R. Holmes, inspector in charge at Cincinnati, Ohio, on that subject. The inclosed clipping, referred to in that report, is the one above set forth. The report will be found entitled "Townsend."

It will be seen that such of the charges as may seem to have been made in good faith are predicated upon the distribution of the paper known as "The Tax Reform Advocate." By some of these complaints it is assumed that the paper is not entitled to second-class or pound rates as a newspaper, because it is a "campaign issue." Whether a campaign issue or not, whether its publication shall survive the pending canvass or not, it is, according to the uniform precedents in this Department, entitled to mail service at the pound rates.

During every Presidential canvass, as appears by the data on file in this Department, the number of publications greatly increases, and at the close of the canvass the number greatly decreases. I have been handed an estimate by the Acting Third Assistant Postmaster-General from which it appears that transitory publications were issued and admitted to second-class rates during the summer and fall months of the years 1876, 1880, and 1884, to the number, respectively, as follows, 68, 101, and 100. Some of these transitory papers have always been avowedly started for campaign purposes. It can not be assumed in any case, however, that a paper which prima facie comes within the requirements of the act of March 3, 1879, and within sections 327 to 338, inclusive, of the Postal Laws and Regulations, will not survive beyond a given period.

Neither the law nor regulations require a continuous publication, and it would be an absurd requirement of, and a burden to, the citizen if any guaranty of continuance were exacted. Publications are, and always have been, admitted to the second-class rates when issued for special occasions only—for example, during the sessions of scientific or other conventions; during the "season" at pleasure resorts; during "camp meetings," etc. If the papers are issued "as frequently as four times a year," and are otherwise within the conditions, the duration or probable duration of their existence has, under the law, nothing whatever to do with the question of their admissibility.

The publication known as "The Tax Reform Advocate" has filed its indemnity, and otherwise formally complied with all the requirements of the law and regulations as a second-class publication. All the other charges regarding the incidental misuse of the mails are either frivolous, entirely unsustained, or disappear before this conclusion.

It is but simple justice to the postmasters of Ohio, who have been charged in general and in detail, in this connection, with violations of the postal laws, to say that not only has no complaint of such violation been sustained against them, but also that this investigation develops no ground for the slightest criticism upon one of them.

In conclusion, it may not be improper to say as to complaints against postmasters and officials of the postal service, made in other parts of the country as well as throughout Ohio, moved, it would sometimes seem, from apparent concert of attack, by common direction, that the great increase of business since the opening of the canvass, pouring into the mails an amount of matter unprecedented in any previous Presidential year, and the widely-circulated and unfounded charges against them, born of the asperities, not to say exigencies, of the time, have in no case swerved those officials from the impartial performance of their duty by all citizens and by all parties represented in the contest.

All complaints, whether made to the Department, to any official, or to any of the fifty-eight thousand and odd postmasters, coming to the files here, and the case being rare when an attack is made, even in the newspapers, that it is not sent here in some form, the record sustains, and the service is entitled to, this statement.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

[Case No. 103707 C.—A. R. Holmes, post-office inspector.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Cincinnati, Ohio, August 31, 1888.

SIR: Above-numbered case relates to an allegation by the proprietors of the Cincinnati Gazette that at sundry post-offices in the State of Ohio that paper is opened and "stuffed" with Democratic campaign documents and thus delivered to their subscribers.

With a view to investigation of this charge I called upon Richard Smith, the person making complaint on behalf of the proprietors of the above-named paper, for names of post-offices and names of their patrons thereat whose papers have been treated in the manner described in their complaint.

The only data obtained by this application bearing on this case was the accompanying slip of paper headed "free-trade paper," bearing the names of Jerry Beck, Aaron Beck, Lewis Fagaly, Levi Mattox, and Joseph Clair, alleged subscribers to the Cincinnati Weekly Gazette, and Jacob Easter, a subscriber to the National Tribune, all residents at Bethel, Clermont County, Ohio. Two other letters were obtained relating to case 103706 C, and will be returned in that case in envelope marked "Commercial Gazette Correspondence," August, 1888.

I visited the several parties whose names are above given at Bethel, Ohio Jerry Beck and J. L. Fagaly, subscribers to the Gazette, and Jacob Easter, a subscriber to the National Tribune, each received a supplement similar to the one accompanying the affidavit of Fagaly with their paper of August 15, 1888, but none of them can state what its relation to the paper was, and their affidavits herewith inclosed fail in any degree to sus tain the charge made.

Mattox and Aaron Beck are not subscribers to the Weekly Gazette, and have made no complaint in relation to this supplement. Joseph Clare disclaims any personal knowledge of the matter whatever, bu has only heard others compla in as having received this supplement.

A large list of the Gazettes are sent to this office. They are sent in roll lengths of half sheet, securely wrapped, and wrapper pasted on, and have to be folded by the postmaster before they can be distributed to the boxes.

Postmaster Manning says that the issue of August 15, 1888, reached his office in good condition and wrapped in a manner that precludes the idea of any foreign matter being inserted between the time of mailing and delivery at his office. He further says that neither he nor any clerk in his employ opened the paper of any patron of his office and put in this supplement or any other document, Democratic or Republican.

Mr. Manning says, however, that on the day above named issue of the paper was received and distributed by him; he had a large number of the supplements complained of, some of which, possibly to the number of one hundred, were distributed by him to the post-office's boxes, and that in view of the loose folding of the Gazette some of these may have been passed into the folds of that and other papers already distributed; but if such a thing did happen it was without intent on his part.

The evidence of the parties whose names were furnished by the Commercial Gazette in no manner sustains the charges made by that paper.

In a personal interview with Joseph Clare, whose name was given as one having knowledge in this affair, says, the Commercial Gazette wrote him to get the names of persons who would make statements of a character to sustain this charge. Clare thinks the letter was written about the 16th of August, 1888. If such is the fact, this request came before any one could have made complaint to their office, as the paper does not reach Bethel until the evening of the 14th, and all unite in saying that they made no personal complaint in the matter, but incidentally made mention of the fact that they had received this supplement, in Clare's store, when their attention was called to the "howl" raised by the Commercial Gazette and other papers over misuse of the mails by Democratic postmasters in connection with this document, by Clare himself.

Clare has made it his business to hunt for complaints following their request, and in the issue of their daily of August 23 they editorially call on their patrons to complain. (See clipping inclosed.)

A call at the office of the Commercial Gazette this date failed to elicit any further evidence relating to this matter. I recommend this case be closed.

Very respectfully,

A. R. HOLMES, Inspector in Charge.

Chief Post-Office Inspector, Washington, D. C.

[From the Commercial Gazette, August 23, 1888.]

We referred yesterday to the violation of the postal law by interior postmasters. The matter has been taken up by the Postmaster-General and an investigation ordered. The inspector at Cincinnati will undertake the job. People who have evidence of fraud should send their names at once to the Commercial Gazette office, and we will see that the statements are placed in the hands of the inspector. It will thus be made lively for the offending officials.

To Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR:

[Case No. 103920 C. A. R. Holmes, post-office inspector.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Cincinnati, Ohio, September 15, 1888.

SIR: I return case of above number, which relates to the finding of the Tax Reform Advocate inside a copy of the Dayton Weekly Journal, supposed to be placed there by some employé of the Dayton (Ohio) post-office.

The case is founded upon an open letter, published in the Ohio State Journal, by W. D. Bickham, the editor, to W. H. Gillespie, postmaster at Dayton, Ohio, a copy of which is submitted by Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, and inclosed as part of files in this case.

I return with the case the answer of Postmaster Gillespie to this open letter, with editorial comments thereon by W. D. Bickham, and the affidavit of Lee R. Hooper, general-delivery clerk of the Dayton (Ohio) post-office.

From these it will be found that the Tax Reform Advocate and Dayton Weekly Journal, each addressed to Irvin Oliver, were folded together and handed from the general-delivery window on August 28, in the manner as shown by copy herewith submitted.

That this folding together of second-class matter to one address is a practice of the office of long standing, and, Mr. Hooper claims, was learned to him by his predecessor as general-delivery clerk, one Ben. Guion; that the practice was made necessary by want of room in general-delivery paper case for the accommodation of local-delivery and transient newspapers.

In the particular case under consideration the papers were found upon the streets of Dayton by Ben. Guion, formerly a delivery clerk of this post-office, and by him carried to the Dayton Journal office instead of being returned to the post-office for delivery according to address. Mr. Guion is fully apprised of the former practice of the office in this matter, and thought nothing of the manner in which the papers were found folded. The party to whom the papers were addressed has since been seen and has no complaint to make and offers no objections to the manner in which his mail has been handled in this office. Mr. Bickham himself says that the purpose he had in view by his open letter to Postmaster Gillespie was to bring on the controversy and by that means counteract the effect that he supposed the circulation of the Tax Advocate might have. Having accomplished this, he had no further special interest in the matter, and it had never been his intention that it should have been a subject of an official investigation against the office. I recommend that the case be closed.

Very respectfully,

A. R. HOLMES,
Inspector in Charge.

Hon. WILLIAM A. WEST,
Chief Post-Office Inspector, Washington, D. C.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., August 28, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to send you an article from the Dayton Journal. The card is written by Maj. W. D. Bickham, owner of the Dayton Journal.

I was mortified to see in a Cincinnati paper that I had sent one or more of the documents appertaining to this matter to the Republican national executive committee. I had no communication with that committee on the subject, nor had I with any one but you.

Yours truly,

C. H. GROSVENOR.

Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

[From the Dayton Journal.]

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE POSTMASTER OF DAYTON.

SIR: I have in my possession a copy of the Dayton Weekly Journal dated Tuesday morning, August 21, which, besides my usual supplement, contains a four-page paper, entitled The Tax Reform Advocate, purporting to be published at Columbus, Ohio, and dated August 15, 1888. It is nothing more nor less than a Democratic electioneering sheet. How it got doubled in with the Dayton Weekly Journal, addressed to one of my old Republican subscribers—whose name I have at command on the Tax Reform Advocate as well as on his own paper, when investigation shall be made—is a mystery that neither I nor my mail clerks can explain. That the Democratic Tax Reform Advocate was not inserted in the Journal addressed to any Republican subscriber by any employé of the Journal office is certain. The paper is a local-delivery Weekly Journal, so that apparently the Democratic Tax Reform Advocate was stuffed into my subscriber's Weekly Journal in the Dayton post-office. Now, you must perceive, Mr. Postmaster Gillespie, that this, if there is no explanation, is not only a gross outrage upon my Republican subscriber, but also upon the Dayton Journal, and is a violation of the United States postal laws as well as of common honesty. I respectfully invite you to make a thorough investigation of what appears to be a grave private and public wrong, and will lend you all assistance in my power to locate it. I will be found at my place of business at about noon, daily.

Respectfully,

WM. D. BICKHAM,
Proprietor and Editor of the Dayton Journal.

Hon. WILLIAM H. GILLESPIE,
Postmaster, Dayton, Ohio.

NOTE FROM POSTMASTER GILLESPIE.

We have received the following from the postmaster at Dayton, Hon. William H. Gillespie:

"UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE,
"Dayton, Ohio, August 27, 1888.

"SIR: My attention is directed to an open letter published in the Dayton Daily Journal of this date, written by you and addressed to me as postmaster, wherein you call my attention to the fact that an old subscriber of the Dayton Weekly Journal received his regular paper at the post-office recently, with a copy of a publication entitled The Tax Reform Advocate inclosed or folded within the same. You do not state the name of the person upon whom this alleged outrage was perpetrated, and I do not care to know, for, admitting what you state to be the fact, there is nothing that warrants investigation, but it does, however, warrant an explanation. The Tax Reform Advocate is a publication regularly entered at the Columbus, Ohio, post-office as second-class mail matter, and is entitled to pass through the mails as such, and to receive the same attention in transit and delivery as any other publication entered in like manner. It is the custom at all post-offices for carriers and general-delivery clerks to fold together all papers addressed to the same name, and there is method in the custom, for it facilitates delivery and lightens the labor of those whose duty it is to deliver this class of mail matter. Now, inasmuch as a copy of the Tax Reform Advocate was received at this post-office, addressed to a person who had a Journal addressed to him also, awaiting delivery, the clerk but followed the established custom in folding the one with the other. There was no outrage perpetrated on the subscriber in question, nor on you as editor and proprietor of the Journal; and presuming this explanation to be satisfactory to the subscriber and yourself, I request that you give this letter the same prominence in its publication that you gave your 'open letter' to myself in the Journal. On the contrary, should this explanation prove unsatisfactory, I request that this correspondence, together with your complaint, be submitted to the honorable Postmaster-General for investigation.

"Yours, respectfully,

"W. H. GILLESPIE, Postmaster.

"W. H. BICKHAM, Esq., City."

We respectfully direct the attention of Postmaster Gillespie to the following facts:

First. The Tax Reform Advocate is not, according to its face, entered in any post-office as "registered at the post-office (anywhere) as second-class matter." The Dayton Weekly Journal is very plainly printed at the head of the first column, first page, as "registered as second-class matter." Accordingly, the Democratic campaign sheet entitled "The Tax Reform Advocate," does not appear to comply with the law. We do not, therefore, understand that it has any rights as second-class matter in the United States mail unless it is so registered, but if Postmaster Gillespie knows it to be registered at Columbus, that settles that point.

Second. We do most decidedly object, as the Republican organ of this city, to having the Dayton Journal made a vehicle for the dissemination of Democratic campaign literature to our Republican subscribers, no matter what the conveniences of the employés of the Dayton post-office may be.

Third. Postmaster Gillespie is not altogether ingenuous in saying that "you (editor of the Journal) do not state the name of the person upon whom the alleged outrage was perpetrated." No, we did not publish his name, but we were careful to send his paper, with his name on it, and the Tax Reform Advocate, with his name on it, to Postmaster Gillespie in person, by a confidential member of the Journal staff, who pointedly exhibited to Postmaster Gillespie the name of our subscriber on both papers, the Democratic campaign document, as we received it, being doubled within the Journal. It may have got there in due post-office form, but the circumstances were calculated to excite suspicion, especially as the Democratic Tax Reform Advocate does not appear to have been registered anywhere as "second-class mail matter."

We have no desire nor disposition to press Postmaster Gillespie to an official investigation. We are satisfied with the attention we have directed to the outrage upon our rights to the use of the United States post-office, while we comply with the law, without being made the victim of a disagreeable imposition. The postmaster ought to be able to see that if postal employés can stuff a regular Republican publication with Democratic literature it is also possible to make it the vehicle of a lottery scheme or any indecent or unlawful publication. There is no objection to the circulation of Democratic literature through the post-office, or in any lawful way, but we do most decidedly object to being made a pack-horse to carry Democratic burdens. If this can be done in the post-office, the Democrats might as well shut down their organs and use Republican papers for their campaign purposes. We emphatically deny the right of any post officer to inclose anything whatever in any copy of the Dayton Journal deposited in the post-office for distribution to any party to whom it may be addressed.

STATE OF OHIO, Montgomery County, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Lee R. Hooper, who, being first duly sworn, says that he is general delivery clerk in the Dayton, Ohio, post-office; that he was on duty as such clerk on Monday, August 20, 1888, and continuously from that date up to the present time; that on that above date he received for distribution and delivery the Dayton Weekly Journal of August 21, 1888, of which one copy was addressed to Irvin Oliver, whose post-office address is Dayton, Ohio.

Affiant further says that, following a custom of the office to place all papers to one address inside of some one of the papers to the same address for convenience of delivery, he placed a copy of the Tax Reform Advocate, addressed to I. Oliver, inside the copy of the Dayton Weekly Journal, as above described, and in the manner as shown by accompanying copy of Dayton Weekly Journal. Affiant further says if there had been any other newspapers, or third-class matter, to the same address, they would have been found inclosed in a similar manner, and without any intention of conveying to Mr. Oliver, or any other patron of the office, the idea that they were any part of the publication with which found.

Affiant further says that on Saturday August 25, 1888, he made delivery of the Dayton Weekly Journal, addressed to Irvin Oliver, with inclosures as above described, and further affiant saith not.

LEE R. HOOPER.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 4th day of September, A. D. 1888.

A. R. HOLMES,
Post-office Inspector.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 15, 1888.

SIR: The publisher of the Newark (Ohio) American represents that the inclosed sheet has been folded as a supplement inside of copies of his paper addressed to subscribers at Utica, Ohio, by parties unknown to him, between the time of mailing and delivery. Please investigate the matter and report to this office as early as practicable.

Very respectfully,

H. R. HARRIS,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. W. A. WEST,
Chief Inspector, Post-Office Department.

[Case No. 103634 C. A. R. Holmes, post-office inspector.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Cincinnati, Ohio, August 27, 1888.

SIR: Case of above number is herewith returned and relates to a complaint of the editors of the Newark (Ohio) American that persons unknown had inserted matter foreign to original mailing in papers delivered to his subscribers at Utica, Ohio.

I visited the office of the Newark American and they gave me the names of J. J. Williams and Henry Bash as the parties whose mail had been so treated at Utica.

I procured a personal interview with Mr. Williams, Bash being absent from home, and found him (Williams) to have been the one who brought the inclosed sheet to the editor of the American, and on whose statement they base this complaint. Mr. Williams could not state positively how or by what means he received this supplement, but only supposes that it came through the post-office. A day or two after receiving it the matter of the circular became the subject of conversation between him and his neighbor, Henry Bash, and it was to them a question of doubt as to whether this was a campaign document sent out by the Republican or Democratic committee. To settle the question, Mr. Williams, who was going in to Newark the next day, was to carry it to the American office and find out if it emanated from the proper source.

This he did and now seems surprised that the editors of the American have formulated this complaint on his inquiry.

Investigation at the Newark (Ohio) post-office, at Utica, and the route between the two, utterly bars the idea that this matter could have been inserted in these papers in manner set out in the complaint, at any point except after distribution in the Utica post-office. The issue of the paper in which it was claimed they were folded as put up for the Utica office was a compact roll, with the wrapping secured by paste, put up in a manner that it would be impossible to take out and put in again any part of the contents.

This package was dispatched from the Newark office within a few minutes after its delivery from office of publication, and received at Utica by due course of mail, in good condition.

Paul Knisely, postmaster at the latter place, whom I find in every way worthy of credence, says that none of the supplements have been folded in newspapers in that office. There is no evidence to sustain the charge, and in truth the thing charged was never done, and I recommend the case be closed.

Very respectfully,

A. R. HOLMES, Post-Office Inspector in Charge.

Hon. WILLIAM A. WEST,
Chief Post-Office Inspector, Washington, D. C.

UTICA, OHIO, August 24, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In reference to the supplement said to have been in the American, I can only say that when my mail was brought to me I did find a sheet with my paper. This mail was brought to me by Joseph Waters, a son-in-law.

HENRY BAST.

A. R. HOLMES, Post-Office Inspector.

[Case No. 103706 C.—A. R. Holmes, P. O. inspector.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Cincinnati, Ohio, September 5, 1888.

Hon. WM. A. WEST,
Chief P. O. Inspector, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: Case of above number is herewith returned relating to the legal right of the Tax Reform Advocate, of Columbus, Ohio, to admission to the mails at pound rates; also as to the alleged wrong mailing of said publication by several postmasters.

The specific charges in this case are found in the several communications of Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, herein, together with clippings from sundry papers by him submitted in connection therewith. They are:

1. That the postmaster at Columbus, Ohio, passed through the post-office there the above-named publication before the necessary application for its admission at second-class rates (Form 3214) had been properly filled out and filed, and without prepayment of postage.

2. That the postmaster at Wapakoneta, Enon, East Palestine, and Oxford, Ohio, had variously been guilty of violations of the postal laws and regulations, in either receiving the above-named publication by express and distributing through the post-office boxes without prepayment of postage, or receiving them unaddressed, writing the names of patrons of their office upon them, and making delivery to non-subscribers.

The first charge is made in a communication from W. S. Cappeller, chairman of the Republican State executive committee, to the honorable gentleman. Mr. Cappeller wrote under a misapprehension of the report of a party whom he delegated to visit the post-office and find out the standing of this publication in its relation to the mails.

The party who did this is a Mr. Galloway, in the office of Judge Nash, at Columbus, Ohio. Galloway says that he reported to Cappeller; that Assistant Postmaster Krumm said the necessary affidavit and application had been filed but not yet acted on by the Department, instead of the report attributed to him in Mr. Cappeller's letter of August 17, herewith. Mr. Galloway's statement in no way differs from the statement of facts set out in the sworn statement of Assistant Postmaster Krumm, herein, except possibly he did not state the amount of money deposited for prepayment of postage.

Application for the admission of this publication was made prior to the 15th day of August, 1888, date of issue of first number, on form 3214, properly filled out and attested, and immediately forwarded, with a copy of publication for departmental action. At the same time C. Q. Davis, editor, on the granting of temporary permit (Form 3215) deposited $100 in the post-office for prepayment of postage. The proceeding was regular in all its forms, and on the evidence submitted on August 16 the honorable Third Assistant Postmaster-General issued authority to the postmaster at Columbus, Ohio, for the admission of the Tax Reform Advocate to second-class rates of postage, conditioned that it was not entitled to privilege of free county circulation, as the paper was printed at Cleveland, Ohio.

In the matter of the second charge it is claimed that the postmaster at East Palestine, Wapakoneta, and some office in Athens County not named, received large numbers of these papers unaddressed with the names of the patrons of their offices thereon, and made delivery of same to non-subscribers.

In view of the provisions of section 579, Postal Laws and Regulations, if the thing charged was done, it is not necessarily a crime or a fault, but in each case where the post-office is named the postmaster denies that such a thing was done by him, and I was unable to find through persons making the complaints any testimony sustaining the charge.

At Enon and Oxford it is charged that the postmasters received the Tax Reform Advocate by express and distributed them through the post-offices without prepayment of postage. In this connection I invite attention to the affidavit of C. Q. Davis, editor of the Tax Reform Advocate, and the written statements of the postmasters at Enon and Oxford, by which it is made manifest that the Tax Reform Advocate has not been sent to either of these offices by express. Mr. Davis claims that no papers have been forwarded by that medium.

Another feature of the charges is that at Utica, Bethel, and Dayton, Ohio, certain Republican newspapers have been opened up, the Tax-Reform Advocate and campaign literature foreign to original mailing have been folded inside and delivered in violation of law.

The charge against Utica is covered in case 103634C; against Bethel by report in case 103707C, previously sent in, and that against Dayton covered by report in case 103920C, sent in this date.

I visited W. S. Cappellar and other parties, as requested, in course of these investigations.

The point upon which Mr. Cappeller lays special stress has already been treated as charge 1, as to his claim; that the paper is not entitled to admission to pound rates. Neither from him nor from the other sources cited was I enabled to get any fact tending to show that such admission had been obtained by fraudulent or false representations.

I submit in support of the foregoing the affidavits of Fred Krumm, C. Q. Davis, E. O. Corcoran, and M. Mulrony, and have reduced to writing all statements in support of or against the validity of the charges where parties personally knew that of which they would testify.

Believing the facts show that the thing charged shows as to the several postmasters are untrue and no evidence is to be found that the publication named in title of this case has been admitted to the mails at pound rates upon false evidence or misrepresentation as to its character, I recommend the case be closed.

Very respectfully,

A. R. HOLMES, Inspector in Charge.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, August 23, 1888.

SIR: Pursuant to your verbal request I have the honor to make the following formal statement in addition to my letter to the honorable Postmaster-General in relation to the alleged violations of the postal laws in the State of Ohio:

In the first place, I desire that the officer charged with the investigation shall call upon Hon. W. S. Cappeller, railroad commissioner for the State of Ohio and chairman of the Republican executive committee of that State, for such information as that gentleman may have in his possession.

I also desire that Hon. William C. Lyon, lieutenant-governor of Ohio, who resides at Newark, Ohio, and is the proprietor of the Newark American, may be called to testify to the introduction into his issue of the alleged newspaper, of which I send you a copy, called the Tax Reform Advocate. Governor Lyon told me that it had come to him from various sources within the delivery of his office that the packages had been broken open, the papers spread out, and copies of the Tax Reform Advocate inserted therein. He is a fearless man and will give information without hesitation. I quote from his letter of August 13 to Chairman Cappeller: "That supplement or circular, about which there has been so much complaint because of its being sent through the post-office without postage, and in many cases stuffed into Republican papers by Democratic postmasters, has made its appearance here."

I inclose the letter of George R. Davis, esq., of Wapakoneta, Ohio, under date of August 14, which makes the direct charge involved in one view of the case.

I also inclose the letter of R. N. Chamberlain, esq., of East Palestine, Ohio, upon the same subject.

I also inclose the letter of D. P. Beaton, esq., mayor of the city of Oxford, Ohio, and in that letter it will be seen that he makes the direct charge that the United States Express Company brought from the Democratic committee a lot of papers, of which this copy which I send you is one, and that the postmaster put them into the boxes and delivered them without postage to a large number of Republican voters and others.

I also inclose the circular letter of Mr. James B. Townsend, chairman of the Democratic State executive committee, addressed to a postmaster. I am informed that he has called upon every Democratic postmaster in the State to comply with this circular, thereby compelling, substantially, the postmasters to be agents for his alleged newspaper.

I also inclose the letter of Hon. W. S. Cappeller, dated August 17, 1888, which shows that the postmaster at Columbus sent out these packages without any legal or formal application under the law.

I will state that I was myself present at the post-office at Stewart, Athens County, Ohio, one week ago to-day, and that shortly after the arrival of the mails a number of persons came from the post-office having in their hands this Tax Reform Advocate, who stated to me that they had not subscribed for the paper nor been requested to do so. The paper contained their names, written in lead pencil, and without any postage-stamp thereon.

I inclose the original telegram of Hon. Richard Smith, one of the proprietors of the Commercial Gazette, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Smith is a man of high character and will fearlessly do his duty in this regard.

I have now given to the Post-Office Department all the information in my possession and turned the matter over to the action of the Department.

Yours, truly,

C. H. GROSVENOR.

Mr. MAXWELL,
Inspector, Post-Office Department.

AUGLAIZE COUNTY REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE ROOMS,
Wapakoneta, Ohio, August 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: To-day, after the regular distribution of the mails, the post-office service here flooded the delivery-boxes with the first number of the Tax Reform Advocate, of the issue date August 15, 1888.

Each copy was addressed in lead pencil, which led to the general suspicion that they had been addressed after reaching the distributing office, and if so, of course in violation of postal laws.

Do you know anything about how this sheet is sent out from Columbus?

Very truly, yours,

GEO. R. DAVIS, Chairman.

W. S. CAPPELLER,
Chairman, Columbus, Ohio.

EAST PALESTINE, OHIO, August 16, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: Volume 1, No. 1, of the Tax Reform Advocate has reached our town on this afternoon's mail, and it would seem that every voter has received one. I supposed this was Chairman Brice's paper, although it purports to be edited by Charles Q. Davis, 53 Wesley Block, Columbus, Ohio, and thought it best to advise you at once.

R. N. CHAMBERLIN.

Hon. W. S. CAPPELLER,
Columbus, Ohio.

HEADQUARTERS OHIO REPUBLICAN
STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Columbus, Ohio, August 17, 1888.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I had inquiry made to-day at the post-office here to ascertain upon what authority the Tax Reform Advocate was admitted into the United States mails and carried at pound rates. You will understand that under the post-office regulations that application for admission of publication at second-class rates must be made on a form like the one inclosed, which you may be able to work in with your statement.

The postmaster was not in, but the deputy postmaster informed the attorney who called that a temporary permit had been given, but the proper application with the necessary affidavit had not yet been filed.

I also inclose a copy of the paper which they are thus illegally getting into the mails, and violating both the postal and civil-service laws.

Very truly, yours,

W. S. CAPPELLER, Chairman.

P. S.—Your attention is also called to the letter from D. P. Beaton, mayor of Oxford.

HEADQUARTERS OHIO STATE DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Columbus, Ohio, August 9, 1888.

Mr, POSTMASTER:

DEAR SIR: In order to supply the enormous demand for tariff literature, the Tariff Reform League of this city will issue a paper beginning August 15 to be called the Tariff Reform Advocate, which will be backed by this committee. It will contain the very best literature obtainable on the tariff question. Inclosed find a subscription blank; the price is only 10 cents for the campaign, and by getting us as large a list of subscribers as possible you will very materially assist in the work of educating the people on this question.

Please attend to this as soon as possible.

Yours, truly,

JAMES B. TOWNSEND, Chairman.
GEORGE A. BATESON, Secretary.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, Oxford, Ohio, August 16, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your letter in relation to formation of Harrison and Morton clubs, will say we have a live, acting, working Republican permanent club here, and are at work forming marching clubs for the campaign. The postmaster here (D. O. Corcoran, a Democrat) received the other day by United States Express from State Democratic committee, a lot of papers, of which inclosed is one, which papers he put in the post-office boxes and delivered without addresses and without postage to large numbers of Republican voters and others (which seems to us to be in violation of law). They seem to and must be getting desperate when they resort to such means.

Please give me your opinion of the above, and oblige

Respectfully yours,

D. P. BEATON,
Member of Republican County Central Committee.

Hon. W. S. CAPPELLER,
Chairman Republican State Executive Committee.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF CHIEF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed find additional papers in case sent you last week. Give this matter your personal attention and a thorough inquiry.

Respectfully,

W. A. WEST, Chief Inspector.

Acknowledge receipt of this and other two packages on this subject.

WEST.

HEADQUARTERS OHIO STATE DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Columbus, Ohio, August 23, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We have heard of Mr. GROSVENOR'S charges; and in regard to the first, that newspapers are opened in Ohio post-offices and Democratic campaign documents inserted in them, and thus transmitted without prepayment of postage, we know nothing about. From post-offices where these charges have been made, the postmasters inform us they are willing to make affidavit that the charges are wholly false and without any foundation whatever.

In regard to the second, that a newspaper called the Tax Reform Advocate is circulating without prepayment of postage, that also is a pure fabrication. This committee has paid the subscription of a great many people and the paper is being sent out from headquarters. We know that the postage has been prepaid, and there is a large balance credited now to the Tax Reform League, which is the publisher.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES B. TOWNSEND,
Chairman.

Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 23, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 21st instant, regarding violations of law in transmitting the Tax Reform Advocate through the mail, was shown me to-day. I desire to say that there is nothing whatever in these charges, and the publishers of the Tax Reform Advocate are willing and anxious to be investigated. The paper is a legitimate business enterprise, and is only assailed because it conflicts with the interest of the Republican party in many localities.

The charge of circulating without prepayment of postage is so far from true that there is a large balance to my credit at Columbus post-office to be used in payment of postage.

Yours, truly,

C. E. DAVIS.

Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1888.

SIR: I now hand you, in addition to my former letter, the inclosed letters of Hon. John H. Doane, State librarian of Ohio, and the copy of the letter of Mr. Townsend, chairman of the Democratic executive committee. From these you will see that the whole scheme of the Tax Reform Advocate lacks all the essential elements of a newspaper, and is only a political circular sent in fraud of the postal laws.

Truly,

C. H. GROSVENOR.

HEADQUARTERS OHIO REPUBLICAN
STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Columbus, Ohio, August 21, 1888.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I notice that Townsend, in his telegram to Campbell, says that the Tax Reform Advocate is published by the Tax Reform League. On July 27th Mr. Townsend, as chairman of the Democratic State executive committee, sent a letter or letters in which he announced that this paper would be issued under the auspices of his committee and sent into every home in the State of Ohio, and in it he asked bids both for printing the sheet and for an advertisement for the entire last page of it. I inclose you a copy of his letter, but regret to say that I have not the original. The letter was printed in the Cleveland Leader of August 4, and it is possible that the original is in that office or can be had on application to the Leader.

Bids for the printing and the press-work on this sheet were received by the Democratic State executive committee, and the contract for printing it given by Mr. Townsend to the Cleveland Plaindealer office at $3.66 a thousand copies. The papers are printed in Cleveland and sent to this city, from whence they are mailed as from the place of publication. The Charles Q. Davis whose name appears at the top of the first column of the paper is a clerk or assistant secretary, or something of the sort, at Democratic State headquarters, and is under Townsend's direction and control. The papers which I sent you yesterday were obtained from him at the Democratic State headquarters. As you will notice, the paper announces that it is backed by the Democratic State executive committee. The postmaster here, De Witt C. Jones, says that the paper is admitted by him to the mails at newspaper rates because the regular affidavit was made by Davis. The thing is a transparent fraud, and if the postal laws allow such matter as this to go through the mails at newspaper rates, there is no reason why any sort of an advertising circular should not also go at pound rates.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN M. DOANE.

General CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The Tax Reform Advocate is the name of a journal that will be issued under the auspices of this committee and sent into every home in the State of Ohio.

It will be a four-page paper, with seven columns 21 inches long.

We already have the names of 500,000 voters, and expect to increase the number to 700,000 before the first issue is sent out, August 4.

It will be issued every two weeks, and we desire bids on the seven issues up until election day. After that time the circulation will diminish.

We would like to sell the entire last page to one firm. If you desire to bid, do so immediately, and if possible by wire. We desire to let the contract August 1, and will guaranty a circulation of 600,000.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES B. TOWNSEND, Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., August 24, 1888.

Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General:

The following is from the Commercial Gazette of the 21st instant:

"In our experience as newspaper publishers we have not known of a greater outrage than is now being practiced by Ohio postmasters in the rural towns and villages. The postal laws are very stringent in their provisions, and for violations of the law there are severe penalties. Newspapers are mailed at pound rates, but publishers are prohibited from including anything that does not properly belong to the paper. We are not even permitted to send circulars relating to the publication of the papers. We may send specimen copies of the paper at pound rates, but that is all. In the face of this law Democratic postmasters at offices of delivery have opened our paper and stuffed it with Democratic campaign documents, and thus delivered it to subscribers, creating the impression, of course, that the document was sent from the Commercial Gazette office. The same liberty has, no doubt, been taken with other publications, but in our case we have the proof. What the post-office authorities will do in the case we do not know. If we undertake to violate the law as it has been violated in this case, we know what would be and should be done. The authorities are not in ignorance upon this subject. They know what has been done, and it remains to be seen whether they will punish the guilty officials. Meantime we warn our subscribers to be on their guard, and ask them to throw the fraudulent documents in the face of offending postmasters. It should be understood that no document of the kind can be legally included in any newspaper sent through the mails; that it is a violation of law to send anything in a newspaper except the paper itself, unless the postage is paid at transient rates."

The following are from the Mount Vernon Republican, of Mount Vernon, Ohio:

"TAMPERING WITH THE MAILS.

"Under this heading the Newark American of Saturday has the following:

"Quite a number of our readers living in and about Utica have brought us papers in the form of a supplement and the same thing sent out as a supplement in this week's Advocate. They tell us these supplements were folded in their Americans when handed to them by the postmaster at that place. None of these were in the American when it was placed in the office in this city, and hence must have either been placed in our papers by the postmaster in this city or at Utica, it matters little which. It is a direct violation of the postal laws and we shall see to it that an investigation is made by the proper authority. It is too small and dirty work for any decent official to engage in, and we can not lead ourselves to think that Postmaster Brady would permit such a transaction in his office. Whoever did it should be removed from the service, and that promptly.

"The same trouble occurred in this county last week, all of which was duly exposed in the last issue of the Republican. The fellows engaged in this work will find out before the thing is over that Uncle Sam's mails are not maintained exclusively for Democratic electioneering purposes. The matter so fraudulently sent through the mails was subject to and should have paid transient rates of postage, and to permit it to pass otherwise constitutes a crime; but the supreme impudence and gall consists in folding Democratic campaign documents into Republican newspapers."

"Stuffing Republican papers committed to the United States mail for transmission and delivery with Democratic campaign documents will prove a troublesome enterprise for Bourbon postmasters."

"Any of our subscribers who received a Bourbon campaign supplement folded into their Republican last Wednesday are hereby informed that the nasty business was done by Democratic postmasters throughout the county. Our friends have done right in returning them to this office, and we give them a pointer that there will be some loud squealing in connection with this mattter further along. If the sanctity of the mails are not to be preserved the people will know the reason why. The United States courts are not in the hands of judges who will tolerate that kind of business in Ohio by a considerable majority."

I inclose the letter of W. K. Mills, etc., who claims to have witnessed one transaction.

I need not add to the suggestions already made.

The Department will have no trouble to ascertain how, when, and by whom this whole matter has been done.

Yours, truly,

C. H. GROSVENOR.

ENON STATION, OHIO, August 21, 1888.

General GROSVENOR,
Washington, C. D.:

Noticing your resolution to investigate the violation of the postal laws as regards the sending of the Tax Reform Advocate, will say that they are being sent to this place by express from Columbus. I have seen the express bill, containing charges, being sent to the postmaster for distribution.

Yours, respectfully,

W. K. MILLS.

Extracts from the postal laws and regulations of 1887:

* * * * * * *

STATE OF OHIO, Franklin County, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Fred Krumm, who, first being duly sworn, says that he is the duly appointed and qualified assistant postmaster of Columbus, State of Ohio; that on or about the 15th day of August, 1888, C. Q. Davis, editor of the Tax Reform Advocate, submitted his affidavit on Form No. 3214 with $100 for prepayment of postage, and after full examination, being satisfied of his right under the postal laws and regulations to have the Tax Reform Advocate admitted as second-class matter, a "temporary permit," in accordance with subsection 2, section 333 of postal laws and regulations, was by me filled out and issued to him, and his affidavit above-noted, together with a copy of the paper, at once forwarded to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, at Washington, D. C., in compliance with the postal laws and regulations, for final disposition. By authority of above-named "temporary permit," the Tax Reform Advocate was allowed to pass through this office as second-class matter, beginning on or about August 15, 1887, and under date of August 16, 1888, this publication is admitted to the mails as second-class matter by authority of the honorable Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

STATE OF OHIO, Franklin County, ss:

Charles Q. Davis, being first duly sworn, says that he is editor of the Tax Reform Advocate, issued at Columbus, Ohio, and recently admitted to the mails as second-class matter at that post-office. Affiant says that since the original application for the admission of said publication to pound rates that no change in the purpose or intent of the publication have been made that in any manner alters the face of his original affidavit; that at this time he has a bona fide subscription list in excess of 3,000 copies. Affiant further says that he has sent no packages of his paper by express to Enon, Ohio, Oxford, Ohio, or any other postmaster, and that he has in all regards endeavored to comply with the rules and regulations of the Post-Office Department in the handling of his paper. Further deponent sayeth not.

A. R. HOLMES,
Cincinnati, Ohio:

Yours of the 3d at hand, and will say the same to you as I did to General GROSVENOR, that I saw a bundle of the papers (Tax-Reform Advocate) that came via Erie Express to the postmaster at Enon. I saw the way bill and the charges on same, namely, 25 cents. Also, the same paper came in same manner to the postmaster at Mad River post-office.

Yours, respectfully,

W. K. MILLS,

P. S.—Can produce all the evidence you may wish as to the above facts.

POSTMASTER AT ENON, OHIO:

It has been charged that you have received a package of Tax-Reform Advocates by express, and distributed same through your post-office without prepayment of postage. If such is the fact please give to me the numbers so distributed, with the explanation of how it occurred you did so. But if it is not so please state the facts under oath and return affidavit to me at Cincinnati, Ohio, by first mail.

Yours, truly,

A. R. HOLMES, Post-Office Inspector.

P. S.—This charge relates to Tax-Reform Advocate, and not to the supplement sent out by the Democratic executive committee.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Oxford, Ohio, September 5, 1888.

D. O. Corcoran, being first duly sworn, deposes as follows: I am forty years of age; I have resided in Oxford about six years; I have been postmaster at said place since March 12, 1888.

Q. Have you ever received any copies of a certain newspaper published at Columbus, Ohio, known as the Tax-Reform Advocate, at the Oxford post-office; if so, how were said papers received?

A. Copies of said paper have been received at said office. They came regularly through the mail just as other second-class matter, with addresses thereon, and were distributed to the parties addressed just as any other mail matter.

Q. Have you ever received any copies of said paper by express, or in any other way except through the mails?

A. I have not. Said papers have always come to the office regularly through the United States mails, as other second-class matter comes, and still continue to come in the same way. I have never received any through any other channel. I have treated said paper just as I would any other newspaper received at said office in distributing it to the addresses. I receive lots of other newspapers about this time for patrons of the office which I am satisfied are not sent to them as regular subscribers; for example, I received last week about thirty copies of the Weekly New York Tribune, addressed to parties here who never have been receiving it before. It came as other second-class matter, and was so distributed. I have shown no partiality in management of the post-office.

ENON STATION, OHIO, August 22, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The Tax Reform Advocate, a lying, blackguard, free-trade paper edited in Columbus, is being sent to postmaster here by express prepaid; then delivered by said postmaster to any one who calls for mail. They are being largely circulated in this manner, in direct violation of the postal laws. Noticing your editorial in to-day's issue, I give you the manner in which they are working the scheme here and in surrounding country towns.

Yours, respectfully,

W. K. MILLS, Secretary.

Editor COMMERCIAL GAZETTE,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

[Referred to in report as Commercial Gazette correspondence.]

NEPTUNE, OHIO, August 25, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I notice an article in the Gazette concerning the distributing of campaign documents and papers illegally through the mails, which I have no doubt is being done and on a large scale. Last Wednesday, August 22, there was a large number of the Tax Reform Advocate distributed at our post-office at Neptune, published in Columbus, edited by Charles Q. Davis. Now, has this paper (or rather the editor) complied with the United States postal laws? I hardly think so. I think if the State Democratic committee can't afford to pay the postage on their documents they are getting hard up and had better throw up the sponge, which they will have to do the 6th of November, in my opinion.

If there is anything like violation of the postal laws and any evidence is wanted, I can send several names of persons that received those papers from the hands of our honorable postmaster at our place.

J. H. MURLIN.

Editor DAILY COMMERCIAL GAZETTE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Cincinnati, Ohio, September 6, 1888.

SIR: I have thoroughly investigated the charges made in the inclosed clipping from the Seneca County Record, of Bloomville, Ohio.

I called upon the editor of said paper to give me all the information he could in regard to the matter, names of all parties who had given him the information on which the article was based, names of all parties who had lost anything in the mails. He could give the name of only one person (G. F. Swigert) who had said anything to him about a loss. I went with the editor to see Mr. Swigert, who said that he had expected a letter in which he supposed there would be a postal-note or some money, and had never received the letter, but that he had since seen the writer of the letter, and he had informed him (Swigert) that there was no inclosure in the letter, nothing of value. I diligently inquired around for anybody who had lost anything in the mails, but heard of only one other loss, a man who said he had inclosed a five-dollar bill in an ordinary letter, addressed to a firm in Tiffin, which they claimed never to have received; but he never suspected that the loss occurred in the mails, but after its delivery at place of address. I heard of no one who had lost a postal-note.

I inquired of the editor to which one of the clerks he referred in his statement that "Our people have a holy horror, etc.;" he replied that he did not know to which one it referred. I then asked for the name of the person who gave him information about the matter; he said it was one W. S. Lowry, formerly a mail-messenger from depot to post-office. We called upon Mr. Lowry, who stated that he knew nothing about any losses or any carelessness or negligence upon the part of either of the clerks; and as to "fault-finding" of one of the clerks, it had nothing to do with the public, but referred simply to the clerks finding fault with the postmaster for not making up the mail as he thought it ought to be made up. The editor was compelled to acknowledge that there was no foundation for his charges.

The postal clerks on the Northwestern Ohio route are M. A. Ridenour and A. F. Ackerman, both men of good reputation, capable and efficient. They are, however, both Democrats, while this editor of the Seneca County Record is a Republican. This appears to be the cause of the charges, which investigation proves to be utterly groundless, without any foundation whatever in fact, and apparently arising only out of a desire of a reckless Republican editor to bring discredit upon Democratic postal clerks and the postal service; and also out of the natural disposition of a class of newspaper men to publish something sensational, i. e., to make "a mountain out of a mole-hill." The article referred to was extensively copied in other Republican newspapers in the State.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH TOWNSEND,
Post-Office Inspector.

A. R. HOLMES, Esq.,
Inspector in Charge, Cincinnati, Ohio.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORNEY. I call up the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

TRANSFER OF LANDS TO STATE OF LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10931) to donate and transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, subject to reversion to the United States in the event of their non-usage for quarantine purposes, and requiring the proper department of the United States Government to execute the necessary transfer to the State of Louisiana on conditions aforesaid, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendments be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 2 of the bill, strike out "donate and."

Page 1, strike out all after "seventy-five," in line 13 of the bill, down to and including "United States," in line 16, and insert: "Provided, That should the State of Louisiana at any time cease to use said lands for quarantine purposes, or should the same be needed for the purposes for which they were originally reserved, then the Government of the United States shall resume the possession of said lands on the order of the President, whose decision in the premises shall be final."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes the possession of certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, and for other purposes."

The amendments were agreed to.

CHARLES L. BRADWELL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5092) for the relief of Charles L. Bradwell, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let the amendments be read or explained.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Line 4 strike out "three" and insert "one."

Line 4 strike out "seven" and insert "five."

Line 5 strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-two."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the effect of those amendments?

Mr. CLEMENTS. This is a private bill, and the effect of the amendments is to reduce the amount which the beneficiary is to receive.

The amendments were agreed to.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House a bill (S. 2851)——

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNES. I wish to inquire by what rule this business takes precedence of a conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] rose and called up the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, but nevertheless I see this business is going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] chooses to interrupt this business by calling up the conference report he can do so, but the regular order is to lay these Senate bills before the House immediately after the reading of the Journal. The Chair lays before the House a bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

Mr. CRISP. The Senate has rejected the amendments of the House and requested a conference on the bill. I move that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for.

The motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 3467) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another and for the punishment of certain offenses; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN MISSOURI.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 3539) to amend an act to detach the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, from the eastern and attach it to the western judicial district of said State; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BLAND. The object of this bill is simply to cure a defect in an act which was passed a short time ago. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up and put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to detach the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, from the eastern and attach it to the western judicial district of Missouri," approved May 21, 1888, be so amended as to read as follows:

"That the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, be detached from the northern division of the eastern judicial district of Missouri and attached to the central division of the western judicial district of the State of Missouri."

SEC. 2. That all civil and criminal causes or proceedings pending in the courts of the United States for the northern division of the eastern district of Missouri which originated in said county of Audrain shall remain within the jurisdiction of said courts for that division until finally disposed of, and all offenses committed in said county against the laws of the United States before the passage of this act shall also be cognizable in the United States courts for the northern division of said eastern district until final disposition of the same.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House bills of the following titles; which were respectively read a first and second time, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120, in the city of Washington, on certain conditions—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 2877) authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REGISTERED-MAIL LOCKS, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, September 17, 1888.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, this request of the Senate will be complied with. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'DONNELL, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. DIBBLE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, for three days.

To Mr. DOCKERY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. DUNN, on account of the death of his little daughter.

ROAD THROUGH PLATTSBURGH MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MOFFITT introduced a bill (H. R. 11452) to construct a road from the village of Plattsburgh, N. Y., through and along the Government military reservation in said village; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SALE AND SHIPMENT OF SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS, ETC.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11453) to amend section 18, act of February 18, 1875, as amended by section 4, act of March 1, 1879, relating to the sale and shipment of malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EXTIRPATION OF YELLOW FEVER.

Mr. BARNES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11454) offering a reward of $100,000 to any person of any nationality who will discover the true cause or germ of yellow fever, with any certain means of effecting its prevention, destruction, or material modification, or who, without discovering the cause or germ of said disease, shall discover a certain and practical mode of effecting its prevention, destruction, or material modification; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. LAWLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11455) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. I now call up for consideration the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a privileged question, and the gentleman is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is not necessary that the report should be now read, as it has already been read and printed. When this matter was up last Friday it was generally agreed, I understand, that the only part of the report which was objected to was that relating to the Congressional Library; in regard to the residue of the report there was, I believe, no dissent. I now wish to show the House what is proposed by the conferees in this report.

This bill as passed by the House proposed to suspend all work upon the Library building, to repeal the law relating to the commission, to authorize the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives acting conjointly, to invite eminent architects, not exceeding five in number, to submit designs and general specifications for the Library building, $10,000 being appropriated for that purpose. The Senate disagreed to that proposition and presented another, to which the House refused to agree. The conferees have now presented the proposition before the House which I will endeavor to explain.

The Senate proposition was to continue work on the Library building, appropriating $1,000,000 for that purpose. The proposition now before us is to continue the construction of the Library building and to appropriate $500,000 "for the construction of the western front of the building and reading-room and book-repositories connected therewith, as shown by sketch termed 'Plan No. 1,' on file in the office of the Librarian of Congress." It is further provided that this money "shall be expended under the direction and supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall have the control and management of all of said work, and the employment of all persons connected therewith; and all contracts for the construction of said building or any part thereof shall be made by the Chief of Engineers of the Army."

The proposition also repeals so much of the first section as provides for a commission, together with the eighth section of the act authorizing the construction of the building, the act passed in January, 1886; "and the duties of said commission under said act are hereby devolved on the Engineer-in-Chief of the United States Army."

Now, Mr. Speaker, by this report it is proposed the Library building shall be turned over to the Chief of Engineers, that $500,000 shall be given to him, that he shall have full control of the construction of the building and of the employés and of the making of the contracts. He is limited and confined to what is known as the western front.

[Exhibiting the plan to the House.] There is the picture before the House. Any one can see it. The picture is taken from the Capitol.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does it give to the Chief of Engineers the right to select the material as well?

Mr. FORNEY. He has the right to make all contracts.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, in the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] that he said that he hoped this plan would not be adopted, and I will read what he said:

I hope this plan which I hold in my hand is within the view of every member. Here is a building 459 feet long; there [illustrating] is the width of it—44 feet—and it is to be 70 feet high. The chairman of the conference committee [Mr. FORNEY] does not know himself whether these connecting corridors are contemplated by the plan, but doubtless this is one [illustrating]. All the rest of the original plan is abandoned.

Mr. Speaker, any one who supposes we have what he said further on, "a building suitable for a ten-pin alley," "an architectural monstrosity," that it was 459 feet long—that is the impression he made upon the House—and only 44 feet in width, will be undeceived by looking at the plan which I have before me.

What are the facts? I have before me the original "Plan No. 1" referred to in this proposition. No gentleman can look at it without seeing what we get in this building. The length of the front toward the Capitol is 460 feet and the width from the central front to the end of the book-depositories from west to east is 300 feet, instead of the width being only 44 feet. The diameter of the rotunda or reading-room is 100 feet. It is marked A on this plan. Width of book-depositories, 144 to 160 feet (that is the building behind the west front and connected therewith throughout as an integral part of the same building); length of curtain (or corridor) connecting the main building (west front) with the corner pavilion, 100 feet; width of same at its narrowest part, 45 feet.

Mr. COBB. Is that the plan of the proposed building?

Mr. FORNEY. It is; and instead of being 459 feet by 44 feet, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, we have a building of the proportions I have just stated.

Mr. McCREARY. What part do you propose to build first?

Mr. FORNEY. The whole of that part. I presume that building will cost $4,000,000. We do not know exactly, as it depends on whether it shall be constructed of granite or marble.

Mr. PAYSON. Who determines that? Will the gentleman from Alabama say?

Mr. FORNEY. That will be determined by General Casey, Engineer-in-Chief of the Army of the United States. Under this bill it is proposed that all the duties conferred upon the Library Commission by the act to which I have already referred are to be devolved on the Engineer-in-Chief. Whatever were the duties imposed on that commission are devolved upon the Engineer-in-Chief; and I refer the gentleman to that act, where he will get a full and accurate statement of the duties of that commission.

Here we have a building, ample and sufficient for the next twenty-five years. We have in the Library over 600,000 volumes, and this building will hold, I suppose, one million more, sufficient for the next twenty-five years.

Mr. PAYSON. By what authority, and I ask in all deference, does the gentleman make that statement as to the book capacity of the plan he has now before him? The reason for my asking the question, and I will be frank if the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, is that the architect who drew that plan, Mr. Pelz, who is the associate of Mr. Smithmeyer, and who is the man who has done all this work, told Mr. HOLMAN and myself on Saturday last that the book capacity of this "Plan No. 1" will be insufficient for the needs of the Library when it shall be constructed. That is to say, there is not capacity enough in "Plan No. 1" for the present needs of the Library and the additions during the time there will be required to construct it. That statement was made to us on Saturday last. I ask, therefore, what authority the gentleman has for stating the book capacity of this proposed "Plan No. 1" is upwards of a million of volumes?

Mr. FORNEY. It is the evidence of Mr. Spofford, one of the commissioners, before the Senate committee.

Mr. PAYSON. I should be glad to have a reference to it.

Mr. FORNEY. I will do that later on.

Mr. RYAN. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that it was represented to the managers on the part of the House in conference, and I think I have a right to state it here, that the Librarian, Mr. Spofford, is authority for the statement that it will be sufficient for the purposes of a library for the next quarter of a century, and perhaps more.

Mr. FORNEY. I will look the matter up for the information of the gentleman.

Mr. PAYSON. In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this matter, I would be glad to have the recollection of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] upon that point as to the capacity of this building on the authority of Mr. Pelz on Saturday last.

Mr. HOLMAN. The statement made by the gentleman from Illinois is, of course, correct.

Mr. FORNEY. I have the information here at hand, showing the testimony taken upon this point. Mr. Spofford in his statement says:

1. The requirements of the growing Library and the necessary storage of copyright publications, the entries of which now exceed 36,000 annually, will demand ultimately every foot of space embraced in the foundation plan of the building, being nearly three acres.

Then he goes on further to say in answer to the question of the chairman:

Q. Suppose the building contemplated in Plan No. 1 should be constructed, for what length of time, in your judgment, would that accommodate the growing wants of the Library?

A. From the present rate of accessions, I have computed that it would be ample for storage for fifteen years to come.

So it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that with the continued annual increase, estimated at 36,000 volumes, this building, according to the testimony of the Librarian himself, is sufficient for the next fifteen years. That is my authority for the statement I have made. We have a building, then, that is not only sightly in appearance, but sufficient for all of our purposes, the accommodation of the public Library, for a generation to come.

Again, as to the "architectural monstrosity" of which the gentleman from Illinois speaks, Mr. Spofford says, in response to questions:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. We were looking into this matter a little further. Some things occurred to us upon which we were not quite clear. We had doubt about the appearance of the building. What do you think of that? Will it be an ornate building?

A. It will be, from the Capitol, a very sightly edifice. From other points of view, as you go along the sides, it will be neither sightly nor unsightly. It will look somewhat like any unfinished building. Some of the walls will not be ornate, but it will be a most creditable and handsome building. You must observe that there will be nothing visible from the Capitol except a very handsome façade or elevation.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. The top of the dome will show?

A. Very slightly. The dome is to be kept down because of the immediate vicinity of the Capitol. It would not do to have a public building that would be soaring in character so near this magnificent Capitol, which ought to be left the unique ornament of Capitol Hill.

Q. What is to be the height of the dome?

A. It will be less than 110 feet.

Q. What is the height of the Dome of the Capitol?

A. Two hundred and eighty-eight feet. My idea is to have no roof visible; that is the handsomest building which exhibits a fine front elevation or façade.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. According to the plan, what will all this part of the building [indicating] be used for? Here is the Library reading-room [indicating], and here are the alcoves around it, and here are the repositories for books.

A. They will be filled to the utmost capacity with the existing Library and the growth for the coming fifteen years. This section will be used primarily, nearest to the Library, for the copyright and record rooms, and for lesser-sized rooms for Senators and Representatives to have a quiet place to study, which they never can have in this Capitol.

This work is proposed to be placed under the control and management of the Chief of Engineers, General Casey. Some gentlemen may be inclined to question the wisdom of that selection and say, "Who is the Chief of Engineers, and why give him control of the matter?" The other day, Mr. Speaker, he was selected from the Army to fill the position of Chief of Engineers by the President. He comes highly indorsed; he was nominated by Mr. Cleveland for that position, and confirmed by a Republican Senate. He is not only able but has had experience, and his work has been tested in the past. We know him as having had charge of the Washington Monument. We know that he has also had control and charge of the building known as the State, War, and Navy building, and that he discharged his duties not only faithfully but with signal ability, and at a saving of immense sums to the Government; and in this connection I wish to call the attention of the House to what was really done in that regard by him. We commenced the construction of the State, War, and Navy Department building in 1871. The construction was under the control of the Secretary of State, who had exclusive charge of it. The designs for the building were prepared by Mr. Mullett, who was three or four years engaged in building the south wing of that building, what is now known as the State Department wing.

The cost of the south wing was $3,373,939.35. Colonel Casey had nothing to do with that portion of the building, but in course of time there was much noise and confusion here about something going on wrong—something rotten in Denmark—in connection with the work of that building, and the charge or control of the work was changed. In course of time it came under General Casey's charge, the present Chief of Engineers. He had exclusive control of the building of the north wing, identical in all respects with the south wing, both having the same plans, containing the same floor space—I think about 73,241 square feet. Colonel Casey took control of that construction and finished that portion of the building at a cost of $1,914,501.99, a saving to the Government, to the people, and to this country of $1,459,437.36.

Mr. SOWDEN. You mean as compared with the south wing?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes. He went on, Mr. Speaker, with the same result in connection with the west wing. The east wing was not under his control during the whole time, and cost $2,617,287.43, against the cost of the west wing, precisely like it, under Colonel Casey's charge, of $1,773,476.24, showing really that that building under the charge of Colonel Casey, the gentleman who has lately been appointed the Chief of Engineers, was constructed at a saving of over two and a quarter millions of dollars to the people. So I think we need have no fear of intrusting to him the new Library building.

But the gentleman from Illinois says that this is an architectural monstrosity. Here we have a man who understands his business. Colonel Casey has had wide experience. He is skilled in his profession. He is honest, and he has the power under this very law to change the matter as he moves along. He has a right to make modifications here, so that instead of being an "architectural monstrosity," it will be, if constructed on the present plan, like the building the drawings of which are now in front of you.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman from Alabama understand that there can be specific modifications of the plan under the amendment proposed by the conferees?

Mr. FORNEY. Whatever modifications General Casey thinks are in the interest of the country he will have a right to make. Of course he could not vary materially from the plan.

Mr. PAYSON. And that the material out of which it is constructed, the entire arrangement, and all the details are to be committed to him?

Mr. FORNEY. Unless Congress shall hereafter determine differently. We require a report annually, and of course Congress will retain the power in its own hands.

Mr. PAYSON. And the gentleman from Alabama thinks that a proper discretion to be confided to any one man?

Mr. FORNEY. I think it is a proper discretion to confide to him. But to whom is it confided now? You have a commission of three persons; and I would rather have it in the hands of a man like General Casey than in the hands of any commission. We know he can be trusted. We have had experience of his capacity. Whom do you propose to give it to? A commission? You have done that already, and what is the result?

We want the House to understand that that building has cost us over a million dollars already. We gave $585,000 for the site, and for the building we have appropriated $500,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORNEY. I understood that we were to commence over again, and that I should have an hour.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] may be allowed to proceed without limit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama had fifteen minutes of the hour remaining from Monday. Is there objection to the request that he be permitted to proceed without limit? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCCREARY. I would like the gentleman from Alabama to explain to the House how much work has been done already. It is impossible for us to get in there and see for ourselves.

Mr. FORNEY. I do not know. But we have spent over $1,000,000.

Several MEMBERS. We have a hole in the ground.

Mr. MCCREARY. Has the foundation been finished?

Mr. FORNEY. I do not think it has. We gave them $500,000. Payments have been made on rolls and vouchers of $195,349.56; payment of other expenses $304,000. Now here are liabilities now existing of $298,142, on miscellaneous accounts about $1,500, a balance remaining available of $5,007.76. This is in addition to the $585,000 for the site. One million dollars has gone somewhere. Now, I think it is time to make a change, and we have brought in Colonel Casey. He does not get any pay and he does not seek this job. He is a conscript. We direct him to do this thing. He is the right man, and you need have no fear about his doing it well. In one building that would have cost $15,000,000 for construction if the construction had been allowed to go on under the Secretary and some architects, Colonel Casey was placed in charge and it only cost about $10,000,000. In this case it would be the same. He has the right, if it is to become a monstrosity, to change it, and he knows how to do so, because he is learned, skilled, and in every way fit for the position.

Now, here is the report of the Library Committee. I want the gentleman from Illinois to learn from it what books the proposed building would hold.

Mr. PAYSON. What report is that?

Mr. FORNEY. I do not know. It is a House report, first session Forty-eighth Congress, on the Congressional Library building.

Mr. PAYSON. Is that the Singleton report?

Mr. FORNEY. I read this from the report:

> The proposed building, as stated, will contain 3,000,000 volumes with suitable economy of storage. It is not designed to fit up the whole interior at once with iron shelving, but to introduce it gradually, finishing off the central portions, rotunda, and connecting rooms and entire exterior structure. The chief element of cost is in the iron alcoves of the interior, and in a building so extensive these may be finished in successive years, as wanted for the increase of books. The most carefully guarded estimates of cost contemplate an expenditure of $500,000 the first year, about $1,000,000 the second, and $800,000 the third, which will complete the building for occupancy in all its parts sufficient for shelving 1,000,000 books.

Mr. PAYSON. That refers to this plan.

Mr. FORNEY. That refers to this plan. So, then, Mr. Speaker, the proposition of the conferees on the part of the House at the present time is to ask you to give $500,000 to continue the work on the Library building, and at the end of four or five years we will have a Library similar to the one you see in front of you, 460 feet long by 300 feet in width, and it will hold all the books necessary for the next twenty or thirty years.

Now I wish to reserve the remainder of my time and yield to gentlemen in their own time.

Mr. PAYSON. Why have the Senate and the conferees on the part of the House agreed to abandon this original plan for the construction of the entire building? What information have they received which causes them to recommend the repeal of the law as to the entire plan? I would be glad to have the gentleman state that.

Mr. FORNEY. We understand that the completion of this plan would cost some $14,000,000. We did not think the country required that at this time and we proposed to cut it down to about $4,000,000. This is the only way we could get out of it, and the best way. So we took Colonel Casey, a man whom we can trust—because it seems that everybody can not be trusted—and in that way we get a magnificent building at a cost of $4,000,000, depending upon what material Congress may direct Colonel Casey to construct it of—granite or marble.

I wish to call the gentleman's attention to our proposition, which repeals the law so that there can be no trouble hereafter about this other plan. We cut that off entirely, and confine ourselves simply to a building to be known as the "West Front." Here is the proposition:

> And so much of said act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library," approved April 15, 1886, as authorizes the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library and as provides for plans for the same, excepting only so much of said building as is shown by the sketch termed "Plan No. 1," on file in the office of the Librarian of Congress, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

So that if the proposition of the conferees be adopted, we shall have but one building, which will be known as the "West Front," 460 feet long and 300 feet through the center, furnishing sufficient space to contain all the books that the country will need in the next fifteen, twenty, or thirty years.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, necessary absence after to-day causes me to occupy a few minutes now in calling attention to the appropriations that have been made at this session of Congress. For the first time in my life I believe, as my remarks deal largely with figures, I have reduced much of what I have to say to writing, and, with the permission of the House, I will now proceed to read it.

Mr. Speaker, the work of the first session of the Fiftieth Congress is almost completed. At least, we have long passed the ordinary time of adjournment. I avail myself of the present opportunity to present a statement for the consideration of the House of the regular annual estimates for the service of the Government for the fiscal year 1889, and the appropriations therefor. I also submit a comparison of the regular annual estimates for four years under Republican administration (Mr. Arthur's), and for the four years under Democratic administration (Mr. Cleveland's), afterwards submitting facts touching the increase of offices under this Administration, and the increase of salaries, with such other facts as may bear upon the present fiscal condition of the Government, and that may be of interest to the House to consider. I will proceed in order:

REGULAR ANNUAL ESTIMATES.

The regular annual estimates for the fiscal years 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1889 amount to	$1,052,442,148.17
For the years 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885 they aggregated	939,122,356.14
Increase for four years under Cleveland's administration	113,319,791.23

I insert a table showing these estimates by years:

Regular annual estimates.

	Estimates.
1889	$268,453,728.68
1888	259,206,768.16
1887	268,220,849.98
1886	256,560,801.35
Total	1,052,442,148.17
1885	215,082,346.32
1884	270,003,235.21
1883	257,001,290.48
1882	197,035,484.83
Total	939,122,356.94
Increase of estimates for 1886 to 1889, inclusive, over estimates for 1882 to 1885, inclusive	113,319,791.23

The law requires the Secretary of the Treasury to forward to each Congress on the first Monday of December estimates made by the different Departments of the Government for their support for the coming fiscal year. As the Executive directs the expenditures of all moneys appropriated for the service of the Government, and in the main appoints the agents for its expenditure and disbursement, the law presumes that he should have complete knowledge as to the necessities of the service in every branch of the Government; and the very object of submitting estimates is to inform Congress, which grants the money from the Treasury for the public service, what the necessities of that service are. The Republican party held power continuously from 1861 to 1885. It will be noted that during its last four years of power the estimates submitted to Congress asking appropriations of money for the public service were, in round numbers, $113,000,000 less than was asked and estimated for by Mr. Cleveland's administration. When the estimates are received, as gentlemen are aware, they are printed and referred to the appropriate committees by the House for consideration, and reported with favorable or unfavorable recommendation to the respective Houses for consideration and action. In this way the estimates submitted by the administration ripen into appropriations of money for the public service.

REGULAR ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The regular annual appropriations, including deficiencies and miscellaneous, for the years 1885, 1887, 1888, and 1889 amount to	$1,039,558,444.42
And for the years 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885 to	943,173,130.63
Increase under four years of Cleveland's administration over four years of Arthur's administration	96,385,313.79

I call attention to the fact that the regular annual appropriations for the last four years under Cleveland exceed those under Arthur by over $96,000,000; and I insert in my remarks a table showing the appropriations for these years, respectively, and a comparison between the same.

* Approximated on the basis of $1,000,000 increase over amount of general deficiency, as passed by the House.

† This amount ($2,500,000) covers various bills pending for miscellaneous objects, and which will probably become laws.

The regular annual appropriations made at this session of Congress for the fiscal year 1889, as will be seen from the above table, amount to $307,474,557.15. A part of the service of the Government is provided for by permanent appropriation. Among these items permanently provided for is the interest on the public debt, the sinking fund, the customs service, etc. The estimate of expenditures for these purposes can be closely approximated and are fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury for 1889 at $115,640,793.90, making the grand total of regular annual and permanent appropriations for the fiscal year 1889 $423,115,356.05.

The estimated revenue for the fiscal year 1889, as submitted by the Administration, from all sources—customs, internal revenue, public lands, etc.—amounts to $440,563,734.32, which will leave a balance of surplus revenue in the Treasury, after paying the above appropriations for the coming year, of $17,448,378.27.

I am satisfied that this estimate of revenues is quite liberal for the coming year, and will be under, rather than over, that amount at the close of the year.

The attempt at legislation changing the revenue laws has attracted the attention of the country, and the uncertainty as to what is to be the action of Congress, as well as to what will be the policy of the incoming administration, to be chosen in November next, necessarily affects business throughout the country and will be felt in the revenues of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, it is but fair that I should call attention to the fact that the President gave a pocket veto last year to the river and harbor bill, thereby suspending many meritorious works connected with the public improvements throughout the country, which was followed by loss to the Government in the wear and destruction of partially completed work. All this, as deemed by Congress, called for a larger appropriation for the improvement of rivers and harbors, this year amounting to over $22,000,000, than is ordinarily made. These appropriations for the year 1889 are much larger than any made since the close of the period of extraordinary war expenses. The appropriations for 1889 over 1888 are $58,900,566.31. The increase over 1884 is $75,480,909.52.

But, Mr. Speaker, this is not all. I call attention to the fact that to complete the new ships authorized since the commencement of Cleveland's administration, and the monitors, will cost, in addition to the appropriations heretofore and this year made, in round numbers, $18,000,000, while the armament of these ships, in addition to the appropriations made, will cost $9,000,000. We have also passed at this session of Congress a fortification bill providing for the purchase of guns and mortars at a cost, in addition to appropriations made, of $6,000,000, making a grand total of expenditures authorized and to be appropriated for in the coming fiscal years of $33,000,000.

The estimates as to the cost of ships and armament are made by the appropriate bureaus of the Navy Department. With this enormous expenditure authorized and made necessary by the enactment of law, and the work entered upon or to be entered upon during this fiscal year, it is plain to all that the appropriations in the immediate future for the public service will probably be increased rather than decreased.

I call especial attention to the fact that the increase of appropriations for 1889 over those for 1888 amounts to $58,900,566.31. The increase of appropriations for 1889 over those of 1884 amounts to $75,480,909.52. Many of the items of appropriation no doubt are proper. Perhaps I may say most of the appropriations are proper. But when we recollect that in the canvass of 1884 the Democratic rallying cry was that the public service was honeycombed with corruption and extravagance, and that a change should be had in the conduct of public affairs so that an era of economy might be restored to the country—I say in the light of all that, this increase of appropriations over those made under Republican administration is significant. One of two things is true, either the Republican administration was wonderfully economical—we all recollect that it was efficient—or Mr. Cleveland's administration is wonderfully extravagant. The truth is, both statements are true.

POSTAL SERVICE.

The increase of appropriations for the postal service has been most extraordinary. The appropriations for the postal service for the year 1889 are, in round numbers, nearly $61,000,000, while the average appropriations for the four years under Arthur's administration were less than $45,000,000 per annum, an increase under this present Administration for the year 1889 of $16,000,000 over that period.

I know that the country is growing and that there is necessarily a large increase in this branch of the public service, but the truth is that under Republican administration the estimates submitted by the administration for the postal service were not met by full appropriation. On the contrary it was the uniform practice of Congress to appropriate a much less sum than was asked for, while under Mr. Cleveland's administration, under the lead of the Post-Office Committee of the House, with my excellent friend Mr. BLOUNT at its head, the full estimates submitted by the Department have been given, and in one instance at least, as I am told, the suggestion went from the committee to the Administration that its estimates for the appropriations were not large enough, and an increased estimate was forwarded for the consideration of Congress and that estimate was appropriated for.

I do not complain at all of the proper expenses of the Government for this and other Departments, but I do state that the service of the Post-Office Department, as now administered and as it has been administered under this Administration, is far below, in efficiency and promptness, the service under Republican administration. I need not instance wherein this service has fallen off, but state the fact, and its truth will be recognized by almost every citizen throughout the country, because all come in contact with this service.

ORDINARY EXPENDITURES.

The ordinary expenditures of the Government for the years 1886, 1887, and 1888, excluding postal service and sinking fund, were	$778,340,119.60
Add the ordinary expenses of the postal service for the same three years	159,360,597.65
Total	937,700,717.25
While the ordinary expenditures of the Government for the years 1883, 1884, and 1885, except for the postal service and sinking fund, amounted to	769,761,316.98
Add postal service	140,553,739.91
Total	910,315,056.89
Increase of three years, 1886, 1887, and 1888, over three years of 1883, 1884, and 1885	27,385,650.36

Mr. Speaker, it may be of interest to members to have a statement of the total ordinary expenditures of the Government for the year 1888, including the sinking fund and from postal receipts. I therefore insert the same in my remarks:

Total ordinary expenditures, 1888, as reported by the Treasury, for fiscal year	$267,924,801.13
Sinking fund	43,732,550.00
Expenditures from postal receipts	52,898,322.90
Total	364,555,674.03

NOTE.—The amount stated as expended from postal receipts is the sum total of those receipts as ascertained for first three quarters of the year and approximated for the last quarter on basis of prior quarters.

INCREASE OF OFFICERS.

In the campaign of 1884 much was said upon the stump by the supporters of Mr. Cleveland about the army of unnecessary and over-paid officials fastened like barnacles upon the public Treasury, and the necessity for whose removal justified the election of Mr. Cleveland. In the light of this statement and the pledges of the Democratic party, I call attention to the new offices created by legislation since Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated. I hold in my hand a statement of the Clerk of the House of Representatives and Secretary of the Senate, made under the act of 1836; and from that statement and from an examination of the laws passed at this session it appears that there has been an increase of 799 new offices under this Administration; that the aggregate annual pay of 675 of these is $762,216.50, while 124 of them receive per diem pay estimated at an aggregate of $100,000 per annum. This statement does not include an army of additional employés provided for under his administration in the navy-yards, in public buildings, in the customs service, and the postal service.

I will attach to these remarks a statement in detail touching this increase of officers and increase of salaries, of which I will speak presently, as an appendix. Twenty-five of these new officials are to be found in the Agricultural Department, 45 in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, 35 in the General Land Office, and 100 in the Patent Office.

In the fluctuations of the service of the Government, in fairness I should state there has been some decrease in offices, but of slight consequence in comparison with the increases.

INCREASE OF SALARIES.

From this same official statement it appears that under Mr. Cleveland's administration the salaries of 350 officials have been increased, at an annual cost of $52,431.90. And after careful examination of this document and of the laws passed, I find that the number of salaries reduced under this Administration is 0, and the annual saving by reduction of salaries, 0.

Mr. Speaker, where, oh where is my honorable and honored friend from Indiana, Judge HOLMAN? Why is his harp hanging on the willow? Why are the economists on the other side silent? What has become of the startling statements that vexed the ear but four short years ago, that salaries of public officials were extravagant and extortionate, and should be reduced if the Democratic party came into its kingdom?

I note a few of the increases of salaries: In the Agricultural Department, a botanist, who received $1,800 a year during all the past, is now increased to $2,000; a microscopist, from $1,800 to $2,000; an assistant entomologist, from $1,400 to $1,800; and the Commissioner of Agriculture himself has an increase of $500 thrust into his unwilling pocket, making his salary $5,000 per annum.

I do not object to paying proper salaries; but are the loins of these Democratic office-holders thicker than were the loins of their Republican predecessors? Are they more competent? Are they more vigilant? Do they perform better service for the Government? I am willing to let the public answer these questions.

CLEVELAND'S RECORD ON THE SURPLUS AND FINANCE.

Mr. Speaker, I will present the facts connected with and covering the fiscal policy of this Administration, and when presented I will ask the members of the House and others to draw the proper conclusions from the facts I shall present. For after all, actions of men and public officials speak louder than words. Professions of economy and otherwise can be made by any one. But "it is not every one that sayeth, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom."

Mr. Cleveland, on the 25th of February, 1885, before he was inaugurated as President, wrote a letter to Hon. A. J. Warner, then a member of the House, in which, at considerable length, he argued the necessity, which he claimed to be immediate and imperative, of instant legislation authorizing the suspension of the coinage of silver. If Congress failed to give that legislation and give it at once, he predicted bankruptcy and destruction to the business interests of the country. I know of no public paper, not excepting his last annual message to Congress, that was so positive in its statements and direct in its conclusions as his letter to General Warner. Congress refused the legislation, and has refused it since. And the country still survives.

Further than this, Mr. Cleveland, in his first annual message to Congress, December, 1886, strongly recommended legislation authorizing the discontinuance of the coinage of silver. More than that, he appointed Mr. Manning as his Secretary of the Treasury; and Mr. Manning, in his first report, at great length sought to convince the judgment of Congress and of the country that it was absolutely necessary to enact legislation authorizing the suspension of silver coinage and the retirement of United States Treasury notes, commonly called greenbacks. In addition to all this, it is in the recollection of gentlemen that the President's chosen friend and representative, Manton Marble, was sent to Europe to discuss the problem of bimetalism, and a little later on Congress was deluged with the result of his observations and a strong recommendation for the suspension of silver coinage.

In all this Mr. Cleveland had proved himself to be in harmony with and active for the interests of those citizens of the United States who mostly center in and congregate about Wall street; who have fixed incomes, large blocks of wealth, and are interested in having the purchasing power of their money appreciated.

THE SURPLUS.

From the time of Cleveland's inauguration to the present, in almost all of his messages and public utterances to Congress and otherwise, he has discoursed upon the subject of the surplus in the Treasury. The surplus has been his care by day and his burden by night.

I desire to examine the facts touching the surplus in the Treasury, its accumulation, and the reasons therefor. It had always been the policy of the Republican party to use the surplus revenues in the payment of the interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States. So thoroughly did President Arthur carry out this policy that on the 4th day of March, 1885, when Cleveland was inaugurated, as shown by the finance report of 1885, pages 12 and 13, the net cash balance (surplus) in the Treasury was only $8,764,590.11.

I here insert in these remarks a statement of the net cash balance, or surplus, in the Treasury on the last day of each month from July 31, 1885, to August 31, 1888, inclusive, as follows:

Net cash (surplus in Treasury) on dates stated, as shown by public debt statements.

August 31, 1888	107,673,320.92

From the above it will be seen that by July 31, 1885, the surplus had increased from $8,000,000, in round numbers, on the 4th of March, 1885, to $44,000,000, in round numbers. Month by month it steadily increased, until the 31st day of December, 1885, it had amounted up to $71,000,000, and on the 31st day of July, 1886, to $80,000,000.

There were outstanding, payable at the option of the Government, when Grover Cleveland was inaugurated, $194,000,000 of 3 per cent. interest-bearing bonds. Instead of paying these bonds with the surplus in the Treasury, the President allowed the surplus to accumulate until in July, 1886, the House and Senate united in passing an act directing that when the surplus or net cash balance in the Treasury exceeded $20,000,000 the President of the United States should call and pay not less than $10,000,000 of 3 per cent. bonds per month. Mr. Manning, then Secretary of the Treasury, insisted that in addition to the $100,000,000 in specie held for the redemption of greenbacks there should be a working balance of $20,000,000 in the surplus fund. Congress agreed with him, and so passed the act. This was near the close of the first session of the last Congress, the Forty-ninth. The act went to the President for his approval; and setting a precedent which he has followed in many instances since, he held it for ten days, as he might under the Constitution, knowing that Congress would adjourn before that time. In other words, he gave it a pocket veto. And the surplus remained in the Treasury, and the bondholder still continued to draw his interest on his bond.

However, the Congressional elections were approaching in November, 1886, and this action upon the part of the President aroused so much indignation throughout the country that, for the purpose of affecting the elections, as I charge and believe, and perhaps also in compliance with a positive public opinion, he proceeded to call and pay the 3 per cent. bonds in installments. If he had used the surplus in the Treasury to call and pay the 3 per cent. bonds they would all have been paid in October, 1886, and the most of them long prior to that time. And the truth is, they were not called and paid in full until July, 1887. If this idle money in the Treasury had been promptly paid upon 3 per cent. interest-bearing bonds the people would have saved $4,000,000, in round numbers, of interest that had to be paid on account of the action, or rather the non-action, of the President.

On the 31st day of August, 1887, with the 3 per cent. bonds all paid, the surplus had again mounted up to $44,000,000. There were two policies open to the President to pursue. One was to purchase 4½ per cent. interest-bearing bonds, due the 1st of September, 1891, of which there were then outstanding $244,000,000, and of which there is now outstanding $220,000,000; or the bonds bearing 4 per cent. interest, due on the 1st of July, 1907, of which there are outstanding over $700,000,000; or the bonds bearing 6 per cent. interest, due in 1895 and 1896, of which there were then and are now outstanding $64,000,000. The interest-bearing 4½ per cent. bonds due in September, 1891, were worth, on the 1st day of September, 1887, 8½ per cent. premium. It cost to buy a $100 bond on the 1st of September, 1887, $108.50. It will cost to pay a $100 bond on the 1st of September, 1891, $100. In the mean time four years' interest at 4½ per cent. will have been paid, amounting to $18; total, $118. The purchase of these bonds with the surplus on the 1st of September, 1887, would have saved to the pockets of the people $9.50 on every $100 bond.

The other policy open to the President was to pile up the surplus revenues in the Treasury. He chose the latter policy. But as the money lay idle in the Treasury withdrawn from circulation, as a part of that policy he chose to deposit in the national banks, about two hundred and fifty in number, $60,000,000 of this surplus, without interest. Ever since the organization of the national banks the President has been authorized to use such banks as the necessities of the Government required, as public depositories. But always before this Administration they were only used as national depositories when the necessities of the Government demanded that they should be so used. The law provides that, as security for the Government deposit, the bank shall deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury United States bonds, and under the practice and regulation of Republican administrations the average deposit was $80 of money to $100 of bond security. Mr. Cleveland's administration, to make it easy for the banks and get the money back into circulation, increased the deposit of money upon the bond security filed by the banks to $100 and $110 for every $100 bond deposited. In the very nature of things this increased the value of the bond; because it gave them another and more valuable use than they had before. These banks were loaded up with Government deposits through the Western National Bank of New York, which was organized and conducted by Mr. Cleveland's late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Manning, and his late Treasurer of the United States, Mr. Jordan, the latter of whom still conducts that bank.

Mr. Speaker, I find myself inquiring, why the President adopted the policy of accumulating this large surplus in the Treasury when he could have saved to the people over $8,000,000 by purchasing the 4½ per cent. bonds. Let facts answer the inquiry.

The President devoted the whole of his annual message at the beginning of this Congress, in December last, to the discussion of revenue legislation, practically recommending a revision of the tariff from the standpoint of revenue only, and urged the absolute necessity therefor arising from the existence of the large surplus in the Treasury which he himself had with so much pains artificially accumulated. In this message, anticipating that he would be criticised for not purchasing the 4½ per cent. interest-bearing bonds, he professed to doubt his authority to do so for the reason that the legislation was enacted upon an appropriation bill, forgetting or not knowing that over half of all the legislation resting upon the Federal statute-books was enacted upon appropriation bills; forgetting, too, as it seems to me, that the provision under which he draws his salary of $50,000 a year was enacted upon an appropriation bill. I read the law of 1881 so that the House and the country can again see whether there was doubt, legitimate doubt, touching its efficacy and permanent force. It is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds, provided that the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be redeemed and canceled.

It was so clearly the judgment of Congress that these bonds should be purchased with the surplus deposited in the national banks and in the Treasury, that on the 29th day of February of this year the House of Representatives, so far as it could, by its passage through the House, re-enacted the law of 1881. It went to the Senate. The Senate amended the House bill by providing for an increased coinage of silver, and sent it back to the House for its approval. The President, still retaining his dislike, amounting to almost hatred, for silver coinage, made haste to procure non-action upon the Senate amendment by the House; and to let himself down from the false position he had placed himself in by his message, and if possible relieve himself from adverse criticism for his failure to purchase interest-bearing bonds of the Government, through his friends in the House secured the passage of a resolution declaring, as the sense of that body, that the law of 1881 gave him the authority to purchase bonds with the surplus. This declaratory resolution was passed on the 16th of April last. Since that time the President has purchased $18,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds and $8,000,000 of 4½ per cent. bonds; and that is all. In the mean time the surplus in the Treasury increased until, on the 31st day of August last, it amounted to $107,000,000.

The $220,000,000 of bonds of the United States due in September, 1891, three years from now, can be bought to-day at 6½ per cent. premium. Why does not the President buy them? Of this $107,000,000 surplus $20,000,000, as claimed by the Treasury Department, should be held for a working balance, leaving the surplus that could be devoted to the purchase of bonds at $87,000,000. If applied to the purchase of $80,000,000 of 4½ percents the account would stand as follows:

If these bonds are not purchased, but run to maturity, it will cost to pay $80,000,000, the principal, 1st of September, 1891, $80,000,000; with three years' interest added, $10,800,000; making total $90,800,000. If purchased to-day, with the surplus, at 6½ per cent. premium, it will cost to pay for the same, $85,200,000, thus saving by the purchase thereof $5,600,000.

This would place the money now idle in the Treasury and deposited in the national banks in circulation among the people. What objection, what valid objection, to the purchase of these bonds can be made by the President or any one else? It is true, if the money were so expended it would effectually dispose of the surplus in the Treasury, and the revenues for the coming year would but slightly exceed the expenditures under the appropriations we have made during this Congress for the public service. It is true, too, that if this policy were pursued there would be no surplus with which to alarm the country. The artificial foundation which the President has built up to stand upon while he demands a revision of the tariff laws from the free-trade standpoint, would be swept away. It would then be out of his power to satisfy the free-trade sentiment in the South by harping about the surplus and the necessity for its reduction. It would seriously inconvenience the pet national banks of the Administration who now enjoy the $60,000,000 of deposits without interest. It would disgust the great importing interest of New York, that has its head and pocket in Europe and one of its hands in New York ready to gather profit by the increased importation of foreign goods and the levying of commissions on the sale thereof in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I say again there is but one correct course to pursue. Call in that portion of the surplus deposited with the national banks. That will relieve, in round numbers, $60,000,000 of bonds held for its security, and we will thus lower the price of the bonds that the Administration should purchase under the law.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion let me say I have hurriedly stated some facts concerning the fiscal policy of the Government under this Administration. When fully understood throughout the length and breadth of the country by the masses of the people they will correctly determine the reason why the President adopted such a policy.

Let me give my opinion now. The President came into power under a declaration in favor of one term, pointing out with great clearness the danger to the Republic from a second term, reflecting the sentiment expressed in the last clause of the fifth resolution of the national Democratic platform of 1872, which says: "It is imperatively required that no President shall be a candidate for re-election." No sooner was he elected, however, and inaugurated, than he began to pave the way for a renomination and, as he hoped, a re-election to the Presidency. The solid South, in favor of a tariff for revenue only, and New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, or their equivalent, would not only dictate his nomination, but, as he hoped, insure his election. And I am justified in saying, from the facts above detailed, that his fiscal policy was deliberately entered upon to satisfy the South, force a revision of the tariff from the standpoint of revenue only, and at the same time to secure the influence of the great wealth concentrated in our commercial metropolis of New York, including the importing interests of the country.

Mr. Garfield, in addressing the House at one time touching the appropriations for the support of the Government and the raising of the necessary revenue to pay the same, said:

A very wise man said many years ago concerning the finances of a European kingdom that if one of their annual budgets alone should survive the next deluge, if it were the only fragment left after dry land appeared, from that annual budget alone could be read and reconstructed the entire history of the nation.

I indorse the correctness of this statement, and assert that from the budgets covering the appropriations and the fiscal policy of this Administration, from the President's message to this Congress, from the President's policy in piling up the surplus in the Treasury instead of paying the bonds, and later purchasing the bonds, and from his recommendations from time to time touching the fiscal relations of the Government, that he deliberately conspired to weld the solid South together with Wall street, and upon the structure thus erected climb into a second term as President of the United States.

A word in conclusion. I do not believe that the revenues can be safely reduced, with the appropriations for 1889 staring us in the face, to the amount of $75,000,000, or $50,000,000, or even $30,000,000 per annum. If the Republican party comes into power, I have no doubt that with its experience, the intelligence of the people composing it, and their devotion to the country, it will be enabled to administer the affairs of the Government with greater economy and greater efficiency and that we can materially reduce the expenditures of the Government. Yet at least in one direction we would have to increase the expenditures of the Government under the pledges made in our platform and to carry out the real desire of the party. We are pledged to the enactment of laws giving just pensions to the soldiers of the late war. And as one member of that party, while I am in public life representing the people I will not be content until the soldiers of the late war are placed at least in as favorable a condition as to pensions by the laws of the country which they preserved as the soldiers of the Mexican war. In my opinion the tariff can not be successfully revised with safety to our industrial interests and to labor until it is revised by that party under whose policy the industries of the country have been diversified, and while I believe the friends of protection can and will amend our revenue laws as wisdom shall dictate, yet it is true according to present appropriations and expenditures there can not be any great reduction of revenues without causing a deficiency. I thank the House for its attention.

The following interruptions occurred in the course of Mr. CANNON'S speech:

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then, if I understand my friend, not only will there be no surplus, but there really will be a deficiency if these appropriations are made.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir. I will discuss that further on. But I will say to my friend at this point that these appropriations for the year 1889 are within $17,000,000 of the estimated revenues, and the estimates are certainly high enough. Gentlemen may say that these appropriations will not all be expended in 1889; but I took occasion yesterday to examine the records for a number of years back, and I found that, taking one year with another, the expenditures have usually been substantially equal to the appropriations. It is true that all the exact sums which we appropriate this year may not be paid out, but other money will go out of the Treasury in consequence of works heretofore provided for by law.

I hope I shall now have the undivided attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as I approach ground which I shall tread with hesitating steps, because of the pain which I will necessarily inflict upon the economists of this House who have built up their reputations by a quarter of a century of faithful watching, and are now doomed to have them all blasted in the twinkling of an eye. [Laughter.] I refer to the increase in the number of offices under this Administration.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, would it disturb the gentleman if I should ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman has something upon his mind which he desires to get off I will give him an opportunity to do so, and will put it in at the end of my manuscript. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I will not break into the gentleman's manuscript now. I would like to ask the gentleman a question at this point.

Mr. CANNON. I will hear the gentleman's question and answer it at the end of my remarks.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like very much to have it appear in the RECORD in connection with the statement which the gentleman has just made. I am quite sure the gentleman does not intend to be unfair.

Mr. CANNON. I have my remarks in manuscript, and if the gentleman wants to shine in the RECORD in connection with myself, he can do so at the end of my remarks.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe the gentleman has stated——

Mr. CANNON. A question, if you please.

Mr. TAULBEE. My question will appear presently. The gentleman read from his manuscript that over seven hundred new offices had been created. Now, I want to know whether he wishes to be understood that there have been more than seven hundred offices created in addition to the temporary force assigned to the Agricultural Bureau and the Pension Bureau from year to year?

Mr. CANNON. I meant to say just this: that by the official documents prepared annually under authority of law every year since 1836 by the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, whose duty it is made by law to prepare a statement of the new offices created, it does appear that these seven hundred and ninety-nine new offices of which I have spoken have been created since Grover Cleveland was inaugurated. That is what I say, and that is all I meant to say.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let me understand the gentleman. Is that in addition to the temporary force that was assigned during the year prior to the advent of this Administration—for instance, to the Agricultural Bureau, and the seed department, and the special examiners in the Pension Office?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly. I am speaking now from the official documents of the last Congress, and from a careful examination of the laws passed by this Congress. For the gentleman's satisfaction I will append to my remarks a statement in detail touching the increase in the offices and of salaries.

Upon that resolution, being an expression of opinion by such eminent financiers as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, all the gentlemen from Missouri, and the balance of us, the President agreed to commence buying Government bonds.

Mr. BLAND. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] vote for that resolution?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. Why, my friend, when you elect a President who has not sufficient knowledge of public affairs, or sufficient ability, to construe the laws, or sufficient patriotism to administer the laws, and who, for wise or unwise purposes, for pure or impure purposes, halts in their execution, or declines to execute them until I pass my opinion, I will pass that opinion every time, because it is the best I can do under the circumstances. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And, Mr. Speaker, although the President has failed to do this for months and for years past, and although he has outraged good sense and good judgment for months and for years past by that failure, even now, if he would come in to-morrow and buy eighty millions of those bonds, take the money out of the national banks and save that $80,000,000 of interest to the people, it would be worth more to him than ten thousand retaliation messages. I do not think that "burnt brandy" will save him, so far as the next election is concerned. [Laughter.] But if he wants to do some good electioneering, the course I have suggested is the best that he can adopt. That is what President Harrison is going to do shortly after the 4th of March next. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

[Mr. BURNES withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. BURNES. I do not see my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY], present, but in his behalf I now ask unanimous consent that further debate be limited to one hour upon the pending proposition, and fifteen minutes more which the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] desires to occupy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. PAYSON. I object.

Mr. BURNES. What time will suit the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PAYSON. I can not tell. If I may make a single suggestion, it seems to me that after the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] and my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] have consumed the greater part of a legislative day in discussing a matter with which this audience has no more concern than it has with the question of which animal first entered the ark, the suggestion comes with rather a bad grace from that quarter that only one hour shall be devoted to the discussion of a proposition which confessedly involves the expenditure of fourteen or fifteen millions of the public money.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] may proceed for one hour if he so desires.

Mr. PAYSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. In connection with that request, I would like to have permission to make a brief response to the hour speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I think that the discussion had better go on in the regular way. We understand well enough that there is not a quorum present, and no matter what conclusion may be arrived at, whenever any proposition is presented to which there is earnest opposition nothing will be done but raising the point of no quorum, a call of the roll, and probably a call of the House. The debate upon this Library proposition, if I may venture to say so, will not be entirely uninteresting. At all events, it will be more profitable than an empty roll-call, and I therefore suggest that the debate had better go on in the regular way. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] feels a deep interest in this discussion, not only in the subject-matter of the debate, but also in some of the gentlemen connected with it. Whether anything will be said which will require a reply from him I do not know.

Mr. FORNEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] proceed in his own hour.

Mr. PAYSON. Very well. Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to say to the House, though perhaps it is not necessary, that I shall endeavor to confine myself to the pending subject-matter, in a parliamentary sense, which is the adoption of the report of a committee of conference with reference to the further construction of the public Library building; it being conceded, as I understand, that of the different amendments, including this, which have been submitted to the conference there is only one about which there will be any discussion here, namely, the proposition with reference to the continuation of the construction of the building for additional accommodations for the Congressional Library as proposed.

I said to the House on Friday last, when I had the honor to receive its attention for a time, that, the bill being called up as it was without a moment's notice, I had not at hand the figures and records to verify accurately the statements which I then made or proposed to make as to dates, as to amounts, and as to details of the history connected with the erection of this building so far as it has progressed. And I regret that the duty seems to devolve upon me at the outset, in opposition to the views which have been presented by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] as chairman of the committee of conference, to take upon myself the burden of going somewhat into the details of the situation and in opposition to the committee. But I promised on Friday last that I would be ready on Monday, or as soon thereafter as I could get the floor, to state in a more methodical way and with greater accuracy some facts bearing on this question to which I then alluded.

The conference report now being considered is as follows:

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For continuing the construction for the building for the Library of Congress, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including the cost of all professional and other personal services that the Chief of Engineers of the Army may deem necessary for the prosecution of the work, and shall specially order to carry into effect the appropriation of money made for the construction of the said Library building, and to be paid from such appropriation for the construction of the western front of the building and reading-room, and the book repositories connected therewith, as shown by sketch termed 'Plan No. 1' on file in the office of the Librarian of Congress, $500,000. This appropriation and all appropriations hereafter made, and all sums available from appropriations heretofore made for this purpose shall be expended under the direction and supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall have the control and management of all of said work and the employment of all persons connected therewith. And all contracts for the construction of said building, or any part thereof, shall be made by the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and so much of the first section as provides for a commission, together with the eighth section of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library,' approved April 15, 1886, are hereby repealed, and the duties of said commission under said act are hereby devolved upon the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall annually report to Congress at the commencement of each session a detailed statement of all the proceedings under the provisions of this act, and hereafter, until otherwise ordered by Congress, no work shall be done in the construction of said Library except such as is contemplated on the sketch or 'Plan No. 1' herein referred to, and all contracts for work or materials outside of the space covered by said plan are hereby rescinded. And all loss or damage occasioned thereby or arising under said contracts, together with the value of the plan of said Library building submitted to the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress by John L. Smithmeyer in the Italian renaissance style of architecture, may be adjusted and determined by the Secretary of the Interior, to be paid out of the sums heretofore or hereby appropriated. All sketches, plans, and computations heretofore made under the commission created by the act of April 15, 1886, or hereafter made respecting said Library building, or any part of the same, shall be the property of the United States.

"And so much of said act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library,' approved April 15, 1886, as authorizes the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library and as provides for plans for the same, excepting only so much of said building as is shown by the sketch termed 'Plan No. 1,' on file in the office of the Librarian of Congress, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the proposed action in detail and as a whole.

The current newspapers condemn the delay caused by the action of the House, and it seems to be understood by them and by some members here that Congress in 1886, when it passed the bill authorizing the erection of this building, had full discussion and accurate information on which it acted, and therefore we are bound to continue as they began.

Others insist that Congress acted inconsiderately and without due prudence; that its steps were hasty—without due care.

All this is erroneous. Both positions are wrong, as I shall fully show.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that Congress did act with care and caution; that its acts were deliberate and prudent. But the trouble was Congress and its committees were all wofully, if not wilfully, deceived, and by those who had charge of the plan for the building we adopted. This I charge and will prove before I am through to-day.

I asserted on Friday last that Congress did not act without securing proper information, as it believed, and that the information it had, secured by its committees, where it expected and had a right to expect substantially accurate information, was wholly deceptive, totally misleading, and I charged then that the architect, Mr. Smithmeyer, was the person wholly responsible therefor; that the only fault to be found with the committee, if any is, is that they depended upon the statements of this man. I shall speak plainly as to him, but I wish to be understood that in what I say I have no personal feeling as to him as an individual. I should say the same as to any one in his place who has acted as he has. I do not know him. I never saw him till Saturday last, when I by accident happened to see him in a committee-room. Nor would I know him now should he pass me.

Mr. Speaker, it has been assumed, indeed alleged, on prior days, when this matter was up in the House, that the element of cost as to this building was not seriously considered, and that the principal question that Congress concerned itself about was the building, as a piece of architecture, to be grand, imposing, worthy the nation that was erecting it, and of the purpose to which it was to be dedicated, the housing of one of the great libraries of the world, and its adaptability to that end, and that the item of expense was in some way, if not overlooked, at least not specially noticed or cared for; and at all events, whatever was said or done by members of Congress as to that, the cost of the building, Mr. Smithmeyer was in no way responsible, for his opinion as to that was never asked or given by him; that he made no estimate of its cost and of course furnished none.

This, his friends, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], have earnestly asserted.

I read from the debate on September 1 in the House on that question:

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] that I would gladly see the whole scheme abandoned, but the reduced building which is proposed would not be an architectural abortion in the opinion of architects and those who understand such matters and are necessarily more familiar with them than most of us are. That partial building with a sloping down of the banks, it is said, would be a very respectable structure. I know nothing about architecture. That is the idea of men who understand this matter, as architects, much better than most of us do here.

I wish to add a word, and will then yield the floor to the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is a member of the committee to inquire into the Library building.

The one question is whether you will save by this proposition to expend the balance appropriated on the foundation for the reduced plan. The amount under the control of the commission is not large. It is the balance of the $500,000 already appropriated. Under the House proposition suspending the work and inviting new plans you will have plan No. 1, which is now in progress, and plan No. 2, the original plan which was before us when the House voted for the bill, and then we will have beside very valuable matter, that is, full information on the whole subject. As to the balance of the $ 00,000——

Mr. PAYSON. That was used in putting in the foundations.

Mr. MAISH. I wish to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MAISH. The question has already been asked, but the gentleman has not answered it. It is in reference to Mr. Smithmeyer, the honorable and worthy architect, a gentleman of high reputation. I want to ask if it is true as a matter of fact, as was alleged by the gentleman from Illinois, that Mr. Smithmeyer, the architect, submitted an estimate that the entire structure would cost only $2,500,000? I think that was the amount stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ought to answer that question, and yet I do not wish to do so without the testimony before me, and yet the testimony upon that point is neither satisfactory nor complete. Mr. Smithmeyer states emphatically, states under oath, that he made no definite estimate. There is a paper which he submitted, perhaps to the Senate committee, which had the matter in charge for a long time, for it was, as gentlemen know, a Senate measure, in which there was at least a partial estimate; but I am not able to state, either on the authority of General Singleton or any other person, Mr. Smithmeyer knew the terms of General Singleton's report or was cognizant of the preparation of the report, or that he made specific estimates of the cost of the building. The matter is singularly obscure.

Mr. KELLEY. I have always understood exactly to the contrary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have of course no personal knowledge on the subject, but I understand that this gentleman is a competent architect.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to read an extract from the report of General Singleton's committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. Coupling it with the statement that this is a report on a bill providing additional accommodations for the Library; and it will be remembered that Mr. Smithmeyer was on the committee and was in constant communication with the members of the House engaged in that service.

Mr. STEELE. Was a member of what committee?

Mr. PAYSON. A commission which was appointed to look into the question of the enlargement of the Capitol for this purpose; and he was in daily communication with the members of the House who were charged with the work during several Congresses while they were engaged in that duty.

This report goes on to state:

"The proposed building, as stated, will contain 3,000,000 volumes, with suitable economy of storage. It is not designed to fit up the whole interior at once with iron shelving, but to introduce it gradually, finishing off the central portions, rotunda, and connecting rooms, and the entire exterior structure. The chief element of cost is in the iron alcoves of the interior; and in a building so extensive these may be finished in successive years as wanted for the increase of books. The most carefully guarded estimates of cost contemplate an expenditure of only $500,000 the first year, about $1,000,000 the second, and $800,000 the third, which will complete the building for occupancy in all its parts sufficient for shelving 1,000,000 books and leaving space for the gradual introduction of additional iron alcoves in the coming fifty years, the ultimate gross cost of which will not exceed $700,000, or an average of less than $14,000 a year. When it is considered that the copyright fees paid into the Treasury amount to over $20,000 a year, while the pecuniary value of copyright publications received annually is very much greater than this, the expenditure will appear moderate in comparison with the great resulting benefits and the national importance of the work."

That makes the total cost of the building, with the exception of the additional shelving required, about $2,323,000.

Mr. STEELE. But Mr. Smithmeyer did not make any such report as that.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And it was not a report on plan No. 2 either.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no question that some one estimated the cost of the whole structure at $3,000,000. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Again—

Mr. PAYSON. Of course not; but I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to remember that the point of contention is whether the House did what it did understandingly.

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir; I understood the gentleman to be contending that Mr. Smithmeyer was responsible for this extension of the work according to the whole plan.

Mr. PAYSON. My friend does not seem yet to apprehend the point of contention.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, I do. You insist that while Mr. Smithmeyer proposed to put up a building which should be complete in itself and yet should constitute a part of a great building susceptible of enlargement so as to cover the whole ground purchased by the Government, he said the building would house 3,000,000 volumes and would cost only about $3,600,000. Mr. Smithmeyer never said that the building would cost $3,600,000, or any other precise sum.

Mr. PAYSON. But the chairman of the Library Committee, at that time Mr. Singleton, said that he said so. In a speech, a copy of which I now hold in my hand, Mr. Singleton stated that this estimate was made by Mr. Smithmeyer, the architect; and upon that statement the House voted. The same statement was made repeatedly in the Senate. And Mr. Smithmeyer was in the galleries and about these corridors; he visited members at their houses, as I happen to know, and he never disputed from that time until now what Mr. Singleton said he had stated. Mr. Singleton would go to anybody else for information; and the picture of the building, as designed by Mr. Smithmeyer, stood in this Hall for weeks in front of the Reporters' desk. The statements made at that time by General Singleton were never contradicted by anybody.

I have said, in a general way, Mr. Speaker, that the project of erecting a building for this purpose is not new or recent, it has been pending for years, was a prominent matter when I came to Congress; a necessity for some provision for the large stock of books we had was conceded. The condition of the Library in its inadequate and indeed inconvenient quarters the pressing need of additional facilities was appreciated. A half million books were crowded into a space insufficient for one half that amount. All kinds of literary productions, books, pamphlets, music, newspapers, periodicals, works of art, etc., miscellaneously piled on the floors and benches, all appealed, mutely, for accommodation, and so for years, various attempts were made to secure relief.

These resulted, sir, in the selection by the joint committee of Congress of three architects of recognized skill and attainments to examine and report to the committee fully as to the expediency of enlarging the Capitol for the purpose of securing additional room for the Library, or for a separate building if they should agree that the Capitol could not properly be enlarged.

Their report can be found in Senate Report 753, third session Forty-sixth Congress.

For the point now being presented, and which I beg the House to keep in mind, that is, that the element of cost was always hand-in-hand with any change or proposed building, these gentlemen reported that no enlargement of the Capitol was practicable in an architectural sense; that the cost of any such enlargement would range from $4,200,000 to $4,500,000, and all agreed that a separate building should be provided, and each submitted a plan, Mr. Smithmeyer among them, and to each of which I will allude later, but call especial attention to the fact that while Mr. Smithmeyer did not append to his separate report then an estimate of the cost of his structure in terms, he quoted approvingly from the American Architect of date April 19, 1879, that for less than the estimated cost of an extension of the Capitol—$4,000,000—an infinitely superior building could be built, and at the end of his report avers the same thing in about the same words.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Smithmeyer's plan was adopted by the passage of the act of 1886 as the best, and the question of its cost was constantly pressed and stated, not only by Mr. Singleton, chairman, and by members of the House committee, but by Senator MORRILL, chairman of the Senate committee, and Mr. Smithmeyer was quoted by all as the authority for the statement.

Mr. Singleton said in the committee report:

Any enlargement of the Capitol which would accommodate the Library even as it stands, with room to arrange it, would cost much more than a separate building, because it must necessarily be constructed in the same costly style, with carved Corinthian architecture. Mr. Walter, the former Architect of the Capitol, estimated the cost of an extension of the west front at $4,500,000. The present Architect, Mr. Clark, estimates it to cost $4,200,000, while the plan of a building adopted by the committee is to cost only $2,323,600.

* * * * * * *

The proposed building, as stated, will contain 3,000,000 volumes with suitable economy of storage. It is not designed to fit up the whole interior at once with iron shelving, but to introduce it gradually, finishing off the central portions, rotunda, and connecting rooms, and the entire exterior structure. The chief element of cost is in the iron alcoves of the interior, and in a building so extensive these may be finished in successive years, as wanted for the increase of books.

The most carefully guarded estimates of cost contemplate an expenditure of only $500,000 the first year, about $1,000,000 the second, and $800,000 the third, which will complete the building for occupancy in all its parts sufficient for shelving 1,000,000 books and leaving space for the gradual introduction of additional iron alcoves in the coming fifty years, the ultimate gross cost of which will not exceed $700,000, or an average of less than $14,000 a year. When it is considered that the copyright fees paid into the Treasury amount to over $20,000 a year, while the pecuniary value of copyright publications received annually is very much greater than this, the expenditure will appear moderate in comparison with the great resulting benefits and the national importance of the work.

He said to the House in his speech on the bill and report when the bill was passed:

Sixthly. If economy is to be our watchword, a separate building must be erected. Any extension of the Capitol heretofore proposed, affording adequate accommodations for the Library, even for twenty years, would involve an expenditure, according to the opinion of Mr. Walter, the former Architect of the Capitol, of $4,500,000, and according to the present Architect, Edward Clark, of $4,200,000, while the estimate for the building proposed by the committee, made by J. L. Smithmeyer, who drew the plan, will cost $2,323,600, making a difference in favor of the Government, according to Walter's estimate, of $2,176,400, or a saving of nearly one-half, and according to Clark's estimate a difference of $1,876,400.

Further along in the same speech Mr. Singleton used this language:

The appropriations asked for—

Showing what the bill contemplated, and that the amount proposed in the bill was for the erection of a building and was entirely outside and independent of the $600,000 appropriated for the purchase of the site—

The appropriations asked for will be $500,000 to begin the work, $1,000,000 at the next session to continue it, and $823,600 at the succeeding session to complete it. This, of course, does not embrace the purchase of the site. It is confidently believed that these sums will finish the building so far as needed at present and for many years to come; and no further outlay need be made by the Government, utilizing, as before stated, the fees from the copyright system to put in shelving, etc., to meet the growing wants of the Library.

Bear in mind, sir, that Mr. Singleton says that the estimates were "most carefully guarded" and "made by Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer, who drew the plans," etc.

Senator MORRILL said to the Senate, first in his report made at the same date that the reports of Clark, Esty, and Smithmeyer were made to the Forty-sixth Congress:

Tenth. It should be noticed that in the selection of a plan for the Library building, the difference in the estimate of the cost of the one selected and any others, would cover the entire cost of the site east of the Capitol. The question of economy, has, therefore, had due consideration, and need not be farther pushed.

JUSTIN S. MORRILL.

The Clark plan was to cost $4,924,343; the Esty plan $3,885,000, and the plan selected, Smithmeyer's, Mr. MORRILL said, was enough less than either to pay for the proposed site east of the Capitol, then estimated at a half million dollars, thus making the cost of the Smithmeyer building about $3,300,000, as I have charged, he, Smithmeyer, always to claim before we adopted his plan.

Again, Senator MORRILL said in his speech in the Senate on the bill, and I read only so much as relates to the question of cost:

This bill has the approval of the special committee and will not involve a larger expenditure than is rigidly required for an appropriate building, nor more than will harmonize with the views of the most careful and prudent legislators.

No question of submitting the building to the discretion of one, three, or five persons as to its cost. The cost had been ascertained and would commend itself to prudent, careful legislators.

Here is his language:

The estimate of the architect, for the building, constructed with limestone or sandstone, with three hundred alcoves, or sufficient for 800,000 or 1,000,000 volumes, with the heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and other fixtures, is $2,323,600. When fully completed there will be seven hundred additional alcoves, which will cost $700,000 more; and the entire completion of the whole interior, including the basement, will require a further sum of $239,000. This is a carefully revised estimate.

Is there any suggestion about its being an "approximate" estimate of the cost? No, sir; a carefully revised estimate, down to an odd hundred dollars, in the aggregate millions—

And shows that the building may be put into a condition of readiness to be occupied with very large accommodations at an expense already mentioned, and when it shall be hereafter completely finished, with a capacity to hold over 3,000,000 books, with facilities for even largely increasing even this vast stock when absolutely necessary, in addition to all of its other extensive and important accommodations, its ultimate cost will be $3,262,600.

Its ultimate cost, Mr. Speaker, its total cost, finished and complete, on the "estimate of the architect," was to be $3,262,600.

I am keeping in mind that the architect has said, and solemnly taken his oath, that he was not responsible for these figures; that he did not furnish them; that he did not know where Mr. Singleton obtained the information on which his report was based, etc.; in fact, that he has, in general and in detail, denied all responsibility for these figures and estimates. I am keeping this in mind, and intend to disprove it all—all that he has said, and fix the responsibility upon him for the error into which Congress was led in adopting the reports of Senator MORRILL and Mr. Singleton, and that Congress was deceived, innocently so far as its members were concerned, but by these estimates, which I shall prove upon this architect fully and completely before I close.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said on last Friday that the House of Representatives was informed by the present architect of this building, Mr. Smithmeyer, that its cost when entirely completed would not exceed the sum of $3,262,600. It was stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], as I have read to the House, and with the earnestness and vehemence for which he is noted, because of his sincerity in what he says, that no such estimate was ever made by Mr. Smithmeyer. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated to the House that his relations with that gentleman were of the most confidential character; that he had known him for years; that he had become interested in the construction of this building and its architecture from the fact that he had early been connected with library enterprises in his own city; and, if I recollect the statement correctly, he said that he and Mr. Smithmeyer had sat at the same table at a hotel in this city for some seven or eight years past. The gentleman from Pennsylvania in saying what he did on that occasion assumed to speak as the mouthpiece for that gentleman; and he said (as I have read to you) that he had always understood that no estimate was made by Mr. Smithmeyer with reference to the cost of this building.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that in 1884, two years before this bill was passed, and while the identical plan now displayed before the House at the Reporters' desk was being examined by members, Mr. Smithmeyer prepared and submitted to a member of Congress over his signature a pamphlet containing a detailed description of that building, its style of architecture, the uses to which the rooms were to be put, the manner in which the alcoves on which books were to rest should be constructed, their location and material, its system of ventilation in great detail, elevators and heating appliances, and all that sort of thing; and he supplemented that statement with a paragraph in which these figures were given: that to complete this entire edifice in its interior with shelving enough on the inside to accommodate 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 volumes would cost $2,323,600; that the additional shelving which would be required to run through a period of seventy-five to one hundred years, and complete the entire two upper stories of the building would be, as he estimated, $700,000; that this could be extended over a period of about fifty years, and that the money received for copyrights would pay this expense; that to finish the basement and subbasement or cellar and everything complete would require $239,000 more, so that the cost of the entire edifice fully completed, entirely so, would be $3,262,600.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman state whether that estimate was ever printed?

Mr. PAYSON. I am coming to that. If gentlemen will not anticipate me, my statement will be complete, I think.

The statement to which I have referred was in manuscript; and it was furnished to a member of this House—who I do not now know. But on the 3d of April, 1884, my colleague [Mr. ADAMS] introduced a resolution, which I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to offer for immediate consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:
"Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be directed to cause to be printed for the information of members of the House 500 copies of a description of the plans for a new Congressional Library building, referred to in Senate bill 1139, and which was made a special order for April 3."
Mr. HOLMAN. What will be the probable expense of this printing?
Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have seen these papers, and they cover five or six pages of printed matter. I think the cost will be but trifling.
There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Then the usual motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Those 500 copies were printed. The paper was entitled "Description of the plans for a new building for the Congressional Library; ordered to be printed for the information of the House, April 3, 1884." And that paper, as I have said, contained the information the substance of which I have given, and which was over the signature of Mr. Smithmeyer. Those documents have all become lost; I know of the existence of only a single copy; and indeed I do not know that that is now in existence. But since this matter was debated on the 1st day of September, and since the earnest statements and denials were made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] and some others on this floor, a copy of that paper happened to be found; and it went into the hands of the chairman of the special committee appointed to investigate this Library business, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and was in the room of the Committee on Public Lands. It was there for the purpose of reference in the examination of gentlemen with regard to it. Mr. Smithmeyer was partially examined with reference to that paper. Strangely enough, it has now disappeared—perhaps I ought not to say mysteriously; but it is a singular circumstance that of all the papers in that room which were there when that examination was going on, the one which is of so vital importance in connection with the matter this House is now considering—the paper which is believed to be the only copy now in existence, and the preparation and existence of which have been so solemnly denied by its author—should have disappeared and nobody know anything about it. Diligent search for it was made by the clerk of the committee, by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and others, as I am informed by them, and as I happen to know, having taken part in the search myself. That paper could not be found. It was a printed copy—printed under the resolution of my colleague [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. BLOUNT. Are there no copies in the document-room?

Mr. PAYSON. There are no copies in the document-room. There are no copies in the Printing Office. The original manuscript has been searched for for two days and it can not be found, though the records of the Printing Office show it was received and the edition printed and delivered. The file-room has been searched from top to bottom. Nothing remains, after the most careful search by gentlemen interested in getting at the bottom of this matter, except the recollection of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL], whom I do not now see in his seat, and myself; and also except on Saturday last Pelz, who is the partner of Mr. Smithmeyer, and who drew all these plans, who, in fact, has done the brain work for this entire business ——

A MEMBER. Who is that?

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Pelz, who does all the work and has drawn all the plans, who is the associate and partner of Mr. Smithmeyer, this man who is the brains of this architect's office, was examined before the committee of which Mr. HOLMAN is chairman with reference to his knowledge of it. I see the gentleman rises, and I will yield to him.

Mr. HOLMAN. Reference is made to that pamphlet and quotations are made from it in the testimony to which the gentleman is now referring.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes; I will state that Mr. Smithmeyer was examined in reference to it, and after the examination of Mr. Smithmeyer the paper was laid on the table in the room of the committee under the control of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I cited from Mr. Smithmeyer's statement made long before that that he had never made any statement or that he had never made any estimate in reference to the cost of this building and never was asked to. Now, as to that statement I present the testimony taken before the committee of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is chairman on Saturday last. It is as follows.

A MEMBER. Have it printed.

Mr. PAYSON. Perhaps I had better. Or I will ask the Clerk to read it. No, it will be better for me to read that part which relates to the pending matter and omit the rest.

STATEMENT OF PAUL J. PELZ.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 15, 1888.

Paul J. Pelz sworn and examined.

By Mr. HOLMAN:

Q. Please state your full name and your official relations to the new Library building.

A. My name is Paul J. Pelz; I am employed on the new Library building as assistant architect.

Q. How long have you held that position?

A. Since November 8, 1886.

Q. You hold you appointment from the Library Commission?

A. I have no letter of appointment from the commission. I was appointed by Mr. Smithmeyer.

Q. But your appointment was recognized by the commission?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state what was the plan first entered upon in making the first contracts and in digging the cellar for the structure?

A. The plan for the contracts for the excavation, trenches, drainage, etc., were based upon the entire building, as they show.

Q. When was the plan of the structure changed so as to proceed on the idea of a more contracted building; was it before or after Mr. Vilas became Secretary of the Interior?

A. It was after Secretary Vilas had entered upon his duties as chairman of the commission.

Q. You have seen the two plans called Nos. 1 and 2.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state when, if you remember, was plan No. 2 for the whole building accepted by the commission as the plan upon which the structure should be built?

A. I do not know; but I understood plan No. 2 was the plan until Secretary Vilas came in, when some estimates were taken on both plans, for when the estimate showed in the opinion of the commission that plan No. 2 would embrace too much, Secretary Vilas, I believe, advocated taking estimates upon both. The stone-work estimates for the cellar were taken upon both plans. Very likely the Secretary had formed an idea that they were not to proceed with the whole building then.

Q. How long after he came in was it that the first plan was abandoned and the reduced plan was adopted?

A. The date of this plan here shows it as signed March 5, 1888.

Q. You may state whether since that time the whole work has been confined to plan No. 1.

A. Yes, sir; so far as my knowledge goes.

Q. What have been your special duties in connection with this structure?

A. That of preparing designs.

Q. You may state whether or not you have supervised that entire work?

A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Who has?

A. During what period?

Q. From the time of your appointment.

A. Officially speaking, Mr. Smithmeyer was at the head of the establishment, but it was my special duty to design the plans for the elevations, sections, perspectives, and everything that belongs to the duties of an architect.

Q. How long have you been engaged in the business or profession of an architect?

A. I entered into my profession in 1859. I studied in New York with Mr. Lienau for seven years and have been engaged in that profession ever since. I was engaged in the Light-House Board for about eighteen years; fifteen years in charge of the office as assistant civil engineer.

Q. Please state whether before the commencement of the work—before the passage of the act by Congress authorizing the construction of a new Library building—you yourself made any estimate of the probable cost of the structure on the plan entered upon now known as No. 2?

A. I never made any estimate, but assisted in getting out quantities for Mr. Smithmeyer. I got out the quantities and he fixed the prices and procured the estimates.

Q. Did you reach any conclusion yourself as to what the entire structure, as originally proposed, would cost?

A. Approximately I had an idea of what it would cost.

Q. Did you ever make any statement on the subject?

A. No, sir.

Q. What is your judgment as to the probable cost of the building according to the plan originally entered upon?

A. I formed an idea at the time that it would cost in the neighborhood of $6,000,000, but I never made any figures that I would subscribe my name to as an architect. It was simply an idea I had formed.

Q. Your duties have been confined to supervising the plans?

A. Yes, sir; and preparing them. I have been in charge of the designing.

Q. How many persons have you employed under you?

A. I believe there are eighteen altogether, men and boys.

Q. General Singleton, in making his report to the House of Representatives on the 26th day of January, 1886, makes the following statement: "The most carefully guarded estimates of cost contemplated an expenditure of only $500,000 the first year, about one million the second, and $800,000 the third, which will complete the building for occupancy in all its parts sufficient for the shelving of 1,000,000 books, and leaving space for the gradual introduction of additional iron alcoves in the coming fifty years, the ultimate cost of which will not exceed $700,000, or an average of less than $14,000 a year." Have you any knowledge yourself as to the source of his information upon which that report was predicated, or as to the estimates made?

A. I believe this statement was based upon information given by Mr. Smithmeyer.

Q. You made no statement upon the subject yourself?

A. No, sir; I never appeared before any committee. This is the first time I ever appeared before a committee.

Q. You made a statement in reference to quantities, etc.

A. I prepared them.

Q. Was that with the view of making an estimate of the cost of the building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether any estimates were based on those quantities?

A. I think Mr. Smithmeyer used those quantities in making up his estimates. I carried on considerable correspondence with a friend in the iron business to ascertain the cost of alcoves, and I computed the amount of stone, brick, and iron, the roof surface, etc., but I did not fix the prices. Mr. Smithmeyer collected that information from mechanics engaged in the different kinds of business and made up his estimates. The computation of quantities has nothing to do with the estimates. I used a draughtsman we had at the time. I was only partly engaged in making up the quantities.

Q. What length of time ought to be occupied in the construction of a building upon plan No. 1 now in progress?

A. If the building was properly pushed, no delay in money, I think that between four and five years would build it.

Q. You spoke of the estimates. I would be glad if you would state whether you have seen a pamphlet purporting to have been printed by order of the House, the concluding paragraph of which contains an approximate estimate of the cost of that building.

A. I have seen that pamphlet. It is a pamphlet of Mr. Smithmeyer's, and gives a description of the new Library building, and contains a passage relating to the estimates.

Q. Do you know to whom that was furnished; whether to the House committee or the Senate committee, or to the Joint Committee on the Library?

A. I do not know; I think its object was to furnish information to members of Congress, or something of that kind. I think it was a description of the Library building.

Q. Do you know whether or not it was printed?

A. Yes, sir; it was printed.

By Mr. PAYSON:

Q. As a public document?

A. Well, it had all the ear-marks of a public document.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I call upon the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL], who are the only gentlemen who have seen that paper, so far as I know, whether the statement of figures is not the exact statement which was given by Senator MORRILL in the Senate and Mr. Singleton in this body.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman no doubt is aware that the concluding paragraph of the pamphlet is given in the testimony.

Mr. PAYSON. It is in Mr. Smithmeyer's testimony. I have it here.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would much prefer to have that quoted.

Mr. PAYSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I will do that. I have just received this testimony from the gentleman's clerk this morning.

Mr. RYAN. Is that Mr. Smithmeyer's testimony?

Mr. PAYSON. It is, and I will read from it:

Now, will you please state, colonel, whether that statement—

The one I have alluded to as made in the Senate by Mr. MORRILL and in the House by Mr. Singleton—was filed by you with the committee and printed by order of the House, and whether that is or is not, as far as you are informed, the basis upon which General Singleton made his statement in the report and in the House?

A. I can not tell whether Mr. Singleton made his statement on this or what he made it on. As you are aware, Mr. Singleton told you that we did not know each other until about two weeks after the bill was passed. I never knew Mr. Singleton until two or three weeks after the bill was passed.

Q. Did you give any other data he had before him except that report which was printed the 2d of April, 1884?

A. I never had a word of conversation with the gentleman until the bill had passed Congress. What he had to guide him I do not know.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call my friend's attention to the fact that the date of the adoption of the partial plan is upon the paper; it is March 5 of this year.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, my friend from Indiana calls my attention to the fact that the date is indorsed upon the plan, March 5, 1888, the present year. These transactions were years ago, in 1884 and 1886.

Mr. HOOKER. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois this question, whether that is only a part of the original plan; I refer to the paper before him—a part and only a part of the original plan?

Mr. PAYSON. It is; it is only a portion of the entire structure; the west front and the central tower only; the other three sides and the interior galleries, which in the plan was all the space devoted to Library purposes, the storing of books is entirely omitted now and abandoned.

Mr. KELLEY. The date to which reference is made is the date of that particular drawing, but there was a similar plan known as plan No. 1, years ago, embodying the other, and made on a different scale.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. Plan No. 1, the plan now being considered, was never thought of till March of this year. This I will fully prove by the testimony taken before the Committee on Appropriations, that the plans and the only plans under consideration when the estimates were made contemplated the erection of the entire building, and that the plan No. 1, for constructing the west front of the building with the rotunda, as exhibited in this drawing, was never suggested or talked of until March 5 of this year, and had nothing under the sun to do with the estimates and figures of which I have been talking.

Mr. RYAN. The committee's report show that fully.

Mr. PAYSON. Why, of course, as my friend from Kansas informs me that the reports of the Committee on Appropriations show that; he is on the committee and knows this.

Mr. FORNEY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the plan No. 1 was not thought of until here the other day, or a few days ago?

Mr. PAYSON. Not at all, what I said was that this plan No. 1 was not thought of until March of this year. After Mr. Secretary Vilas became a member of the commission.

Mr. FORNEY. If the gentleman will look at the testimony of Mr. Smithmeyer he will find that it was shown in 1880.

Mr. PAYSON. I know what Mr. Smithmeyer says, but I do not want to confound two different things now. I am talking of what the estimates are based upon, and that I propose to show to the satisfaction of this House.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman allow me one question just here?

Mr. PAYSON. With pleasure,

Mr. DAVIS. This is a recent plan, or a section of the original plan?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir; it is merely a section of the original plan; only a part of the building as originally contemplated.

But coming back, here is the concluding paragraph of the pamphlet over Mr. Smithmeyer's signature:

The approximate estimate of the cost of building this structure, made from the drawings on hand at this date, i. e., the plan adopted by the committee in the Italian renaissance style of architecture, in stone and iron, will be $3,262,000. The cost of building such portions of the inside finished for occupation as will accommodate 1,000,000 of books will be $2,323,600.

Mr. HOLMAN. These are the figures that were given by General Singleton in his speech.

Mr. PAYSON. The identical figures.

To resume, Mr. Speaker, I have under my hand the speech made by Senator MORRILL in the Senate, the chairman of the committee at that end of the Capitol, Mr. Singleton being the chairman of the House committee, in reference to the bill which was passed, and in order to show that the question of cost of this building was regarded as material and essential, and was considered, I desire to again call the attention of the House to the extracts I have already read from Senator MORRILL'S speech. Mr. MORRILL says:

The estimate of the architect for the building, with 300 alcoves, sufficient for 800,000 or 1,000,000 volumes, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and other fixtures is $2,323,600. Seven hundred more alcoves, and the entire completion of the interior, including the basement, $239,000. This is a carefully revised estimate; * * * the ultimate cost will be $3,262,000.

Is there any question, I repeat, about this being an approximate estimate, or about approximating the cost upon so many cubic feet in the building or any other ground?

The precise amount is given as stated in Mr. Smithmeyer's pamphlet, and in the same language, and that is corroborated in the sworn testimony of Mr. Pelz, the partner of Mr. Smithmeyer, who estimated all the quantities, knows of the correspondence with iron dealers and iron manufacturers for the alcoves, etc., to procure prices etc., to complete the estimates, who knows and testifies that these estimates were made by him and Smithmeyer for the use of Congress and printed over the signature of Smithmeyer. Every member of Congress, Mr. Speaker, knows that that testimony would send any man to the gallows on an indictment for murder if that was the question to be proven and upon which his guilt or innocence depended. Let me be understood. I have no personal feelings in the matter beyond that involved in every matter of important legislation, for, as I have said, I do not know Mr. Smithmeyer. I had never seen him until on Saturday last when I happened to go into the room investigating what is known as the Kelley resolution in regard to the alleged connection of Mr. STAHLNECKER, of New York, with some of the contracts for the building; but I have a suspicion; I know as well as I know my own existence that the House was deceived, and deceived by his action and his paper, in voting for the bill, and I do not propose to stand here as the representative of a hundred and sixty thousand constituents, tax-payers of this country and see $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 expended in an enterprise that not one of this House who was a member of the Forty-ninth Congress would have voted for had the facts that we know to-day been known then, and I venture to assert that there is not a member present who will not agree with me that this plan would have received no sanction had it been understood that it was to involve such an expenditure. No one would have voted for it; it would not have been reported from the committee.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. What object do you think Mr. Smithmeyer had in view?

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, a man who is here in Congress and has been in active business life for years asks me what object an architect could have in view in having his plans selected out of twenty-eight others, involving an expenditure of millions of dollars, and he appointed at a liberal salary of five or six thousand dollars a year, with a pay-roll, as contemplated, which might be supposed to amount to thirty or forty thousand dollars under him as architect and have that under his supervision. If the statements of these facts are not an answer to the gentleman's question, then it is idle for me to endeavor to answer him. [Applause.]

It was to secure what he succeeded in securing, the adoption of his plan; and believing that if the plan was adopted, and if this site for the building in front of the Capitol was secured at the expense of half a million dollars, and the foundations, extending over the whole area, covering 3.9 acres, were commenced with him as the architect, the Government would be committed to this work; he knew the fact as well as he knew the truth of revealed religion that this Congress would regard itself committed to the project and it would go on. And yet gentlemen will stand here, as the gentleman from Alabama is standing now, and insist that a substantial portion of this plan shall go on and go on when they must know that if that is done the balance of this structure will have to be erected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but I would like to ask him a question there.

Mr. PAYSON. Nothing will interrupt me when discussing a question of public importance.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What answer did Mr. Smithmeyer make as to the amount he estimated it would require to construct this building when before the committee of which Mr. HOLMAN is chairman?

Mr. PAYSON. He confessed that he did not remember anything about it. He thought he rather did it pro bono publico—for the general good. Now, gentlemen may believe that, but I do not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. He does not deny the authenticity of the pamphlet that was issued by him?

Mr. PAYSON. He did before it was discovered and presented to him; then he admitted its authenticity.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. This Congress could have guarded itself by getting bidders on this building and finding out what it would cost.

Mr. PAYSON. In answer to the gentleman, and in speaking to the point that I am trying to make, I will say that Congress relied upon the integrity, good faith, and judgment of this architect. He came in and stated to us that the building will cost completed so much money, and we took his word for it; foolishly, I concede now. Unsuspectingly and confidingly we did this. I hope I will be able to make the gentleman from Indiana understand that if an architect comes to me and says "I can erect a building for you for $3,000,000," and I give him $6,000 a year for superintending that building, then some other architects and other people come to me and say "You can get no such building without an expenditure of from twelve to fifteen million dollars," and I ask him about it, and he does not say anything as to what it would cost, and when he finally says that it will cost three or four millions of dollars to build less than a quarter of the building, I think that man is in one of two positions. He either wilfully deceived me in the start, or else he is an ignoramus, who, in the language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], ought not to be permitted to build a stable.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I think you deceived yourselves. He did not agree to erect that building. He simply agreed to furnish the plan. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I abandon the attempt to enlighten the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE]. He is clearly beyond my reach. [Laughter.]

Recurring, Mr. Speaker, to the report made by Senator VOORHEES in the Forty-sixth Congress, and to the estimates made by Clark, Esty & Walker as to the cost of enlarging the Capitol, and to Smithmeyer's plan and statements, it is perfectly clear that he, the architect, was informing the committee and Congress as to cost of the structure he was proposing. He had the same general plan as now, except the style was Gothic and more florid in its ornamentation. He omitted to give any estimate of the amount, but made this statement, to which I ask special attention: "However, the cost of the most expensive one of these designs [he submitted two] may be safely estimated to be less than that of a wing added to the Capitol of the same dimensions."

The highest of the estimates which had been made for these added wings of the Capitol was $4,500,000, and, without going into the details of an estimate, Mr. Smithmeyer said that either one of his two plans would cost less than the wings that were proposed to be added to the Capitol building. Now, supplement that with the evidence of Mr. Pelz, that he did make the estimate upon Pelz's computation of quantities of material, and made it for that purpose, to inform Congress, giving a detailed description of that building, which included elevators, ventilating and heating apparatus, water-closets, and everything of that character required to make it a complete building, and which was printed upon the motion of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], showing that the entire cost of the structure would be $3,262,600, it makes a case that can not be swept away by the assertion of anybody, however friendly to this architect or however intimately associated with him, that he does not believe this man would intentionally deceive this House. It is not necessary for us to determine here whether he would intentionally deceive the House or not.

It is enough for this House to be put in a position to determine whether or not the Congress acted with knowledge of the real situation when it adopted that plan.

Again, when this matter was being considered the question of cost was before the committee, as is shown by some of their proceedings. Members of that committee had had experience of what Congress had done with regard to other public buildings. Bear in mind that in all the speeches made in both Chambers with reference to the construction of this building, the question of prudent and economical expenditure of the public money was being constantly debated; and, as I have said, the committee had before them the experience of Congress as to other public buildings in this city. I have here a table showing the cost of our public buildings. This Capitol, constructed as it was, has cost, according to the authorities, about $15,000,000. The Treasury building, with two hundred rooms, many of them elaborately decorated, cost a trifle in excess of $6,000,000. The Interior Department, with one hundred and ninety-five rooms, cost less than $3,000,000. The Post-Office Department cost $1,700,000; and the State, War, and Navy Department somewhere about $10,000,000.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to ask my friend whether we have any estimate now as to the cost of either of the wings proposed to be constructed, or of the whole building as proposed to be constructed, from any other source than Mr. Smithmeyer?

Mr. PAYSON. None whatever; and none from him now, only a passive acquiescence in the general estimate that this wing and tower will cost probably four millions, and the whole structure, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama, about fourteen millions; the lowest I have heard is ten to twelve millions.

Mr. ROGERS. It follows, therefore, that the committee are proceeding upon estimates submitted by the man who originally estimated that the whole building would cost only something over three millions.

Mr. PAYSON. Precisely; and the statement which he assents to with reference to the cost even of this wing is in the most general terms—"from three to four millions." The exact cost he can not tell; nobody knows. Mr. Speaker, on another point. Has it been observed that in this conference report a discretion is to be confided to an officer in the War Department, the Chief of Engineers (at present General Casey), the like of which has never been given by any legislation in connection with the erection of any public building? Who can tell what this building ought to be constructed of? The committee do not inform this House. There are gentlemen who believe that for an enduring fire-proof structure brick is the best material. Others believe that granite is best; others believe that limestone is the best material. Still others believe that a marble edifice, with all the florid ornamentation which the stonecutter's art can supply, is none too good.

Who is to determine this? I ask the gentleman from Alabama, whose constituents have to bear their share in paying this expense, have we the right to be heard and say to something with reference to this matter? The gentleman from Alabama says this matter may all be safely confided to General Casey. Why? Because he has shown himself to be a competent man as an executive to be placed in charge of the expenditure of a large amount of public money, as was demonstrated by his conduct in the control of the erection of the north and west wings of the State, War, and Navy Department building. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Alabama and to members about me to whom this appeal may have been made with a certain force, that General Casey's duties in that regard were purely administrative; there was nothing confided to his judgment or discretion as to plan or material. The plan of that building had been settled and agreed upon. Its east front, with which the west front was to be identical in structure, had already been erected; the south front, which was the exact counterpart of what the north front was to be, had already been constructed. All that was needed, when General Casey was put in charge of that work, was to see that rigid economy was practiced in the expenditure of the public money in following specific plans—nothing else. He had nothing to do with the architectural plan, because Mr. Mullett's plan was the plan followed; and, as I have said, the west front was to be erected as an exact counterpart of the east front, and the north front as an exact counterpart of the south front. It is no discredit to General Casey to say that he is not an architect. It is no discourtesy to him to say that, though he is an honest man and has expended the public money with rigid integrity, I, for one, do not believe that I should place in his hands a discretion to determine not only the material out of which this building shall be erected, not only its style of architecture, but its interior arrangements for holding and storing books, with reference to their safety and the convenience of the patrons of the Library.

Let it be remembered, Mr. Speaker—and I may as well allude to it at this point—that the interior arrangement of a great library building is a matter of no small concern. You can not take a room like this Hall and say, because you have so many cubic feet of space and so many feet of wall surface, therefore it is an appropriate place in which to store books with a view to their preservation and convenient use. The judgment of the librarians of this country does not concede that Mr. Smithmeyer's plan is the best for this purpose. Without allowing myself to be diverted from the point I am making, and to which I intend to cling, but only in illustration of the fact that this discretion ought not to be confided to any one who does not know anything about the subjects in question, I assert now, and I have the proof in my hand, that this plan of Mr. Smithmeyer for the interior arrangements of this Library building has been unanimously condemned by conventions of the librarians of the United States that have passed upon it.

Two such conventions I remember, and I think there were three. This plan has never had a single vote from a librarian in any one of these conventions, the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, or rather the inference from his statement, as made the other day, to the contrary notwithstanding. That gentleman spoke in terms not of the highest respect of a librarian somewhat known in my part of the Union, Mr. Poole, of Chicago. What I am now saying is not in defense of Mr. Poole, nor in condemnation of Mr. Smithmeyer's plan for the interior of this Library. I am simply emphasizing the point that an unskilled, unaccustomed mind ought not to be entrusted with full power and discretion in the details of the construction of the interior of a library building in which are to be housed and cared for a million volumes, and perhaps in my lifetime, if I live the allotted term of man, 3,000,000 volumes. The point I am making as against the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama and this committee, to confide all this discretion to the Chief of Engineers—General Casey to-day, but in case of his death somebody else promoted to his place, somebody inexperienced in these matters—is the fact that this plan, although now approved by Mr. Spofford, our present Librarian, has been, as I have said, condemned unanimously by two conventions of the librarians of this country, and has never received in any one of those conventions a single approving vote. Yet upon the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama, because General Casey is an honest man, which nobody questions, and he has never done more than his duty, we are asked to confide to him the details of this entire business.

The gentleman from Alabama when on the floor stated, in answer to a question of myself, that the Chief of Engineers, who will be in charge of this building, could change the plan of the structure if he desired to do so; could cut it down or expand it; could determine what materials should be used, what should be the style of ornamentation, and all that sort of thing. Mr. Speaker, what part has Congress in all this business? What is the use of having a Congress in reference to any of these matters?

Mr. FORNEY. The law of 1886——

Mr. PAYSON. I remember the first section of the act of 1886.

Mr. FORNEY. The law of 1886 conferred upon a commission composed of the Secretary of the Interior, the Architect of the Capitol Extension, and the Librarian of Congress the same power which this proposition contemplates giving to General Casey.

Mr. PAYSON. Precisely; but if the gentleman will read that act further he will find that it restricts the commission to the plan which had been presented by Mr. Smithmeyer and adopted by Congress. No changes were to be permitted in that plan which would add anything to the cost or interfere with its general outline. If the gentleman will refer to the act he will find that I do not misquote it.

Mr. FORNEY. Allow me to correct the gentleman. This commission had the right to make changes. It is provided in the act that they should follow the plan "submitted, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous without materially increasing the cost of the building."

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORNEY. Now, General Casey will have the same authority that this commission has had. We have got to confer authority on some one.

Mr. PAYSON. But before conferring power on any one should not Congress determine what ought to be done? Who shall determine it? We are now trying to determine it so that this matter shall not be left to the Chief of Engineers, with no restriction whatever except his own judgment, no restriction as to details or cost or anything else.

Mr. FORNEY. He is required every year to make report to us. We can tell him from year to year what we want done. We have him under our entire control. He belongs to us and is governed by us.

Mr. PAYSON. He does not "belong to us" any more than Mr. Smithmeyer belonged to us at a salary of $6,000 a year. And what have we now? We have a hole in the ground, at an expense of something over $400,000, outside of the cost of the land. And confessedly, Mr. Speaker, the action of this man in connection with this building has driven both Houses of Congress to repeal the act of 1886. When we passed that law we believed we were going to have a building similar to the representation in front of us. We were wearied here by vivid descriptions of its beauty, of how it would attract the attention of the people who would come here from abroad. We turned out of their homes a number of persons whose residences were upon the land selected for a site; we paid them $580,000 to get the ground. We commenced an excavation, 350 feet by 459 feet. We have the trenches dug and a good deal of the grouting in, when suddenly this thing comes to a halt. Why is the work stopped? Why is not the work going on as contemplated in 1886? It is because we stand before the people of this country confessing that we have been deceived by somebody, whether intentionally or not it is idle and unprofitable now to discuss, but we have been so far deceived by somebody that the work has got to stop. And, Mr. Speaker, this conference report is a formal confession that we have been so deceived, both Houses, so that the plan of the whole building must be abandoned and the act repealed.

Mr. FORNEY. What do you propose to do? That is what I want to hear.

Mr. PAYSON. I will tell the gentleman what I propose to do, and tell him gladly and quickly, for it is an easy answer, and ought to satisfy him.

Mr. ROGERS. Allow me a question. What safeguards are there in this conference report against a repetition within six months of the same thing which has already happened?

Mr. PAYSON. No such safeguard is provided. When the gentleman from Alabama asks me what it is proposed to do I answer him from his own mouth, from his own pen, in the language of the bill that he stood up here to report, and for which I voted—

That the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, acting conjointly, shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, invite from eminent architects, not exceeding five in number, designs and general specifications for a building for the Library of Congress, to be erected on the site purchased for that purpose in the city of Washington, the cost of building not to exceed $3,000,000; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated to be expended under the direction of the above-named committees, to pay for the said designs and general specifications. The said committees shall jointly report to Congress its action in the premises on or before the 20th day of December, 1888. That the work now in progress on the building for the Library of Congress shall be suspended and the commission authorized by act of Congress approved April 15, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, dissolved. That the property purchased for a site for the Library of Congress, including the buildings thereon, together with all plans, records, and other property of the United States connected with the building for said Library of Congrss, be and the same is hereby, transferred to the care and custody of the Interior Department, the expenses of such care and custody shall be paid out of any money already appropriated for the construction of the building for the Library of Congress.

That is the proposal that came from the committee, for which we all voted before the bill went to the Senate on this conference, the proposal that the gentleman was instructed by the Hou se to stand by, by a decided vote, and which he abandoned for the proposal now before us. It was a proposal that he himself favored.

That is what I would do and think a majority of the House would do.

But I would add this provision: that these committees when appointed should be deemed privileged and should have power to report their bill for consideration at any time. This will prevent delay and insure early action.

Mr. FORNEY. Bear in mind the Senate has disagreed and this is a compromise.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me say to the gentleman from Alabama that the Senate is only one-half of the legislative department of this Government. I wish it distinctly understood that when I am standing here for the Ninth district of the State of Illinois I am not under the wing of either Senator from that State. There are other gentlemen who are in the same way of thinking; that the gentleman from Alabama knows, and that I know. If the House sets itself resolutely against this enormous outrage, no money will be voted for it, for the purse-strings of the country are still in our control, thanks to God and the fathers of the Constitution. [Applause.]

That is the proposition I intend to submit to the House. Why is it we shall go on smoking a poor cigar to the end because we have begun on the small end? [Laughter.] This is an "Early York" of the worst character. We have bitten off the end of it only. [Renewed laughter.] We have squandered forty or fifty thousand dollars in a foundation. What is there in that? It is as nothing. The whisky tax collected in Peoria, in Illinois, in two days will pay that. But what I wish done, and I submit to the gentleman from Alabama that he and his coadjutors and colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations stand with us, is to have this provision inserted and to let the House of Representatives stand by that. Who is going to be harmed by it? Suppose there is a delay for a few months in the progress of this public Library? Who is going to be injured by it? Nobody expects the project for a Library building will stop, but we ought to have men of high character as architects to look at it. I hope the gentleman from Alabama and his associates will stand by our rights until we can look into this matter and determine for ourselves and our constituents what the building shall be.

Let me be understood in reference to this matter, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to be understood emphatically. I am not opposed, when we have decided upon the erection of a public building, to make liberal appropriation for that purpose. When I look about me and see a building like the Interior Department—although I am not an architect I hope

I have an average amount of common sense and can fully appreciate the fitness as well as the beauty of a public building—I admire it. Such ought to be the character of our public structures. Devoid of mere meretricious ornamentation, manifesting only the carver's skill, that Interior Department building stands out as a thing of beauty in its severe simplicity and plainness, but in imposing beauty. I have heard from time to time the State, War, and Navy building commended as the most beautiful in the city; but the Interior Department building in its modest simplicity and noble outlines will do for me and the people I represent.

Mr. FORNEY. What did it cost?

Mr. PAYSON. Less than three millions, and it has one hundred and ninety-seven finished and highly-decorated rooms. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman wishes more time I will yield to him.

Mr. PAYSON. I would be glad to be indulged a little further.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PAYSON. I thank the gentleman for his kindness.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, when interrupted, that I was in favor of a Library building, and so I am. I am in favor of such a building as the greatness and the grandeur and the power of this country will warrant and typical of our people, and such we can afford; and I favor the appropriation of necessary sums of money for that purpose; but I want it understood from one, at least, that the amount of expenditures upon any building of a public character ought not to be the amount of money in the Treasury upon which an architect or a designer may draw for the purpose of erecting a memorial building to himself and in honor of his own name.

We all know the ambition, laudable, no doubt, amongst architects and builders, particularly those connected with the public buildings, to see some grand edifice erected under their control to stand far superior in its proportions, cost, and grandeur to anything that has been done by any predecessor or rival in the same line, whether it be erected by public or private enterprise. So strong is this influence in the minds of some men that I have been told of instances, without mentioning names, in comparatively recent years, where architects of the Treasury have necessarily been removed because of the prevalence of that influence, controlling in their own minds, that every building they erected was to be better, more costly, and grander in its proportions than those erected by others previously employed in the same capacity. We all know that these tendencies to extravagance exist.

It may be a laudable ambition for the architect, but we are to determine what is to be done with the money of the people. We are entrusted with the control of the public funds, and for myself I would greatly prefer, as more in accordance with the simplicity of our form of government, for a great public structure a building to be like the Interior Department, rather than one whose outside is covered with pinnacles and carvings like the State, War, and Navy Department building. I think there is no comparison between them. But I would be perfectly willing to vote, and vote to-day, for a building involving an expenditure of $4,000,000 for the purpose of building a proper structure for this purpose, although I think the amount is largely more than is necessary.

I have taken occasion to look into the cost of some of the public buildings throughout the world, and especially the one which was alluded to by my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is always eloquent, the British Museum, but who does not remember its cost. As we sat here and listened to his vivid description of that museum, with which the library is connected, I felt myself somewhat ashamed as a granger coming from an agricultural constituency, reared up amongst farmers and laboring men exclusively, coming from that walk in life myself—and I felt that perhaps I was guilty of a niggardly action in that I was not willing that the extravagant plan of Mr. Smithmeyer or some other gigantic expenditure should be adopted to erect a public Library building in this country which might fittingly compare with the British Museum.

But since the gentleman has made his speech I have looked into the matter in regard to the British Museum somewhat in detail. It is more than merely a public library. True, the library is connected with it and forms a portion of it, but in connection with the library is a vast repository of art, antiquities, and there are numerous rooms filled with all curiosities which the most laborious searcher after knowledge could not exhaust; strange things from strange lands; room after room filled with art treasures; a vast collection of works of art and illustrations of archæology, the results of the researches of scholars for many years in the rich fields of ancient lands; a perfect polytechnic school, where the student can spend months and months and then not have half exhausted them, nor would half be told him. Amidst them all is the London library, with its magnificent reading-room. I do not wonder that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania felt inclined to worship the grandeur of the structure he so graphically portrayed. But wait. What did it cost? I find that the great reading-room and its attachments of the British library cost £160,000, or about $800,000. This has been the expense of that immense reading-room, with all its alcoves connected with it, about which my friend from Pennsylvania was awe-stricken as he saw it; and the entire cost of the museum proper in every department and of all the buildings that it has connected with it from first to last, from turret to foundation stone, during the one hundred and ten years of its existence, cost £1,300,000, or about $6,500,000 for the entire edifice, all the buildings complete—less than one-half the cost of this building if the plan suggested here is pursued. I now feel, then, that we are generous, more than generous, in this business when we provide three and a half or four millions of dollars here. That sum (and I do not speak as an architect, but I have conversed with persons and prominent architects about this) will erect an edifice that the country might well regard with honest pride.

We must bear in mind that not a great deal of money is to be expended on the inside of the building outside of the alcoves and shelves. It is not like any of those buildings, like the War Department, or the Navy, or the Interior Department, where there are immense fire-proof rooms beautifully decorated inside. Outside of the central structure to be used as a reading-room, and which will be expensive for its interior adornment, the cost of the building will be mainly on the outside, on the exterior walls.

I am in favor, Mr. Speaker, I repeat, of appropriating for a public library, but before doing so I want to see the plans on which we are to operate, and to know what we are doing. We have been told that we are amply protected because we are to have an Army officer in charge of this building, and that we can depend upon its construction and the limit of its cost. But we should not forget that a gentleman connected with the Army was also connected with the construction of the Pension building in this city, in Judiciary Square, about which I will utter no further comment than to recite a remark which was attributed to the late General Sheridan, that the only fault he had to find with it was that it was fire-proof. [Laughter.]

It is a fair model, in its exterior, of a grain elevator in Chicago. One such edifice is enough for the Republic. If the Army is satisfied, I am, with that example; the sample does not suit. Nor do I want anything more of this architect. He has manifested toward Congress the same feeling of regard that is attributed to a distinguished railroad magnate in New York toward the public. [Laughter and applause.]

I see I need not repeat the language!

What do they care for Congress, if on any pretense they secure the contract?

We were fed from the spoon of promise, but tasted only disappointment as the result.

And if this thing had gone on, it would have been a standing monument to the folly of gentlemen who when their eyes are open will permit it to proceed. For one, I will not.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke about the cost of the British Museum building. Now I would like to call attention to other libraries to which the gentleman [Mr. KELLEY] alluded, among them the great library in Munich, which is the second or third largest in the world. I had occasion to see how their books were housed, and what care and attention were given to the matter there, and how much wealth the governments of the Old World who have these fine buildings and these grand structures, as was said, expended on them. I find that library contains 980,000 volumes of books, with all the accompaniment of maps and all that sort of thing, with works of art distributed here and there. The cost of that entire structure, sufficient for that immense library, which has received such favorable comment from scholars the world over, was £83,000—$415,000. That was all the money expended upon that magnificent building, as shown by authority furnished me by Mr. Spofford, our eminent librarian. And the great library at St. Petersburgh, containing 1,500,000 volumes, with all the accompanying manuscripts, which will bear about the same proportion in other countries as they do here, cost less than $1,500,000.

It is sufficient for all Russia, and yet we are to be impliedly charged here with a niggardly disposition in the attempt to control the expenditure of the public money, because we do not approve and vote for a building costing anywhere from twelve to fifteen million dollars. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] said that fourteen millions was the estimated cost of this building, if I got his figures correctly.

Mr. FORNEY. Somewhere between ten and fourteen millions.

Mr. PAYSON. And a matter of $4,000,000 amounts to nothing! You can see, Mr. Speaker, how glibly we talk about millions. Now here is a little margin of four millions from ten to fourteen millions! Four million dollars to be furnished by the tax-payers of this country, when every dollar that is raised by taxation has the sweat of some laborer's brow upon it and has felt the touch of the toil-hardened hand that produced it. It is to cost from ten to fourteen millions, a margin of something like four millions!

Mr. KELLEY. Five cents per head of the present population of the United States.

Mr. PAYSON. Five cents per head of the present population, and to a man with a family of six that means six loaves of bread. It may be that there is some force in dealing in pennies in argument, but every 5 cents that comes out of the laborer takes from him the price of a loaf of bread. [Applause.]

And, Mr. Speaker, 1 cent a head for the sixty millions of people, if devoted to extravagant and improper appropriations, is just $600,000 of wasteful extravagance that will not receive my vote or approval.

I thank the gentleman for his sneering allusion to cents—pennies. It shows the necessity for guarded, careful, prudent legislation in all these matters.

Care as to small matters begets prudence in greater affairs.

In the great appropriation bills that we pass we speak with such lightness on the addition of millions to them as would startle the average business man. Just think of putting up one building, one edifice, about which we say that it is to cost ten or fourteen million dollars! Mr. Speaker, if we proceed as now proposed, it means completing this whole structure as proposed by the original plan. This appears by the testimony of Mr. Green. He says the commencement of this structure, plan No. 1, means the continuation of the whole of it. The partner of the architect, whose name appears on this paper [Mr. Pelz], was before the committee which sits in the room of the Committee on Public Lands, and he said it was the height of absurdity to erect this portion of the building unless it was ultimately intended to build the rest of it. He said it would present the appearance of a jail. I think that was his illustration; that this building, looked upon except in a direct front view from this Capitol, would look like a jail. Other gentlemen testified before the committee, and I regret that their testimony has been mislaid. One of them, an architect, Mr. Green, of whom I have spoken, says that from every point of view that you would approach this building, except from its direct front, it would "present the view of a row of city buildings looked at from a back street." That is his simile, and a very accurate one. Just stop and think of it—from any point of vantage you choose to view it, it would be plain exterior walls having no windows, and would just look "like a row of city buildings looked at from a back street." That is the building we are asked to erect.

The gentleman from Alabama, let me say in passing here, called the attention of the House to what he thought were some mistakes of mine as to this reduced structure, and read from the RECORD.

Here is what I said:

We have a proposition to construct a building which, in the observations I made the other day, I pronounced an architectural monstrosity; and if there is any way of emphasizing that language, I would be glad to do so. Here [exhibiting a diagram] is what is proposed—to erect a part of the building as shown by that long line, 459 feet long, 60 feet in width across there [illustrating] at its widest place at the corner, and only 44 feet wide most of the distance; and then there is to be this central tower. Here is the building that this committee proposes to construct for the accommodation of our public Library, as a piece of architecture in reference to which you and I are expected to feel proud that we had something to do with it; and this is to cost not exceeding $4,000,000.

Mr. FORNEY. I read below that.

Mr. PAYSON. I said, and adhere to the statement, "Here is a building 490 feet long, there [illustrating] is the width of it, 44 feet, and it is to be 70 feet high." This plan, Mr. Chairman, contemplates a square tower there [indicating] which is 60 feet square in exterior dimensions. There is a corridor, or a gallery, or a curtain, or whatever architects call it, of which the interior dimensions are 38 feet, and its length is a little over 100 feet. Thirty-eight feet is only about 8 feet wider than the corridor that we walk through as we go over to the Senate. There, then, is a room over 100 feet long and only 8 feet wider than that corridor. These on each side, two of them. I am told by the architect that it is 70 feet high, which is the height of this building. Seventy feet high, 38 feet in interior dimensions, and 1,000 miles long! [Laughter.]

Then comes this structure here [indicating], the central structure which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] says is so roomy. If you look at the elevation and the plans connected with it, you will see that every foot of it is to be taken up with staircases and corridors and wash-basins, and all that sort of thing. Not a place for a book contemplated. Pass over to the other side and you find it is the same. The interior dimensions are 38 feet and the thickness of the walls brings the exterior dimensions up to 44 feet, the width which I stated.

And here let me call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] to one thing which seems to have been entirely overlooked. In the testimony taken by the Senate committee it is stated that there is no room for any books and no intention to put a volume in any of that space. The only provision for books that is made in this plan is in the reading-room, which was not contemplated at the outset to be used as a library, but, as its name indicates, was to be a central tower for a reading-room 100 feet in diameter; and yet within the entire area of this building, 459 feet long, and this immense central structure, there is no space except what Mr. Spofford, the Librarian, says he will need for his maps, for his copyright registers, for the performance of the administrative duties of his office, for the bindery which it is intended to establish in connection with the Library, and for the staircases. No provision for books at all. Mark that.

Is that the kind of a Library building that we should be asked to build? The scheme originally contemplated the storage of books in, and only in, that portion of the building which this conference report repeals. Do I make myself understood upon that point? Here [indicating] is where the books are to be stored. Here is the central tower, which is to be a reading-room, one story high, with a gallery above from which admiring Americans can look down upon those who are filling their minds with lore below. [Laughter.] There is no provision for books in any part of this building as shown by the plan except the part which this conference report repeals! More than that, Mr. Spofford is on record as saying that the building when erected will be crowded to its utmost capacity within fifteen years even by utilizing all the wall space. As there may be some question about that later, I think I had better turn to his testimony. It is found on page 137 of the testimony taken by the Senate committee. I read:

Q. According to this plan, what will all this part of the building be used for?
A. Here is the Library reading-room and here are the alcoves around it. They will be filled to the utmost capacity with the existing library and the growth for the coming fifteen years.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Does he mean the whole building?

Mr. PAYSON. Everything that is proposed in this plan that I hold in my hand. As to that Mr. Spofford testifies that it will be crowded to its utmost capacity within fifteen years. Now, what are we building for? For this year or the next year? We have been told here confidently of the duty that devolves upon us when we take into account the greatness and the grandeur of our country as it is now, and we have been urged to remember that it has a future, and that we are building not only for ourselves but for generations to come. That was the excuse; that was the apology for this immense pile when it was first proposed in 1886. Now we are told that the fragment represented by plan No. 1 is sufficient for the purposes of the Library; and yet the Librarian of Congress testifies that if erected it will be crowded to its utmost capacity within fifteen years.

I said I would refer to the evidence to show that the main structure and these two wings were not arranged for the storing of a single book. Upon that point I quote Mr. Smithmeyer. He was interrogated by Senator BECK:

Q. How long is the third story? You thought the back of the third story should have books?
A. Well, I think so.
Q. There is not any book repository in the west front, so far as I can see.
A. Well, you can put them there.

Certainly, "you can put them there."

Think of it! A building designed to meet all the requirements of a great national library for fifty or one hundred years to come, and when it is proposed to reduce the structure so as to meet immediate necessities and yet adapt it to convenient occupation by the Library, and when this gentleman is asked as an architect skilled in the business, as a public servant with a salary as great as yours or mine—when he is asked to explain how it is that his plan does not provide any place for books, he answers, "Well, you can put them there!" Why, Mr. Speaker, they could be put in this room. We could put up shelves and book-cases against a portion of these walls and utilize them. This is simply a part of the general slip-shod way in which we are asked to deal with this subject.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, I said I would refer to the testimony to show that it was in contemplation to complete the construction of this entire building, no matter what its cost might be, if we once committed ourselves to this part of it. To that task I now address myself. On page 136 of the testimony of Mr. Green, the superintendent of the building, he testifies as follows:

Q. Do you know something about what buildings cost?

Here is what he says:

This rotunda is in keeping with the whole plan of the building, to accommodate a great many more books than these little repositories would hold. You see all these are book magazines for generations yet to come—

This is no fifteen-year business with him—

For the accommodation of books in greater quantities than these which come in, in magazines, etc.

So I say that to carry out that plan with a view to an ultimate completion of the whole building and to an extent of ornamentation and finish which would be in keeping with it—

The whole building—

Three millions of dollars would be too much of a limitation to make on this building.

This shows what is intended to be done, and the testimony of others in this book is in the same direction. I now recur to the testimony of Mr. Pelz, the author of this plan——

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYSON. I say it advisedly. I say that this plan and this drawing are emanations from the brain of Mr. Pelz; he is entitled to the credit, not Mr. Smithmeyer, as I am informed by Mr. Pelz and others who know the circumstances.

Mr. KELLEY. It is a mistake.

Mr. PAYSON. Possibly, but I am otherwise advised. Now recurring to what Mr. Pelz says, and at any rate he is the assistant of the architect, he has been a partner of Mr. Smithmeyer for years. He says it would be an outrage upon architectural taste to erect that structure unless Congress intended to go on and erect the remainder of it. It did not require any architect to tell me that. My convictions on that point were as strong before I heard that statement as they are now. It is idle, it is childish, it is the depth of puerility for anybody to say that this structure represented here, this part of the whole plan [illustrating], is one which, "while not very ornate, would not be unsatisfactory to the citizens of the country," as Mr. Spofford says in his testimony here. It would be, of course, a botch, and, briefly summarized, my objections to the proposed building are these.

1. It is part only of a building, all the exterior of which is necessary to be pleasing in effect; this is now conceded.

2. The cost of this plan is now estimated as high as that of the completed buildings of Clark and Esty.

3. It will not suffice for the needs of the library for but a few years, even if all the wall space should be utilized, as there is only little room arranged for book space, as clearly appears from this sketch.

4. The rooms on this plan are all, except the reading-room and the immediate galleries, arranged for and with reference to the whole general structure, and could not properly or profitably be used as library rooms.

See these pavilions at the corners and these long galleries connecting the corner pavilions with the central building, narrow, only 38 feet in interior width and pierced full of windows, they could not, should not be used for book storage. In short, all this plan was designed for other uses than book storage, and hence is not adapted to that purpose.

Now, let me put the matter in this way—and I invite the attention of the chairman of the conference committee to this proposition: In this conference report you propose to repeal the statute except so far as the plan is represented on this blue paper [illustrating]. If this conference report is adopted, the law stands as if it had never existed, and the present plan is presented to us without reference to any probability—and the gentleman assents to what I say—without reference to any probability of the erection of the balance of the structure.

Mr. FORNEY. Whether the balance shall be constructed is a question for posterity to determine. Those who come after us twenty-five or thirty years hence can settle that question for themselves. We are not bound to erect the balance of the building; but if they wish to do so, they can.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not ask what we are "bound" to do, but what is in contemplation here? If any architect should come before this body, and as an original proposition submit this plan, this part of the whole structure, to us as that of a building suitable in point of architecture for this Congress to approve—a building suitable for the storage of the books now in the Congressional Library—he would be branded as an idiot by every man here, and by nobody sooner than by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, and therefore this partial plan should not be proceeded with.

Mr. CHEADLE. Of what kind of material is this building to be?

Mr. PAYSON. Nobody knows; nothing is specified. That is one of the many matters to be confided to the discretion of the gentleman who for the time being shall occupy the position of Chief of Engineers under the War Department. To-day that officer is General Casey; to-morrow he may be somebody else, who may be promoted to the position. Everything connected with this building, the architectural style, the internal arrangement, the material, the cost, etc., will, unless we shall now adopt some limitation, be confided to the discretion of that officer under this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, it is proper that this House when called upon to act should act upon information which is at least prima facie reliable. The plan of every building, so far as I know, which has been constructed by the General Government has been submitted to Congress for its approval. I had hoped when I ceased my opposition to the Library bill in the Forty-ninth Congress that we were entering upon the construction of a public building as to which no breath of scandal or improper criticism should ever arise. I never believed that we should be within a year and a half from the time we voted for the erection of that building met face to face with a proposition that we should suspend its construction, repeal the law under which it was begun, and make a change in its entire plan, that change brought about, as is confessed by the chairman of the conference committee, because Congress was utterly deceived by somebody, the architect, as I believe from the evidence before me, because of his denial under oath before the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] of any responsibility for this estimate, now followed by a confession that it was made and circulated over his signature by Mr. Smithmeyer, supplemented again by the statement of his partner who made the estimates on which those figures were submitted—because we have been deceived, and by him. Silence is inexcusable when truth ought to be spoken.

On the 1st day of September, in this House, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, as spokesman for his friend, Mr. Smithmeyer, asserted that none of these estimates were ever made by the authority of Mr. Smithmeyer. That statement has been printed in the RECORD; the debate has been copied into the public press; everybody knew what the charge was; the daily papers of this city have been discussing it in issue after issue; and Mr. Smithmeyer's mouth is closed. No word came from him admitting what he has done, or saying that he was mistaken about it, voluntarily. Only after the paper was found and he called as a witness would he admit anything.

It would have been honorable for him voluntarily to have done it. His duty to this Congress, his duty as a public servant drawing public money as compensation for his time in this business, demanded he should be speedy and not tardy in coming forward and correcting these mistakes out of which this action, now most shameful, I regret to say, arises, in which we are compelled to take part, to retrace our steps, to call a halt, and ascertain from somebody, because we can not from him, what this building will cost, or what some building will cost which is necessary for the purpose to preserve and protect what I hope will be the grandest collection of the literature of the world.

I wish that time to come. It can not come too speedily. I will vote liberally for that; but whatever I do will be done in performance of public duty, with some degree of right, of prudence in the care of money, that would be done if I had the Treasury of the United States as my individual property and expending the money as my own. At least that degree of prudence will be exercised by me, and I hope by other members of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let this House vote down this conference report. No one is harmed by it. We are agreed on everything else to do when that time shall come. I will offer the substance of what I read to the House, which is the proposition we sent to the Senate, and with the privilege on the part of the committee to report at any time. [Applause.] I thank the House for its kind attention.

Mr. ROGERS. I will now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, we have a magnificent Library, not comparable in extent to some of the great libraries of Europe, but the foundation of one of the finest and greatest Libraries of the world. We have a librarian in Mr. Spofford who is said by those competent to speak on the subject to be unequaled among librarians. Yet we have access to but a comparatively small part of our Library. While it is theoretically open to the whole people of the country and of the world, it is not practically open to any of us. I ask why this deplorable condition of things exists? Because there is not accommodation for the books we own, and with the best possible system for the preservation and delivery of books it is often impossible for the attendants to find a book or a set of the volumes of a book.

It was, I think, Lord Palmerston who defined "dirt as matter out of place," and if anybody will go through the crowded alcoves and corridors of our Library he will see costly works of art which come under Lord Palmerston's definition of dirt, and they are not in place simply because Congress has not provided accommodation for them. It is not that we are or have been too poor to provide ample accommodation for them, together with future accretions under the copyright law. The pending question is, do we want a Library building that will relieve this engorgement and afford facilities for the use of books which we have, which will enable our distinguished Librarian to systematize our engravings, charts, and maps, and to assign proper positions to the annually accumulating books to be received as donations as well as under the copyright law, and purchases made with the annual appropriation Congress makes, to give ready access to the two bodies of the national law-makers, to the judges of the United States and other courts, to the executive officers of the Government and others—current contributions to knowledge?

That is the question before the House. The gentleman from Illinois seems to have lost sight of it in his eager denunciations of my friend, John L. Smithmeyer, whose plan for a Library building was adopted by the Forty-ninth Congress. And in passing to the consideration of this question I may, in view of the manner of the gentleman from Illinois, under whose architectural wisdom and experience that of John L. Smithmeyer has been extinguished, tell the House something of Mr. Smithmeyer's professional history. It began while a mere lad in Vienna. Before he came to manhood the revolution of 1848 occurred, and he found himself a fugitive patriot in a strange land. He gained his living as he could, while he devoted himself to the passion of his life, architecture. With what measure of success? I point you to yonder drawing as evidence of his competency; and I recall to the memory of the older members of the House the noble drawing that stood where it does for one session after another. The interior of the building has not been modified, but the exterior was Gothic, and to my eyes more beautiful in its Gothic elegance, of which style there are no illustrations in the architecture of the capital city more beautiful, than any I ever saw in foreign countries.

He has been a practitioner, and a successful one, of his profession in this country for over a quarter of a century, and is one of the oldest members of the American Institute of Architects. He is a fellow of that national institute. He is president of the Association of Architects of the city of Washington. He is president of the Association of Technics, composed of civil and topographical engineers, etc.; and I have never heard, in all the wild slanders which now flood the corridors of the Capitol, and of every hotel in and about Washington, an authentic case of his failure to satisfactorily execute one of accepted designs. Indeed, the only fault I have heard found with him by builders has been his excessive rigidity in demanding that the material adopted shall be adequate for the contemplated work and in so testing materials submitted by contractors as to insure to the builders such materials as were advertised for and agreed to be paid for. He has practiced his profession for nineteen years in the city of Washington, and strangely enough, according to the allegations of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], for three of these years he was without architectural training or skill, as Mr. Pelz, to whom he ascribes the brains and skill of the firm, has been in copartnership with him for but about sixteen of the nineteen years.

The relations between them are these: Mr. Pelz is one of the best draughtsmen in the country, while Mr. Smithmeyer is the designing architect. He was for nine years, while Mr. Smithmeyer was working out his plans for the Library building, employed as a draughtsman by the Light Board.

How Mr. Smithmeyer's skill as an architect, and especially in connection with library structures, is estimated, I ask the House to learn from the highest authority on building and architecture known to the American people, and if the Clerk will please read what I send to the desk it will, I think, hear satisfactory testimony upon this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the American Architect and Building News, January 5, 1884.]

Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer, architect of the intended building for the Congressional library, has published a little pamphlet containing an account of the various competitions for the design of the building, as well as a review of the paper of Mr. William F. Poole, of Chicago, upon the construction of library buildings, which excited so much comment in and out of the profession some years ago. Mr. Smithmeyer's criticism of this paper is well considered, and is certainly effective in many points, showing conclusively that Mr. Poole's model plan is anything but an economical one, either in first cost or in the expense of administration, while it fails in its provision of light. For small libraries there are probably advantages in Mr. Poole's arrangement, but for the peculiar requirements of lights for the Congressional Library building, it would be, as we have before suggested, quite unsuitable.

In speaking of his investigations into the necessary conditions of library construction, Mr. Smithmeyer makes the remark which should be remembered by all young architects that the first consideration in such buildings should be light, and, second, heat and ventilation, and the third security against fire and dampness. All other points, important as they may be, must be regarded as subordinate to these. It is gratifying to have some of the observations of one who is competent to make them in a form to be useful to the profession, and we are only sorry that Mr. Smithmeyer should not have made his book larger. If, as seems likely, his design for the new building should be speedily carried out, we hope that he will collect the special knowledge which he has acquired or may acquire during its progress in a permanent work for the benefit of his fellow-architects.

Mr. KELLEY. In view of the manner in which his name and his attainments, as well as his labors and his personal character, have been treated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], it is something, Mr. Speaker, to know that the highest authority among architects and builders themselves should record its regard for the man and its appreciation of his ability to instruct his professional brethren of this country, while expressing the hope that he would embody his views and experience in a book, instead of contenting himself with the dimensions of this modest little pamphlet of but 31 pages.

I said the other day that I was proud of my acquaintance with Mr. Smithmeyer, and I repeat the assertion. A more shrinking, modest, diffident man I never knew. The author of eleven plans, all of which were submitted to Congress in competition with forty odd competitors from all parts of the world, the controversy lingering through seven Congresses, or more than fourteen years, this modest man, who is talked about as "boring for the job," came to know but few members of either House, and did not even become acquainted with Colonel Singleton, chairman of the Committee on the Congressional Library, who championed his plan, until nearly a fortnight after the bill for the construction of the building on his plan had become a law.

I do not know but what my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] might have heard Colonel Singleton make the statement as he made it to me and as I have heard its having been made to others.

Mr. HOOKER. I have not had any conversation with Colonel Singleton on the matter.

Mr. KELLEY. As an illustrative incident let me state that on the day on which the bill passed the House, so little of a lobbyist was he that he did not know it was proposed to be called up, his office being near my hotel, before dining I went to it and found him at his work and saluted him with a tender of my congratulations. "Congratulations on what?" said he. "Why, on the passage of the Library bill by the House." Grasping my hand his exclamation was, "Judge KELLEY, is my long anxiety ended? Do you tell me the truth in saying the bill has passed?" This was not characteristic of a borer for personal advancement or of a lobbyist about the halls of Congress. Thus it is that I have had the fullest opportunity of studying this man's character, the combined manner and gentleness of which have bound me to him in grateful friendship. I do not disavow it. I speak of him here under the influence of grateful friendship.

The gentleman from Illinois spoke of this terrible outrage which he said would involve an ultimate expenditure of twelve or fifteen million dollars. Sir, it is an outrage that is to be begun with about $4,000,000, and which expenditure we are assured by the chairman of the conference committee, quoting Librarian Spofford's statement, will answer the exigencies of the country for at least fifteen years. It involves in the providing of housing for our growing library the awful outrage of 4 cents a head upon sixty millions of people, and it is said our present population is 63,000,000. By the time sixty, seventy-five, or one hundred years shall have passed, when the requirements of the National Library may demand the completion of that building, our population will probably be 300,000,000 of people and the final payments will be less than 2 cents per capita of those distant generations. The gentleman replied as though I spoke of an annual tax of 5 cents.

All know taxation is annual and recurring. Like death, it is one of the two things we are certain to meet. But this is a single appropriation for an enduring object. As it is expended it will raise above the ground the edifice of which we behold the external plan before us in its completed form of the distant future. It is an appropriation for all time, and I can not see the kind of outrage there would be in appropriating 4 cents per capita for a building that is to answer for the intellectual wants of the country for a period of from fifteen to twenty-five years.

In this connection the gentleman classes himself with the grangers and claims to speak for them. I do not believe that the grangers would complain of spending 4 cents per head to make it sure that when they visit the National Library they may see the wonders of art embodied in its magnificent volumes. One book there, to which I have called the attention of a great many farmers and their families, is a book on humming-birds, the most magnificent thing of the kind I have ever seen or read of. None of the great ornithologists have produced a book like it; not Audubon's nor even Wilson's ornithology, wonderful as each is in its letter-press and its illustrations, excels or, in my judgment, equals the volume on humming-birds to which I refer. There are six hundred and forty-three varieties, if my memory serves me right, and each one is illustrated, with the food on which that species feeds, and on each is thus marked the temperature in which it is found. I do not believe that the grangers will object to a contribution of 4 cents every twenty-five years during a century for the purpose of securing to their sons and daughters and to their old wives when they come to the capital ready access to such treasures of art and literature. It belittles the farmers of our country to intimate that they groan in spirit at the thought of such an expenditure, and regard it as a grand outrage upon them. The question is, I repeat, shall we house these books and protect them against dampness, and against fire, and give them adequate protection from dangerous conditions under the supervision of librarians?

I see the Speaker is about to rap me down. I understood that I was to speak in my own time; that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] yielded to me for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. I yielded to you in my time, but I reserved my time.

Mr. KELLEY. To this question Mr. Smithmeyer is but an incident. He is not involved other than incidentally in the Senate amendment now under consideration. By that amendment the work is to be put under the charge of General Casey, and unless that experienced officer shall find in Mr. Smithmeyer the most capable person for the work he will be at perfect liberty to put some one else in charge of it.

A pay-roll set down at from thirty-five to forty thousand dollars a year under Mr. Smithmeyer was spoken of by the gentleman from Illinois. When did Mr. Smithmeyer have a pay-roll? He has never been permitted to employ anybody but technical assistants, draughtsmen, and the like. He has heretofore been held up here for criticism as to the number of carts and horses and laborers he employed, while his power to employ has been confined, as I have said, to draughtsmen and other technical assistants, under the supervision and with approval of the commission.

This statement can not be gainsaid. He has, unhappily, incurred the displeasure of powerful men by insisting upon the delivery of such goods and adequate materials as had been contracted for, and if his practice in this respect shall be departed from the day may come when the nation will lament and deprecate the popular hatred which drove a pure and capable man from the line of his duty. I read to-day, as probably most of you gentlemen did, that the new vault—the silver vault—of the Treasury Department had been so badly constructed in its foundations and substructure that yesterday 4 inches of water was found to have flowed in and was drowning out the silver.

We do not want a Library building with leaky or shaky foundations, from the saturated base of which vapors shall ascend to deface and destroy the contents and the bindings of rare and precious volumes. Nothing is more detrimental to books than to be over damp earth from which they may absorb ascending vapors. Nor are there many more effective means of distributing the germs of disease than keeping popular libraries in damp vaults, or over them, so that the diseases of succeeding seasons shall be imparted to books, which, when carried into the warm rooms of our households and exposed to heat, will develop and diffuse those germs.

Mr. Speaker, I would gladly detain the House longer, but I have been in the Capitol since before 10 o'clock this morning, during all of which time my mind has been engaged. I feel, too, that I have probably said enough to induce this House to stand by the report of the committee of conference and appropriate $500,000 to be expended under the ablest of the engineers of the Army, a man who has proven himself competent to the grandest works and capable of administering large sums of money with great economy. I was asked, within a few minutes of taking the floor, whether an engineer was always an architect. I reply that architecture and engineering are twin branches of science. In proof of this I point to the fact that it was an Army engineer, General Montgomery C. Meigs, who planned the building in which we now are, and also the other wing of this Capitol, and reduced the scale of expenditures, as Brigadier-General Casey did in connection with the Army and Navy building. Also to the fact that it was the same Army engineer, General Meigs, who reared that dome of iron and made it firm without removing the roof which meanwhile sheltered the Capitol.

This afternoon while the debate was going on I heard a sneer at the Pension Office. Ignorant laymen may sneer at that building, yet it is modeled after one of the most famous buildings of a great Grecian architect, but expanded and enlarged, and it is to-day an unequaled structure for the purposes for which it was constructed, which require a great number of rooms with ample light and means of ventilation.

When Fanny Kemble first came to this country she wrote of the United States Bank building as "a beautiful little copy of the Parthenon." A "little" copy, twenty feet longer and proportionately wider and higher than the Parthenon! It stands to-day as the United States custom-house at Philadelphia, a monument of the classic taste and architectural ability of an engineer who had quitted the Army and been the civil engineer of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, William Strickland. I could go on giving instances, but it is unnecessary. I ask this House to confide to a man of that type $500,000, with instructions to examine the foundations of this building as far as they have gone, to see that the money applied to its further construction is used economically, as was the money he expended on the War, State, and Navy Department building, and at the same time to hasten a section of this building to such completion as will give Congress access to the rich treasures of its own Library. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN subsequently obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the following statement by the Architect of the Capitol:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 12, 1888.

SIR: As relates to the sworn statement of Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer, architect of the Congressional Library building, which was read in the House of Representatives on the 4th instant, I desire to make the following statement, which I wish to be considered as a part of my testimony in the case.

What I said, or intended to say, in regard to the bricks which were obtained from the buildings which were torn down by direction of the commission, and which were disposed of and taken from the grounds, in order to make room for the new materials to be used, is as follows: A large number of bricks and broken bricks, or bats, were thus obtained, which were either sold or, as in the case of some of the broken bricks, hauled to the dumping-ground. This was done in compliance with the request of the architect. I did not concur in such disposal of these brick, as I was, and still am, of the opinion that all this material could have been used advantageously in the construction of the building—the brick in the walls, and the "bats" for interior concrete—that is for the cellar floor and filling up the other floors, and for various purposes in connection with the work.

I have no knowledge of the amount received from the sale of the brick, as the secretary of the commission had that matter in charge, with directions to make returns to the Secretary of the Interior, the officer named by law to disburse the money appropriated for this building, and consequently to receive moneys obtained from sales and for rents.

As to the grading referred to by the architect, I will say that after the old buildings on the Library square were torn down the commission began grading the grounds and clearing the débris from the sites of the old buildings. The grading was begun on the assumption that the Library grounds should be graded in a manner to suit the grade of the Capitol grounds, so that the roads and walks of the latter would connect and run into the former grounds. It was supposed so far as I was concerned that the two grounds would form, when completed, a harmonious whole.

After Mr. Smithmeyer became connected with the work, he protested against this manner of grading and at once proceeded to grade as can be seen at present, that is, to set the building on a mound at its western front. Mr. Olmsted, landscape architect, made a plan for the treatment of the Library grounds (which I furnish herewith), looking to the grading of the same in a manner corresponding to those of the Capitol, and showing how the building might be placed on the reservation without shutting out the whole view of the Capitol building from Pennsylvania avenue, the main approach from Capitol Hill.

Much if not the greater portion of the expense for this grading was incurred after the architect took charge, and under his direction, as may be seen from the following letter from Mr. John T. Morgan, foreman:

"OFFICE OF THE COMMISSION FOR THE CONSTRUCTION "OF THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING,
"No. 145 EAST CAPITOL STREET,
"Washington, D. C., September 12, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: In reference to the grading done by days' labor on the site of the Congressional Library Building, in grading and cutting down the grounds outside of the building line, I have the honor to state that after the work was temporarily suspended, on February 21, 1887, it was again resumed in March, 1887, and continued until the end of the year, under the direction of the architect.

"A great deal of the cutting down of the ground above referred to, the larger part of it, was done after February, as the following statement from the books of the office, made up from my reports of daily labor, will show:

	Cost.
March, 1887	$1,401.00
May, 1887	158.75
June, 1887	854.64
July, 1887	842.44
August, 1887	697.64
September, 1887	564.25
October, 1887	849.98
November, 1887	153.67
December, 1887	58.50
A total of	5,580.87

"This does not include the cost of filling up and making the terraces and other similar work, and was only for the cutting down of the grounds to grade.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN T. MORGAN, Foreman.

"Mr. EDWARD CLARK,
"Architect of the Capitol and Commissioner of
"Congressional Library Building."

I had no agency in procuring for the use of the contractor the cement-mixing plant. This was loaned to the contractor under certain conditions, as may be seen from the following extract of the minutes of the commission:

[Extract from the minutes of proceedings of the Congressional Library Commission.]

"SATURDAY, November 12, 1887.

* * * * * * *

"It was decided to loan Mr. E. E. Barnes certain material and tools obtained from the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department building, to be used by Mr. Barnes in the execution of his contract for laying of concrete foundation, with the understanding that an account should be kept of the wear and tear of such tools, and that while Mr. Barnes should be credited with any sum he might expend in the repair of such tools, he should also pay for any damage to the same."

* * * * * * *

I am, very respectfully,

EDWARD CLARK,
Architect United States Capitol,
Commissioner for the construction of the Congressional Library Building.

Hon. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN,
Chairman of the Committee to Investigate the Construction of the new Library Building, House of Representatives.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, it is very desirable that we should dispose of this bill as soon as possible, and I now ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to one hour to-morrow, the time to be equally divided.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to H. R. Blackiston.

The message further announced that the Senate requested the House to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Matthew W. Berryman; and the bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown part of an alley in square 120 in the city of Washington, on certain conditions.

SENATE BILLS RETURNED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a request from the Senate for the return to the Senate of the bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to Samuel Brown a part of an alley in square 120 in the city of Washington, on certain conditions; and also for the return of the bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Matthew W. Berryman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection these requests will be complied with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back favorably the following resolution:

Resolved, That the testimony taken by the Select Committee to Investigate the Construction of the New Library Building be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The estimated cost is $435.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (S. 124) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser;

A bill (S. 186) to amend section 1225, Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, etc.;

A bill (S. 576) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co.;

A bill (S. 1988) granting a pension to Henry Blakiston;

A bill (S. 2713) granting a pension to Pierre Bottineau;

A bill (S. 2938) granting a pension to James McDonald;

A bill (S. 2951) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Morrison Elliott;

A bill (S. 3130) granting a pension to Patrick Welsh;

A bill (S. 3236) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn, late major Sixteenth Connecticut Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 5092) for the relief of Charles L. Bradwell;

A bill (H. R. 11336) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882;

A bill (H. R. 8751) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lake Superior, Lakes Huron, Erie, and Michigan, and range-lights in Lake St. Clair and Detroit River;

A bill (H. R. 10931) to donate and transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, subject to reversion to the United States in the event of their non-usage for quarantine purposes, and requiring the proper department of the United States Government to execute the necessary transfer to the State of Louisiana on the condition aforesaid; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 223) declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888.

ST. CLAIR FLATS CANAL.

Mr. CATCHINGS, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, by unanimous consent, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 11446) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi that this bill be now considered?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884, be, and the same is hereby, amended, so that the same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to prescribe such rules and regulations in respect to the use and administration of the Des Moines Rapids Canal, the St. Mary's Falls Canal, the Louisville and Portland Canal, and the St. Clair Flats Ship-Canal as in his judgment the public necessity may require, which rules and regulations shall be posted in some conspicuous place for the information of the public; any person knowingly and willfully violating such rules and regulations shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, to be enforced in any district court in the United States within whose territorial jurisdiction such offense may have been committed."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report read. We want to understand the object of this legislation.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I can explain it in a moment. The effect of the bill is simply to extend to the St. Clair Flats Canal the provisions of the act of 1884, which now apply to the Louisville and Portland Canal, the Des Moines Rapids Canal, and the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. By this legislation the Secretary of War will be enabled to prescribe proper rules and regulations governing the passage through that canal of ships navigating the lakes. He now makes such regulations with reference to the other canals I have named.

Mr. McMILLIN. What evil is sought to be remedied by this legislation?

Mr. CATCHINGS. The Secretary of War has now no power to make these regulations with reference to the St. Clair Flats Canal; and the necessity of such regulations has been shown by the fact that there has recently been in that canal an absolute blockade.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know whether I correctly understood the reading of the bill; but if I did, it provides for the indictment of persons who may violate these regulations of the Department.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The bill does not embrace any new legislation beyond extending to the St. Clair Flats Canal the act of 1884, which now applies to the other three canals I have named.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can we authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations the violation of which will be punishable in this way?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I hope we shall not go into a discussion of any question of that kind.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that in the act of 1884 the St. Clair Flats Canal was inadvertently omitted. This bill simply amends that act so that the Secretary of War may prescribe rules and regulations with reference to this canal, as he now does with regard to the others. In this way the passage of the craft up and down will be regulated by rules of the Department, and the liability to a blockade will be averted. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. KILGORE. What objection is there to the reading of the report?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I have none; but I have already stated its substance.

Mr. KILGORE. I believe it is a good idea to have the report read.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If there is time before the hour of adjournment, let it be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the session be extended five minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. McMILLIN. Or until this bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the session five minutes?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not object, with the understanding that the session is extended only for the completion of action on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the session for five minutes, subject to the condition stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN]? The Chair hears none.

The report was read, as follows:

The proposed bill seeks to amend section 7 of the act named by including in the rules and regulations provided therein for the proper care and management of Des Moines Rapids Canal, St. Mary's Falls Canal, and Louisville and Portland Canal, the St. Clair Flats Ship Canal. The late blockade of lake craft in the St. Clair Canal, on account of lack of proper regulations for the passage of vessels through the same, makes it imperative that Congress shall empower the Secretary of War to place said canal under the same rules and regulations as obtain over the other canals named in said section, not only to thus secure speedy and safe passage of our lake craft, but to save our marine from great pecuniary loss.

Your committee recommend the adoption of the measure, and urge its speedy consideration and passage by the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. From what committee does this bill come?

Mr. CATCHINGS. From the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is approved by the Chief of Engineers, the Secretary of War, and the President.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CATCHINGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD several communications relating to the subject of the bill just passed, including the orders of the President of the United States to General Poe in regard to the removal of the recent obstructions in the St. Clair Flats Canal.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

The following are the documents:

DETROIT, MICH., September 6, 1888.

To the PRESIDENT:

The commerce of the lakes and the entire Northern and Northwestern frontier is in hourly danger of a permanent blockade at the St. Clair Flats, Canada.

The power intrusted to General Poe is entirely inadequate to enforce the needed regulations for the safety of commerce and the protection of the Government works.

Please issue the necessary order to General Poe to use all means necessary for protection of the canal and safety of the commerce passing through the same.

James A. Millen; Jesse H. Farwell; W. B. Morley; A. A. Parker; J. W. Westcott; Eber Ward; John Pudgeon; John Pudgeon, jr.; H. P. Lilibridge, vice-president Cleveland Vessel Owners' Association; R. P. Fitzgerald, president Milwaukee Vessel Owners' Association; Thos. Adams; E. M. Peck, president N. W. T. Co.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, September 6, 1888.

Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
Chief of Engineers:

The accompanying telegram requires immediate attention, and I hope the most prompt measures will be taken to remove the obstructions to commerce referred to. If it is possible to give any additional powers to General Poe, and it is necessary, they should be given at once.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

WAR DEPARTMENT, September 7, 1888.

To Colonel LAMONT:

Colonel Poe was directed by telegraph to take prompt measures to remove obstructions. Was authorized to hire or purchase in open market all necessary plant and do work by day's labor.

CLINTON B. SEARS,
Captain Engineers, in Charge of Office.

HEADQUARTERS OF LAKE CARRIERS' ASSOCIATION,
Buffalo, September 15, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The commerce of the lakes has been recently seriously obstructed at the St. Clair Flats Ship Canal, causing embarrassment, disarrangement of business, and serious financial loss, all of which is liable to be repeated at any moment in consequence of the unfit condition of the canal to satisfy the demands upon it and accommodate the traffic. The President has directed the engineer-in-charge to make temporary repairs to meet the present emergency, but this is not sufficient.

We find that under the laws the control of the canal is not in the hands of a proper Government official, and the danger of navigating the canal is greatly enhanced by the lack of proper regulations, with power to enforce them, for controlling and directing the movements of vessels. The act approved July 5, 1884, makes it the duty of the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations for the Des Moines Rapids Canal, the St. Mary's Falls Canal, and the Louisville and Portland Canal, and why the St. Clair Flats Ship Canal was omitted no one seems to be able to explain. As it is absolutely necessary that this omission should be remedied, and immediately, we have prepared an amendment to the act above referred to, with the object of bringing the St. Clair Flats Ship Canal under the operations of the act, and inclose it herewith, with the request that you will at once introduce it in the House and urge its immediate passage.

We understand that it is very late in the session and that new legislation will not at this time be looked upon with much favor, but this is a very simple matter, and the passage of the amendment is an absolute necessity. The control of the St. Clair Flats Canal should be in the hands of General Poe, the engineer in charge of the public works in that vicinity, who could prescribe rules for the navigation of the canal which would avert a repetition of the late disastrous obstructions there, caused by the grounding of overloaded vessels.

I shall be glad to learn from you that you have introduced the bill and that there is a prospect of its being pushed through.

Yours, very truly,

S. D. CALDWELL, President.

Hon. JOHN M. FARQUHAR,
Washington, D. C.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Architect of the Capitol touching the subject under discussion to-day.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [The document will be found in a previous part of the RECORD.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ADAMS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of J. W. Chickering.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FORD, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of important business.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, in accordance with its standing order, adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BLAND (by request): A bill (H. R. 11456) to pay Philip Henkel for property unlawfully confiscated and destroyed—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 11457) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Gentry—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 11458) for the relief of S. P. Martin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 11459) granting a pension to Erasmus W. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FORD: Petition of W. H. Hoffman and others, citizens of Michigan, for legislation to prohibit the shipment of liquors to heathen nations—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. LODGE: Petitions of Abby Morton Dias and 119 others, citizens of the United States; of T. W. Caldwell and 35 others, citizens of Bourbon County, Kansas; of Clara Patterson and 33 others, citizens of Crawford County, Kansas, and of Mary Chace Tolman and 16 others, citizens of Barnstable County, Massachusetts, to remunerate Anna Ella Carroll for services during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PUGSLEY: Petition of J. P. Mathews, for the passage of a special pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of Robert F. Bell, of Davidson County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Petition of Ann M. C. McNicholas, of Dickson County, Tennessee, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, September 19, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PASCO presented the petition of Mrs. Mary E. Boyd, of Palatka, Fla., widow of Robert T. Boyd, praying for the payment of a claim against the United States in behalf of the successors in interest of the late firm of Boyd & Monroe, and the heirs of the partners of that firm, on account of the seizure of the schooner Richard Law; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAULKNER presented the petition of Jonathan W. Thatcher, of Berkeley County, West Virginia, praying Congress to refer his claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 968) granting a pension to H. S. Sayre, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 71) providing for the ascertainment and report by the Secretary of State of the claim of the legal representatives of Walter H. Stevens, deceased, to report the same adversely, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. We have not drawn up a written report, but I can state the grounds upon which the committee proceeded in two minutes.

In the first place, the claim, if it ever had any existence, arose before the time of the Mexican Claims Commission, and it should have been presented to that commission, it being a claim against the Republic of Mexico. There is no ground to impute to the authorities of the United States any failure of their duty in respect of the presentation of the claim or the non-presentation of it to that commission.

In the second place, the committee are satisfied that the claim never had any rightful foundation in the beginning, it being, as we believe, a fraudulent transfer by a French quartermaster, just as the French were being expelled from Vera Cruz in Mexico, to the original claimant, of a quantity of coal that was French public property, and was immediately seized by the Republic of Mexico, as it ought to have been, as the property of the expelled enemy.

We, therefore, think there is no merit in the proposition, and that it ought to be indefinitely postponed.

The report was agreed to, and the joint resolution indefinitely postponed.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 341) for the relief of John Farley; and

A bill (S. 729) for the relief of J. A. Henry and others.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Select Committee on Indian Traders, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3522) regulating the purchase of timber from Indians, reported it with an amendment.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report an order, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the President of the Senate be directed to withhold the transmission to the House of Representatives of the act (House bill 11336) entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States" until the further direction of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I object to the present consideration of that order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie over under the rules.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the resolution again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the order.

Mr. VEST. I should like to make an inquiry. What would be the effect of non-action on the part of the Senate as to that resolution? Will the Chinese restriction bill remain here until the resolution is taken up and acted upon, or will the officers of the Senate in the discharge of their routine duties be compelled or required to take the bill to the other House?

We have had a little experience on that subject lately, not directly in the line of action between the two Houses, but with the commissioners of the District of Columbia. Whilst a resolution was pending here forbidding them to put up certain overhead electric wires, they proceeded to put them up without any regard to our resolution or without any regard to our non-action, if I may so express it.

I should like to know what the officers of this body will do if the resolution lies here for one day or five days? In other words, does the offering of the resolution suspend the action of the officers of the Senate in transmitting the action of the Senate upon the bill to the other House?

Mr. TELLER. If I may say a word on this remarkable resolution, it seems to me that if the Senate should pass it it would be a very singular thing to request the President of the Senate to withhold a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator misapprehends the tenor of the resolution. It will be again read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I tried to listen to it, but I could not tell just what it meant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will resume their seats and refrain from audible conversation. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the resolution lies over under the rules.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I object to that. I did not understand on the first reading exactly what the import was; but as it is to delay the bill in reaching the President, I object.

KENTUCKY RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report with amendments the bill (S. 3471) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville Southern Railroad Company. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who introduced the bill, was called home last night and compelled to leave the city. He requested me to ask the Senate to consider the bill and pass it, as the company who are building their road had built it up to the vicinity of the Kentucky River and are anxious for the passage of the bill through both Houses, so as not to be delayed in the work. It is just an ordinary bridge bill, and I ask the consideration of it now by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported from the Committee on Commerce will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 9, before the word "built," to insert "commenced or;" so as to read:

And until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of section 3:

And any changes required by the Secretary of War, or the entire removal of said bridge or bridges after completion, if required, shall be at the expense of the company owning said bridges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add, at the end of section 4:

And if said bridge or bridges shall be built for the passage over the same of vehicles and the transit of animals, and for foot passengers, the rates of toll therefor shall be approved by the Secretary of War before any toll can be collected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM THOMPSON.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 166) for the relief of William Thompson was indefinitely postponed. On the 12th day of April the bill was reported back adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs and indefinitely postponed. I have some additional papers and testimony that I wish to submit to the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the vote postponing the bill may be reconsidered, and that it may be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The period within which that motion could properly be made having elapsed, the Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered, and the bill referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with the papers that he submits to the Senate. It is so ordered, if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11446) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the following bills:

A bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120, in the city of Washington, on certain conditions; and

A bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Matthew W. Berryman.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3569) granting a pension to Sarah G. Hall; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3570) granting a persion to Sarah D. Lewis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3571) for the relief of James Harvey Dennis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3572) to pay the stenographers for reporting the several trials of the case of Hallet Kilbourn vs. John G. Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

YELLOW-FEVER SUFFERERS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer a joint resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read the first time at length for information.

The joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever was read at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States in the relief of the suffering caused by yellow fever now prevailing in the State of Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be read the second time and considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I may be permitted by unanimous consent to make a single statement, I should be glad to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is obvious from the public reports, about which there can be no doubt, that this most dangerous and fatal plague is rapidly extending, not only in the stricken State of Florida, but into adjacent States, and that a vast amount of suffering is being caused thereby, which under present appropriations for the restraint and quarantine of the disease can not be aided by any money of the United States.

I think, therefore, while the citizens of the United States from their private means are contributing as liberally as they can everywhere in aid of these stricken people, that the whole people of the United States, out of its Treasury, for humanity and for the public good in still further trying to repress the spread of it, ought to make a contribution out of the Treasury of the United States to aid not only the sick but those who are driven from their homes, and to help up those communities in this dreadful distress.

It is not within the competence of the Legislature of the State of Florida to meet and provide for it now under such conditions, and I know of no better use to which a proper amount of public money can be put than to make this contribution, to be expended under the direction of the President immediately, to help in every way we can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read the second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWN. I beg leave to ask the Senator from Vermont why he proposes to confine the appropriation to the State of Florida while the disease is spreading into other States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not. I only speak of it as a disease existing there; but it is in aid of all sufferers, wherever they may be.

Mr. BROWN. I misunderstood it, then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only speak of the present locality of the disease, as in Florida, but the relief will apply to every sufferer, whether in Georgia, or North Carolina, or in the city of Washington, or wherever it is thought proper to expend the money.

Mr. BROWN. I probably did not understand the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to making it perfectly safe. Perhaps it is better to say "or elsewhere in the United States" after "Florida," so as to make it perfectly sure.

Mr. BROWN. That will make it all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution the words "or elsewhere in the United States;" so as to read:

In the relief of the suffering caused by the yellow fever now prevailing in the State of Florida or elsewhere in the United States.

Mr. BROWN. That makes it all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I am very much gratified that this joint resolution has been presented, and I hope that it will pass without any dissent in this body.

I do not propose to enter into any discussion of it further than to say that here is a disease of almost unprecedented malignity, entirely new in that portion of the State of Florida where it now is, and that the indications are that it is rapidly spreading or will spread throughout the country.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I concur entirely with what has been said by my colleague. I wish to express my gratification that the joint resolution has been brought in. I trust it will pass by the unanimous vote of the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INVESTIGATIONS BY FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance have authority to employ a stenographer and such other clerical assistance as may be necessary in connection with matters referred to that committee for investigation, such expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] on the 17th instant, coming over from yesterday, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution by Mr. SHERMAN directing the Committee on Finance to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. MORGAN. On an agreement with the Senator from Ohio, that resolution will go over until to-morrow. I have some private engagements this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be presented by the Chair to-morrow as current business, if there be no objection. It is so ordered.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the consent of the Senate to call up the resolution to refer the President's message for the purpose of making some remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution is before the Senate, and the Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, being now satisfied by speeches made in the Senate within the last day or two by leading Republican members that there is very great uncertainty as to when the Mills bill will be reported back to this body, I have determined to change my original purpose to wait for the debate upon that bill, and have concluded to submit at this time some general remarks upon the question of tariff taxation, not attempting, of course, in the absence of the bill to discuss details, and for this urpose I ask the indulgence of the Senate.

The national revenues are excessive. Nobody denies that the collection of millions of dollars annually into the Treasury of the United States more than is needed, more than can be used by the Government, and every dollar of which is needed in the ordinary channels of business in the country, is little if any short of a crime. So much was the President impressed by the necessity of some relief from this evil that he devoted his last annual message to a discussion of it and urged upon Congress the necessity for prompt action. Commenting upon the present system and estimating the probable surplus at the beginning of the present fiscal year at $140,000,000, he said:

The public Treasury, which should only exist as a conduit, conveying the people's tribute to its legitimate objects of expenditure, has become a hoarding place for money needlessly withdrawn from trade and the people's use, thus crippling our national energies, suspending our country's development, preventing investment in productive enterprise, threatening financial disturbance, and inviting schemes of public plunder.

The House of Representatives almost two months since passed a bill intended to remedy this evil, but, as is now evident, that bill will not become a law; in fact it requires no power of prophecy to say that nothing will be done at this session of Congress to remedy this wrong. Both political parties desire the surplus reduced, but they differ widely as to the reasons for it and consequently as to the method of reduction, and so strong is the feeling in each party against the methods proposed and the purposes intended by the other that no compromise is probable and no reduction is likely to be accomplished.

In the opinion of the Republican party the surplus—the mere accumulation of money in the Treasury—is the only evil in this situation, and any means which will prevent this accumulation or dissipate it after it is accomplished seems in the opinion of that party to meet all the requirements of the situation. On the other hand, the Democratic party not only consider the surplus an evil of itself, but they consider it also the accompaniment, the shadow merely, of a graver one, excessive taxation.

Our national revenues are derived mainly from two sources—internal taxes and a part of the tariff taxes. The internal taxes are simple and direct; the tariff, complex and not readily understood. Every cent collected under the one goes into the Treasury, while much the larger part of that which is collected under the other does not.

For every dollar of revenue remitted under the one there will be exactly the same amount of tax reduction and no more, while for every dollar of revenue remitted under the other there will be a largely greater reduction of taxation.

The Republican party are agreed in desiring the reduction of the surplus with the least possible reduction of taxes, one part of them for this reason favoring a reduction by the removal of internal taxes, while another part absolutely advocate a reduction of revenue by increasing taxation.

The Democratic party, on the other hand, believing that there is no constitutional power in Congress to lay taxes except to raise revenue, would decrease the surplus by the largest possible reduction of taxation necessary to bring about the result.

Great and threatening as are the evils of this mere accumulation of money in the Treasury, the taxes from part of which it grows are a much graver one; while that class of taxes which, bearing heavily upon all, does not contribute one cent to the revenue or to the surplus is the most indefensible and inexcusable of the entire lot.

The issue is distinct; one party desires to be rid of the surplus only, and is willing to do this even by increasing the burden of taxation, while the other insists that the surplus shall be removed by removing the unnecessary taxation upon which it rests.

It will be well for us to remember in this discussion that when we have failed to agree here we must appeal to the great body of American people to determine this question, and that they must at last decide between us. The plain, practical, common sense of the masses must at last determine this great problem, and we had best consider the lights in which it will appear to them. The principles upon which the whole question rests are easily understood.

Our people are slow to make important changes in matters of public policy. As our fathers expressed it in the Declaration of Independence—

All experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer while evils are sufferable than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed.

This conservatism is perhaps more strongly marked in our race than in any other on the face of the earth, and it has been held by many wise men to be the great hope and security for the future. Always willing to endure the ills they have rather than fly to others they know not of, so long as there can be any doubt of the propriety of a change, our people are "slow to wrath" and there need be even now no fear of any hasty, passionate, or inconsiderate action; but if it is thought that the people will never act, that because they appear to hesitate they will always submit to wrong, let me say that they only intend to be sure that they are right and then they will go ahead. Remember that for years complaints came up from all quarters that the railroad managers were guilty of great injustice to the masses of the people in the management of their roads; that they were building up one individual or town at the expense of another; that they were making and unmaking fortunes by their favoritism or prejudice; and were charging unreasonable rates for services, etc., yet the people, so unwilling were they to act hastily, hesitated long. The matter was discussed in newspapers, upon the hustings, and in Congress, but at last, in God's own good time, action came and all the money, influence, employés, and power of the railroads could not prevent the enactment of the interstate-commerce law. That law has come to stay; it will be improved as time and experience shows its defects, but it will live, and henceforth the railroads are subject to the law.

The present problem of reform of taxation by the National Government is a greater question than that, more far-reaching in its effects and more important in its consequences. It has been widely considered and the people are slowly but surely working out a solution of this also. Attempt after attempt has been made, but not until this session has a bill passed the House of Representatives. This is an important step and clearly indicates that the people are coming to a conclusion, for there is no surer representative of public opinion than this great body coming directly from, in full sympathy with, and frequently elected by the people.

To clearly appreciate the opposite purposes of the two parties in the present contest, and to fully and plainly understand the consequences and effects of the plan proposed by each, it may be well to attempt to state in plain and simple language the principles involved, and to consider them in so practical a way that they will be clearly comprehended and fully understood by those who are most interested and who must finally decide this controversy—the "plain common people."

THE RIGHT AND POWER OF TAXATION.

"The power to tax is the power to destroy." It is an attribute of sovereignty, and as such should always be exercised with the greatest care and circumspection, for a wrong committed in the exercise of this high function is practically without a remedy. Honest and patriotic men, in view of this solemn responsibility, will not act in any doubtful case in the exercise of this power against the interest of the general public except under circumstances of the greatest emergency.

No good citizen will hesitate for one moment to contribute his fair share toward the support of the Government. We are a law-abiding and a law-respecting people, and no American wishes to be freed from his proper share of the public burdens. In truth, in times of peril the people have shown a willingness to come to the relief of the Government without stopping to consider the question of obligation, as has been shown in every such instance in the nation's life; but while they are thus willing to do all "that may become a man," they are not willing to submit to injustice under any form nor on any pretense. The people are willing to pay any just and necessary tax—certainly no unnecessary tax ought to be now collected, and no unjust tax ought ever to be, under any circumstances.

Any tax, even for the best and most commendable purposes, if improperly or unfairly levied and collected, is wrong, but levied and collected for an improper or unauthorized purpose it is an injury to the public, an injury to the state, of the very greatest character, amounting to a crime. The proper purpose of taxation is to raise money for public uses, and excludes any idea of private benefit or gain. A tax levied for any other purpose is despotic and tyrannical. In this free country where we are glad to claim that all men are "born equal," and where all admit that the laws ought to bear equally upon all men, the taxes should be levied and collected from the property of the country in equal and uniform proportions.

As the real value of property depends upon its productive capacity I confess frankly that I would prefer, if possible, to see the revenues of our country collected from the incomes derived from the wealth, the accumulated property of the people, but as it has seemed difficult to accomplish this, the plan adopted by most States seems reasonably fair in its practical operation. These as a rule lay and collect taxes upon the property of their citizens ad valorem. By this means a citizen with $10,000 worth of property pays ten times as much tax as one with $1,000 worth. This is fair, gives satisfaction, and commends itself to all just men and all lovers of liberty and equality. If this system is objectionable at all, it is in that it bears equally upon all in proportion to property without regard to the circumstances or condition of the owner.

THE HOME.

The very foundation of our civilization is the family, the home; "it is the grandest of all institutions," and is "the chief school of human virtue." In the language of President Cleveland—

The strength, the perpetuity, and the destiny of the nation rest upon our homes, established by the law of God, guarded by parental care, regulated by parental authority, and sanctified by parental love.

It is, then, the wisest statesmanship to build up and guard the homes of our people by wise laws and jealous care. Whatever is for the good of this great institution should be carefully nurtured, and anything in our laws inimical to its welfare and development ought to be abolished. Every dollar of the proceeds of daily labor which goes to the simple support of the home ought to be freed from the burdens of taxation. We exempt from taxation institutions of learning and churches on account of the close connection of these with our advancement and well-being, and the home for similar reasons ought to be also exempt, at least to the extent of the necessaries of life, for "a home is no home unless it contains food and fire for the mind as well as for the body."

It is with this idea, that the mere subsistence of the family ought not to be taxed, that many of our States exempt from taxation a few hundred dollars and collect their revenue from that which is owned beyond and in excess of that amount. This is wise, humane, and statesmanlike, especially in this country where the laws should be so framed as to bear least upon the members of society who are struggling with adverse circumstances, and should rest mainly upon those who are in affluence. This is precisely the principle that underlies our free-school system. In that the property of every one is made to contribute to the education of all, the child of him who pays the most receiving no more benefit therefrom than the child of him who pays none.

Thus the policy of the States is seen to be to relieve from the exactions of taxation the absolute necessaries for the home, the family, and after this that all property, all accumulated capital shall be taxed in uniform proportions for the support of the Government and for the education of the young.

In our national finances this beneficent purpose is entirely wanting, and in its room we find what appears to be a determination that taxes for national purposes shall not be laid upon the wealth of the country at all, but upon the poverty and necessities of the people instead, the great burden of the support of the National Government being laid upon the homes, and not upon the property of the people. It would seem that those who conceived and organized the system had framed it upon the idea that—

To him that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

There is no assessment of property for Federal taxation, there is no account taken by the Federal Government of the fact that one man owns a million of dollars' worth of property, while his neighbor lives by his daily labor, when contributions from each are required for the support of the Government. No beneficent exemptions in favor of the family and the home find their place in the national statute-books, but on the contrary, as if the home and the family were institutions to be taxed out of existence, the burdens of taxation are nicely arranged and adroitly adjusted to bear directly upon them, and with a weight increasing as the scale of poverty increases; it is a tax upon consumption, a tax upon liberty, a tax upon poverty, but not a tax upon property.

The rule is that the lower-priced and cheaper imports must pay a higher rate of taxation than the more costly goods of the same kind—$100 worth of diamonds is taxed $10, while $10 worth of castor-oil is taxed $18. The poor man who consumes of necessity articles of clothing which are protected pays in proportion to his consumption—each article pays its share; clothing, hats, and shoes he must have, and when he buys them he pays the tax; if his income is $500 a year and all of it is spent for these things, he pays just as much toward the support of the Government as he whose income is $100,000 a year if his family consumes only as much as the other. This is so plain that there can be no misunderstanding it, and it does not require a professor of political economy to know that this is an outrage, that there is no equality in it; and the great tribunal before whom this question is soon to be appealed for trial will readily see and promptly condemn this wrong.

PURPOSES OF FEDERAL TAXATION.

Having considered to some extent the unjust methods of laying and collecting our national taxes, I propose now to consider for a few minutes the graver evil of the purposes for which they are collected. In presenting my views upon this question I shall attempt to illustrate what I mean, by instances here and there, so that "he who runs may read" my meaning.

Whenever a tariff tax is laid upon any article, from that moment any man, citizen or foreigner, bringing such an article into this country must pay this tax at the custom-house of the port in which the article is landed. From this one of two results is inevitable, either the article will not be brought in, or if it is imported it must cost the consumer just that much more than he otherwise would have to pay for it.

If there is no importation of the article the Government will derive no revenue from the tax, because there is none to collect; but if the article is imported the Government will derive revenue in exact proportion to the importations. If, now, an American manufacturer, seeing that by reason of this increased price the manufacture of the article in this country will be profitable, enters into the business, he will sell his product at the market price, i. e., the foreign price with the tariff added. The increase in this price is caused by the tax, but when the domestic product is sold the manufacturer collects the increase, the tax, and not the Government. If the manufacturer sells ten times as much of the article as is imported, the result is clear that he in his increased prices collects ten times as much tax as the Government does.

In such a case we have the price to consumers increased upon domestic and foreign goods; the consumer pays the tax in every purchase, but the Government only collects upon the imported articles, while the manufacturers collect upon the domestic product. It is clear in the illustration above that the tax is making the manufacturer rich; but there is no difficulty in also seeing clearly that the consumers are taxed into poverty at just the same rate, and the community as a whole of which they form a part are neither poorer nor richer thereby.

When the Government needs revenue for public purposes it is doubtless wise to lay and collect such taxes, due care being had that the tax is not so high as to prevent importations and thereby defeat the purpose of raising revenue. This being done there can be no harm to any one in any citizen taking advantage of this state of things to begin manufacturing; there would in such a case be an increase of price resulting from this tax which would be protection to him, incidental to a revenue tax.

But when the Government, not needing the revenue, deliberately lays a tariff tax upon an article so high as to prevent importation, so as to defeat the collection of any revenue, and to serve only to increase the cost to the customer, and to raise the prices received by the manufacturer, then, while the pretense is that the object is to raise revenue for the Government, its real purpose is manifestly to lay a tax on all consumers to be collected by the manufacturers.

This is illustrated in the case of cotton bagging. As I had occasion to state to the Senate when I presented a resolution directing the Committee on Finance to investigate the combination of cotton-bagging manufacturers, there are used in the United States 50,000,000 yards of this article yearly. There is a tariff tax of 3 cents per yard upon it, and as a result not a yard is imported. That the manufacturers get the full benefit of this 3 cents per yard is shown by the statement of one of them that a slight advance in price produced importations, showing that at a figure slightly above our usual market price, foreign manufacturers could ship their products to us, realizing, of course, for themselves 3 cents per yard less than our market price.

Thus it will be seen clearly that these American manufacturers, under the operation of this law, collect out of the cotton-growers the sum of $1,500,000 per year, while the Government does not get a nickel and the surplus is not increased one cent. Can the plain, common people be misled into believing that this is just and constitutional taxation? The Constitution authorizes the Government to lay and collect taxes, not lay taxes that a class of favored private citizens may collect. Here, then, is a tax which clearly ought to be abolished, yet the surplus would not be affected thereby to the extent of a single dollar.

If any doubt existed in the mind of any man as to whether this tax was too high the recent dishonest swindling combination of manufacturers to raise the price has removed it, and I take it that no man will be so lost to every sense of justice as to be willing to allow this infamous proceeding to be longer continued or repeated hereafter. For such taxation in our form of Government there can certainly be no excuse or palliation.

In the language of the President—

When we consider that the theory of our institutions guaranties to every citizen the full enjoyment of all the fruits of his industry and enterprise with only such deductions as may be his share toward a careful and economical maintenance of the Government which protects him, it is plain that the exaction of more than this is an indefensible extortion and a culpable betrayal of American fairness and justice.

Yet the fact remains that while our tariff taxes are so laid as to bring into the national Treasury about $200,000,000 per annum they take from the people for the benefit of the protected industries many times this vast sum. This legislating by indirect and unfair means against the masses and in favor of the industries is so arranged as to come like a "thief in the night," and it is next to impossible to tell accurately how much is abstracted, but enough is known to know that it aggregates perhaps a thousand millions of dollars each year. It has been so estimated again and again by skilled and competent men after the most careful examination. This is protection, pure and simple, and this is what the Republican party solemnly declare shall not be abandoned.

INFANT INDUSTRIES.

The pretenses under which this system of naked robbery is defended are various, inconsistent, and unphilosophical.

When it was just beginning, the purpose was alleged to be to protect "infant industries." The understanding was that this was to continue but a limited time, and the quantum of protection was quite moderate indeed, being from 5 to 15 per cent. prior to the beginning of the present century; but as time has passed and the infants have grown and waxed fat, instead of being willing to stand alone, they have grown strong enough to defy for years all efforts to reduce their share of "pap," until now, in this year of our Lord 1888, at the end of a century of national life the convention of a great party has boldly declared that—

We favor the entire repeal of internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system.

And upon this declaration in favor of free whisky rather than cheaper clothing and necessaries, the venerable and able leader of protectionists exclaimed in his place in the House of Representatives:

Now Lord lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen the salvation of the Republican party.

This exclamation on his part is not to be wondered at, for he had long since turned his back on this false pretense and had said twenty years ago that he would—protect every feeble or infant branch of industry and quicken those that are robust.

The Republican party now boldly declares that "the protective system must be maintained." All pretenses that it is for a temporary purpose or for infant industries is at last laid aside, and the American people are put upon notice that their slavery is to be, not temporary as at first promised, but eternal.

I thank the Republican party for throwing off the disguise and avowing their real purpose. The Democratic party on the other hand declares that it—

Indorses the efforts of our Democratic representatives in Congress to secure a reduction of excessive taxation.

And thus the issue is joined.

The Democratic House of Representatives have reported and passed and sent to us for our sanction a bill providing for a moderate reduction of taxation, a reduction of the present average tax of 47 per cent. to about 42 per cent. To this the Republican party will not agree, but will either adhere to the declarations of the Chicago convention and boldly advocate high-priced necessaries and low-priced whisky, or else, driven by the public sentiment of an outraged people, they will pretend to abandon this doctrine and offer some reduction of tariff taxation which will relieve the people as little as possible; while "keeping the word of promise to the ear will break it to the hope;" which will remove those taxes only which are collected by the Government, and will allow those more oppressive and unjust which are collected by the manufacturers to remain.

THE INTEREST OF LABOR.

This pretense of protecting infant industries having been practically outgrown, and a century of protection having demonstrated that the infancy of these protected industries is to be eternal, the protectionists found it necessary to present the pretense that labor has in some way an interest in this, and they at once declare themselves "devoted to the protection of American labor and industries." That they are devoted to the protection of the industries—to the manufacturers—needs no proof; their conduct demonstrates that. But their conduct just as conclusively proves that they are not devoted to the interests of American labor. The truth is "they are blindly wedded to the corporate powers of the country and have no proper regard for the interests of labor."
